> We cannot accept, as well taken, the position that it was so ruled, because the Court, in formulating a statement of the principle upon which the ruling was based, expressly refused to plant the decision on this narrow ground but placed it upon the broad principle that the agreements in that case "transcended what was necessary to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law con-

frered upon it. They passed to the purpose and accomplished a restraint of trade condemned by the Sherman law." "The agreements * * * combined the manufacturers and jobbers * * * in a combination * * * condemned by this Court as offending the Sherman law. The added element of the patent * * * cannot confer immunity from a like condemnation * * * and this we say without entering into the consideration of the distinction of rights for which the Government contends between a patented article and a patented tool used in the manufacture of an unpatented article. Rights conferred by patents are indeed very definite and extensive but they do not give, any more than other rights, an universal license against positive prohibitions. The Sherman law is a limitation of rights * * * which may be pushed to evil consequences. * * * "

We would feel constrained, on the authority of this case alone, to find that the agreements and acts of the defendants in the present case went far beyond what was necessary to protect the use of the patents or the monopoly which went with them, and that the end and result, which would be expected to be and was accomplished, was the restraint of trade condemned by law. Some of the considerations which move to this conclusion are stated later.

This is a lengthy prelude to the consideration of the special facts of this case. We feel relieved from the necessity of any extended reference to them, because they are set forth in the complaining petition, with a precision and accuracy which has prevented denial, except as to the motives which actuated the defendants and the legality of the monopoly. With respect to the motives and conscious purposes by which men are actuated, it has been well said that these "cannot be easily estimated," and we may concede to the defendants no purpose to offend against or to evade the law, and that their intentions were as beneficent and have resulted in as much good to the patronage of the art as is claimed and that this good bears a fair relation to the profits received by them. This is foreign to the inquiry which we have made, because the duty to refrain from what is prohibited by law "cannot be evaded by good motives." Moreover, "the law is its own measure of right and wrong," as well as the judge of whether a transaction is of the character which it condemns. If, in the judgment of the law, a contract or co-operating agreement is such as to work an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade and through such restraint to monopolize trade or any part of it, the judgment is one of condemnation, no matter how innocent or otherwise praiseworthy the motives of those who had part in it.

We do not, therefore, feel called upon to make any specific findings on this subject beyond what is stated to be found. The real motives of those. whose minds conceived and whose wills carried through this combination, were doubtless like those behind almost all other human acts, probably of a mixed character. We would not be justified, and would certainly have no wish, to deny the presence of the very laudable motives, which defendants avow in their answer, some of which were to gratify their desire to allay bickerings and recriminations among themselves, to advance and improve the art, to protect the morals of the public and, as they frankly admit, to make money for themselves. Certain it is, that the end and purpose of the plan, was to dominate and control the trade, in all the accessories of the art and, in order to assure this, to control the entire motion picture business. We are driven to this conclusion, not only because that is the plain meaning of what they did, but also because they themselves categorically declare the latter to be the imperative need of the business and one which they alone could supply. The need was for a single directing and regulating head. This extended even to a censorship of what was shown. The United States could not, and the States would not, interpose for the purpose of regulation, and the defendants claim the credit of having performed this neglected duty of the State. In doing all which was done, the defendants not merely deny the illegality of either end or means, but also lay claim to commendation. We only mention this to make clear the fact, that, they did monopolize, and the only question left, is whether this monopoly is a lawful monopoly, or was accomplished through an unlawful restraint of trade.

The combination was not formed until 1908. The defendants were at that time engaged in the business as manufacturers or importers. There were scores of jobbers buying and distributing films and necessary supplies to thousands of exhibitors. The business was expanding, literally by leaps and bounds. The total investment ran into millions. There was therefore a trade to be restrained and one well worth monopolizing. The original plan, if it was contemplated, did not disclose, any purpose to exclude the middle men, and, from its first being put in operation, 116 jobbers were licensed by and did business with the defendants. Within a short time, however, the absorption of this part of the trade was decided upon, and the General Film Co. was formed to take over the business of distribution. How effective and thorough were the methods employed, is shown by the fact, that, of the 116, there is left one solitary survivor.

The plan out of which these methods grew was first to combine the defendants, who were manufacturers and importers of films, in an agreement to act as one man might have acted. Lists of exchanges and of theatres, were prepared and no exchange was permitted to have films, and no theatre to exhibit them, unless with the consent of all of the defendants. The names of none appeared upon this list, except such as bought all supplies from the defendants, and any who dealt otherwise were dropped. Every theatre was required to pay a royalty for the use of a projecting machine, even when the machine had been owned by the exhibitor, before the combination was formed. The films passed into the possession of exchanges and exhibitors under an agreement which enabled the defendants to recall them at will. It is too clear for comment, that the mere possession of the power here shown would make its assertion seldom necessary. It was, however, effectively exercised. It is also clear that such a combination is condemned by the Act of 1890, unless immunity is given by the patent laws. The pressure, here, is upon the weak point of the argument on behalf of the defendants. The fault in it, is basic. There is doubtless injustice in applying, even rhetorically, the "dead indian" aphorism to trusts. It may be admitted that, there may be, trusts which are both living and good. When a monopoly has been found, however, to be the result of an unlawful restraint of trade, the argument, that the combination, through which it has been accomplished, is a good trust, or was formed from good motives or that good results from the monopoly, is, for legislative, and not judicial consideration. As already stated, it is the legal intendment of the whole scheme, which determines its character—what is its end and what the means to be employed—to be found from the natural and to be expected results. Here, again, the illuminating phrase employed in the Keystone Watch Co. opinion clarifies the thought. If the end is monopoly, and the means the restraint of trade, the inquiry is directed to the character of the restraint. If that is undue and unreasonable, and was directly intended, and the monopolistic result flows as a direct, and not a merely incidental consequence, the combination, through which it is brought about, is illegal. The same conclusion follows a finding that the end is illegal because reached through the same means. Indeed, the two things come to be, nearly, if not quite, the same, although there is room for a difference.

The defendants had the right to propose to themselves, as an end, the protection of their exclusive right to sell an article, protected by a patent, which was their property. They had the right to employ, as a means to this end, due and reasonable regulations, and to impose any lawful conditions of sale. If restraint of trade and monopoly flowing from it, incidentally resulted as a consequence, as neither the end proposed nor the means employed was unlawful, the combination which effected these objects, could not justly be condemned.

The owner of a patented device, process or product may undoubtedly acquire from another any issued patents for improvements, and we see no reason to deny the right of the owners of the original patent, and of the patented improvements, to pool their ownerships for their joint or common protection. This we understand to have been expressly ruled. U. S. v. United Shoe Co., 222 Fed., 349. Indeed, this case may well be claimed as authority for the proposition (within its facts) that there might be a combination of the owners of different patented machines all entering into a manufacturing trade. However this may be, the distinction sought to be pointed out is, that while the owner of a patent on a plow, covering the handles or beam, might acquire or join with the owners of patents covering the mold-board or share or other parts of the plow, for the protection of the patented rights of all, and thereby incidentally secure an enlarged part of the trade in plows, the judgment would refuse to sanction a combination between the owners of patented plows, patented harrows, patented reapers and binders, and other implements of husbandry, and large dealers in these implements, who were not owners of patents, for the purpose of monopolizing the whole trade in the products of agriculture, if the direct end first proposed was to unduly and unreasonably restrain trade, as a means to the final purpose of monopolizing. The ownership of the patents, in such a case, surely could not be accepted as a defence to the charge of unlawful combination.

Findings of the Court Upon Which the Final Decree Will Be Based.

The legal justification, set up by the defendants, for what they have done, and for everything they have done, is that in so doing, they were lawfully asserting rights acquired by them, through a large number of overlapping patents. The total number reaches 16. Ten of these are admittedly, however, of minor importance, and, indeed, of no importance, in their bearing upon the case. The remaining six may be roughly catalogued as one each pertaining to films, cameras, and what is termed the Latham Loop, and three to projecting machines. The ownership of these patents was divided among some of the defendants. Others had no interest therein, except in so far as they dealt in the different apparatus, features of which, were covered, or claimed to be covered, by the several patents respectively. If the combination had been limited, and the agreements and the scheme in its entirety, had possessed, or could be found to have, any normal real relation to the assertion and protection of these patented rights, and this had been the end proposed, the defendants would be upheld in the maintenance of such rights.

We are constrained, however, to find that there was no such relation, but that the end, directly proposed, was the imposition upon the trade of an undue and unreasonable restraint, in order that, as the immediate and direct effect and result of the combination, the defendants might monopolize the trade in all the accessories of the motion picture art so far as they are articles of commerce.

A further end proposed, and which has largely been achieved, is the domination of the motion picture business itself, and it requires no prophetic vision to foresee that the ultimate result would be, that no play would be written, or dramatically enacted, except by authors and artists favored by the defendants.

It is further found as a fact that the defendants did, in furtherance of the scheme of the combination so to do, directly impose upon the trade undue and unreasonable restraint, and that such restraint was the end proposed to be directly reached, and was not merely incidental to efforts to protect the rights, granted by the patents, but went far beyond the fair and normal possible scope of any efforts to protect such rights, and that as a direct and intended result of such undue and unreasonable restrictions, the defendants have monopolized a large part of the inter-state trade and commerce in films, cameras, projecting machines and other articles of commerce, accessory to the motion picture business.

It is further found, for what the finding may be worth, that although the ends proposed in the combination, and carried out by the defendants, were first this restraint, and through this, the monopolizing of the trade to reap commercial advantages to themselves, a further inducement and motive was (and these were also ends in view) the wish to relieve each other from the odium of infringement, to end contests which hampered the development of the art, to protect the morals of the public by the prevention of the exhibition of suggestive or otherwise improper pictures, to promote the progress of this branch of dramatic art by improving the character of the shows, both in the artistic merits and mechanical perfection of the display, and generally to supply, what, up to that time, the State had neglected to furnish, a regulating and governing authority over the entire motion picture business. The end and purpose of the combination, and in this sense the motive or moving cause, further was, not to protect the patent rights, which the Motion Picture Patents Co. was organized to take over, but the control of the patents was made a feature of the scheme in the belief, or at least in the hope, that this would render the scheme (otherwise illegal) not open to the condemnation of the law.

We conclude with the formal finding, in the language of the Act of Congress, that the contracts, enumerated in the petition, and the combination there described, was a conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, and with foreign nations, and were and are illegal, and that the defendants and each of them (with the exception next noted) have attempted to monopolize and have monopolized, and have combined and conspired, among themselves and with each other, to monopolize, a part of the trade or commerce among the several States, and with foreign nations, consisting of the trade in films, cameras, projecting machines and other accessories of the motion picture business, as charged in the petition of complaint filed.

The exception referred to is this: Melies Manufacturing Company, one of the corporation defendants named in the petition, has denied (as have all of the defendants) that it was in any sense a party to the combination charged. We have gone over all the proofs without finding any, which go to making good of the charge against this particular defendant. It is therefore excluded from the findings made, and the petition as against it is dismissed.

The conclusion is that the petitioner is entitled to the relief prayed so far as indicated by this opinion, and a decree, to effectuate the findings made, may be submitted.

Practical Meaning and Consequences of the Decision.

The final formulation of the decree to be entered upon the findings of the court will be largely the task of the Department of Justice in Washington. Edwin P. Grosvenor, who has won this great victory for the Government, is no longer in the employ of Uncle Sam. Of course he will be consulted on the form as well as the substance of the decree. Other interests, too, will be heard on the making of the decree; the preferred stockholders of the General Film will be considered and their interests will be protected as far as possible. The only remaining competitor of the General Film Company will also be entitled to be heard, i. e., the Greater New York Film Rental Company. All the restrictions imposed on patrons of the General Film Company or any of the other defendants will, of course, be formally abolished. As a matter of fact all these restrictions were abandoned during the pendency of the action. Under the provisions of the Clayton law all parties who feel aggrieved by acts of corporations that have violated the Sherman law may sue and recover treble damages for any injury which they have suffered by reason of the unlawful acts of the monopoly. This aspect of the case is of special interest to the numerous exhibitors who paid a royalty of two dollars weekly on motion picture machines to which they had acquired title before the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. Under the Clayton Law they are entitled to recover treble damages. A copy of the decree in the present case will be taken as prima facie evidence on the question of the illegality of the combination and no other proof of that fact will be required. It is contended by lawyers familiar with the provisions of the Clayton statute that every defendant is personally liable for damages arising from the unlawful combination.

Comments of the Attorneys.

Charles F. Kingsley, one of the leading attorneys for the defendants, had very little to say on the decision. He refused to be quoted on the question of an appeal. He said, however, that in his judgment Judge Dickinson erred in holding that the doctrine of the Bath Tub Trust case applied in this case to the extent of the opinion rendered by the court. He said further that the contracts which are declared illegal in the opinion have expired anywhere from one to two years ago. Edwin P. Grosvenor said he had just come back to New York and scarcely had time to familiarize himself with the opinion in all its phases. He declared that the decision was indeed a sweeping victory. He hoped it would benefit the motion picture industry, the importance of which he had learned to respect in the course of his connection with the case.

M. A. Neff Dead

M. A. NEFF, founder of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and for several years its president and enthusiastic promoter, died Wednesday morning, October 6, at a private sanitarium in New York, after an operation for an affection of the kidneys. While Mr. Neff's illness was of apparent short duration, he having been under the care of a physician for about ten days, the operation disclosed the fact that his complaint had been progressing for nearly a year and had reached the accute stage when he became prostrated in New York.

M. A. Neff.

The death of Mr. Neff will come as a great shock to his many friends among the motion picture exhibitors of this country, in whose interests he was ever diligent and faithful. He began his career as an exhibitor in 1907 and was interested in houses in Marion, Ohio, McKeesport and Oil City, Pa. About the same time he became imbued with the necessity for organization among exhibitors, and the first convention, held at Columbus, Ohio, September 12, 1909, was the result. The rest of the story of the League, which is in reality the story of Neff's life since that date, is familiar to readers of the Moving Picture World.

Little is known, even by his most intimate friends, of the early life of M. A. Neff. He was born about fifty-five years ago in West Virginia of sturdy pioneer stock. While he was still a small boy his parents moved to Ohio. In later years Neff drifted to the far west and from incidents related by him from time to time it is gathered that he was engaged in horse and cattle raising on western ranges. Afterward he became interested in racing, and for several years his commanding figure was a familiar sight at the big meets all over the country. When the "sport of kings" deteriorated into a "game of gamblers" Neff abandoned the sport and devoted himself to commercial pursuits.

Making Cincinnati his headquarters in the early '90s, Mr. Neff became interested in politics, and his efforts in that field made him popular among the political leaders of Ohio and the middle west, and at the National Capitol to the extent that he enjoyed the friendship of such men as Mark Hanna, President McKinley, Senator Foraker and many others of equal high standing in the councils of State and Nation.

Mr. Neff was in his fifty-sixth year at the time of his death. He leaves a widow and a son, whose home is in Cincinnati, and a sister, Mrs. A. B. Colley, of Huntington, W. Va. Arrangements for the funeral will be in the care of W. R. Wilson and Max Stearn, of Columbus, Ohio, who came to New York and accompanied the remains to Columbus, where burial will be made.

Since retiring from active participation in the affairs of the Exhibitors' League Mr. Neff has been engaged in the production of motion pictures. His first effort was a six-part subject entitled "The Battle of Ballots," which dealt principally with the contest now being waged throughout the United States by the anti-saloon element. It was business connected with this picture that brought Mr. Neff to New York when his fatal illness occurred. His business affairs will probably be taken charge of by W. R. Wilson, who is his executor under the will. A business announcement will be made in due time.

Brief Services in New York.

In deference to the many friends of the late M. A. Neff in New York City, a brief service over the remains was held at the mortuary chapel at 14 East 39th street at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon, October 8. A large number of exhibitors and friends in the motion picture trade were present.

The remains, in charge of Messrs. Stearn and Wilson of Columbus, were taken to Columbus for burial, leaving New York at 6 o'clock Friday evening.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FUNERAL.

President Stearn Sets Day for Services and Calls Ohio Exhibitors to Attend.

Columbus, Ohio, October 6, 1915.

Dear Sir and Brother: I am very sorry to inform you that our former president and founder of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Brother M. A. Neff, passed away after a short illness in New York this morning.

As president of the Ohio State Branch No. 1, I have concluded to go to New York this afternoon at five o'clock and come back with the body. Mr. Wilson, our secretary, will accompany me. The funeral will take place in Columbus on Saturday, October 9.

As a last mark of respect, all members of Ohio Branch No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, are hereby urgently requested to meet in Columbus, at the Chittenden Hotel at 10 a. m., Saturday, October 9, in order to pass resolutions of sympathy and also to attend the funeral in a body.

I feel that although some of our members at times have differed with Mr. Neff, that he has at all times been absolutely sincere in his work for the league. Furthermore, he has given the league more than he has ever received, and it is only right, and proper, that the exhibitors of the state of Ohio should show him this last mark of respect.

Yours truly,
OHIO STATE BRANCH NO. 1, M. P. E. L. of A.
Max Stearn, President.

Modern Theater Construction*

Some Defects Discussed and Remedies Suggested—Recommendations for Motion Picture Houses.

By Edward Barnard Kinsila.

CONTRARY to popular belief, the United States is illy provided with superior theaters. We have plenty of large theaters, often too large, but very rarely really comfortable ones. The public of the advanced countries of Europe are better provided for, and the stage arrangements in Germany are unequalled anywhere in the world.

Need for Theater Specialists.

Our deficiency is largely due to a woeful absence of experienced experts in theater construction. Specialization brings specific knowledge invariably utilized to the owner's advantage. Specialization is as needful in architecture as in any other commercial branch.

The astonishing fact that a highly reputable firm of architects could bring universal reproach upon themselves from equally reputable architectural magazines, for failure to produce a model theater with millions of dollars at their disposal, is striking evidence of the need of technical knowledge in this line of endeavor.

A select group of multi-millionaires commissioned a leading firm of architects to design the new Century theater, and to spare no expense to make it perfect in every respect. When completed it was opened with great pomp and ceremony. Still it was generally condemned. Extensive and costly repairs have not succeeded in materially remedying its faults. It is now being used as a music hall of the Continental order.

This is an era of specialization. A well-known firm of architects have succeeded in bank construction, and other architects have prospered in other lines of architecture. Why not in theater work, especially when one class of theaters alone represents the output of the fifth largest industry in the world?

There are other contributory causes for bad theater service in this country; causes that perhaps are the result of misunderstanding or ignorance. Too often, however, bad service is the direct product of managerial greed.

Elements like inferior heating and ventilation, that make the auditor dull and drowsy and therefore not mentally receptive, may be the result of want of perfect information on the subject, but the omission of creature comforts indicates conscious or unconscious greed.

Amusements a Psychologic Study.

Entertainment is largely a psychologic problem. It is not the line spoken on the stage nor the scene depicted, that really counts; it is the effect produced on the mind of the auditor.

And that effect is in direct relation to his mental attitude. If it be tranquil and receptive a favorable impression is easily registered. If his mind be disturbed by external matters it is not so susceptible, and the possibility of producing a good effect is considerably lessened. The obvious effort of the management should be to provide conditions that aim for perfect accommodation and easy comfort; and these furnish mental relaxation and susceptibility of impression.

Cheap Admission.

If the price of admission be too high, the spectator is likely to become hypercritical. It is a mistake in these days of advanced knowledge to hope that the public may be deceived into the belief that the quality of a performance is better because an enhanced admission is charged to see it.

The patron, too frequently, is able to judge the merit of an entertainment better than the manager. The mental influence of the cost of admission cannot be over exaggerated. Who ever heard anyone finding fault with the performance at a twenty-five-cent circus?

Ample Cloak-Room Space Necessary.

The provisions for safely deposing one's outer garments is grossly inadequate in our stingily built temples of pleasure. If a little more thought were given to this subject far better provision could be easily made without loss of valuable seating space. One would think that the custom of selling the hat and coat checking privilege for large sums because of the generous tips contributed, would encourage managers to see the advantage of supplying proper facilities and sufficient attendants to enable patrons to don their coats and hats at the end of a performance without vexatious waits. In Germany the law requires a nail in the cloak-room for every seat in the theater, and thirty-nine inches (one meter) of counter space that does not obstruct the passageway for every twenty persons that the auditorium seats.

Better Seating Space.

While the admission and absence of reasonable cloak-room provision have a subtle influence on the mind that may not be discernible to all constant disturbance and uncomfortable seating has a mental influence that must be apparent to anyone. There is not much fault to find with the width of theater seats. Twenty inches is ample, but with the legal space required between rows there is every reason for complaint. Thirty-two inches from back to back is not sufficient to permit free passage to interior seats without disturbing everyone passed. When one arises to permit a neighbor to pass, his continuity of thought is interrupted and a consequent mental depreciation of interest ensues. And if your wife or sweetheart's hat happens to be crushed in the proceeding, all but extremely pacific-minded persons are made angry. A four-inch increase to this space, meaning a loss of two rows of seats in an auditorium of twenty rows, would entirely eliminate this annoyance, now tolerated by an innocent public, who have been improperly taught that it is polite and proper to arise. In England the rows are spaced thirty-six inches apart and no one ever needs to arise.

What Would Happen if No One Arose.

Sometimes I wonder what would happen if any considerable number of an audience were suddenly to realize their inherent rights and refused to get up. I designed a theater in my native town, a short distance from New York, with seats thirty-six inches apart, so that no one need ever arise, and printed a conspicuous notice on the program to that effect. It took over three months to educate the patrons that there was no necessity of arising, and now they are so well pleased with the arrangement that they rarely enjoy a play in a New York theater when they visit that city. Many of them find consolation writing complaints to the local newspapers protesting against the inconveniences of New York theaters, a circumstance that prompts me to imagine what might happen if several New York theaters were to provide ample space as here suggested.

Physical Defects in Theaters.

The above are some of the psychologic causes of defective theaters. We shall now recite a few of the principal physical weaknesses.

To begin with, theaters at present cost entirely too much to construct, and for no apparent good reason. It is difficult to conceive how a structure composed largely as an empty shell with four surrounding walls should cost as much as a strictly commercial building of the same size crowded with floors and partitions, yet such is the case. Landlords, too, demand more rent for theater space than for any other purpose. Also for no good reason. A theater building is a first-class business investment, not a hazardous one, as is generally supposed. One rarely sees a good theater unrented, and it is doubtful if there be a first-class, well-located theater in the United States six months without a profitable tenant. Theaters are staple institutions. They never grow old fashioned. Not so with hotels, apartments or other classes of buildings.

Hollow Tile Cheaper and Better Than Brick.

Hollow tile is much better for most building purposes than brick. The composition of both is clay. The clay of hollow building tile is partially vitrified, because they are subjected in the kiln to a more intense heat than brick. Hollow tile also costs about half as much as brick, and may be laid in nearly half the time. When stuccoed with any desired hue it looks well. Should a superior appearance be demanded, text hollow tile, made in smaller sized blocks that require no stucco, may be employed.

The New York City ordinance formerly did not allow the erection of hollow tile above forty feet. The new building code changes all this. It may be used now to any height. Improved methods of construction have increased its bearing capacity beyond brick by grouting, a process of pouring liquid concrete into the vertical hollow cells of the tile blocks where greater strength is required, so that with the reinforcement of the tile web it forms a monolithic concrete column from the foundation to the roof.

*NOTE—Edward Barnard Kinsila has consented to write a series of articles on the construction and equipment of motion picture theaters for the Moving Picture World; his first article beginning with this issue. Mr. Kinsila has established a considerable reputation as a builder of theaters, regarding which mention has been made in previous issues of this publication. It is his purpose in this series to discuss the various phases of theater construction and equipment and to illustrate the problems with special drawings where possible. This series is certain to be of great value to exhibitors who contemplate making improvements in existing theaters or who wish to build new houses.

Absolutely Fireproof.

Fire never seriously affects hollow tile. Walls built of hollow tile stood gaunt and plumb amid the vast ruins of the recent Baltimore fire, while brick walls lay crumbled in heaps beside them.

A graphic test of the fire resisting qualities of hollow tile was lately furnished by Ex-Fire Commissioner Croker, an acknowledged expert on such matters, at his new home in Long Island. The building was constructed almost entirely of this product.

The Commissioner invited a select coterie of local officials to a house warming feast at his new home. The guests were served with cocktails in the sitting room and then repaired to the dining-room to partake of a sumptuous repast. At the conclusion of dinner they were asked to revisit the sitting room, to there enjoy their coffee, and cigars. Imagine their consternation upon opening the sitting room door to find the room a mass of charred, smoking ruins.

Following the instructions of the Commissioner, a servant had surreptitiously entered the sitting room, saturated its contents with kerosene oil and ignited them. The fire burned itself out, completely destroying the contents, without disturbing the guests in the next room.

Size and Form of Theaters.

The size and form of a theater should vary with its intended use and the character of the audience it seeks to attract, especially the latter. If you intend catering to a middle-class general public, construct a spacious theater with everything on a large scale. The American popular idea of art is size and grandeur. If you are appealing to an intelligent higher class element build smaller, more cosy and on simpler artistic lines. Fix your seating capacity at between one thousand and fourteen hundred truly comfortable seats.

The Acoustics.

The more nearly the auditorium approaches in its form the upper half of a sphere the better for the acoustics. The architect who designed the famous Paris Opera House when asked how he secured such perfect acoustics, replied, "I just trusted to luck." There is no need at the present day to trust to luck. There are certain well-defined scientific rules laid down that when closely followed produce uniformly perfect results.

The human voice is capable of conveying sound seventy-five feet without expansion. To secure perfect acoustics keep the auditorium dimensions within that area. As the auditorium should represent only the upper half of a sphere, the ideal height is about half that distance.

Experiments covering a period of years, made by Prof. Sabine of Harvard University, demonstrate that certain walls have a constructive absorbing or reflective power. Brick walls are powerful reflectors with very slight absorbing powers, and have proven to be the best. Plastered hollow tile walls came next with very little difference between them.

Science teaches that sound waves are reflected in exactly the same manner as light rays are reflected (the angle of incident being equal with the angle of reflection). Therefore auditoriums should be constructed in parabolic or semi-spherical shape.

Motion Picture Theaters.

But as over half the population of America are interested in motion pictures, the attendance at such theaters being over five millions daily—more than the total population of any of our great cities except New York, it is paramount that we consider separately this special class of theater. In motion picture theaters acoustics are rarely essential.

Should Resemble a Regular Theater.

The more nearly the motion picture theater is made to represent a theater for regular theatrical performance the better the illusion. It is an accepted fact that patrons enjoy moving pictures more when given in regular theaters than in other forms of theaters. In a regulation theater the stage is about three feet, nine inches above the first row of seats to permit a view five inches above the stage line. The sight line from the balconies also permits a clear view of the stage front at least twelve inches below the footlights.

Low Hung Balconies Bad.

It is an axiom of theater construction that persons in the last row of seats underneath the balcony should have an unobstructed view of the stage proscenium arch. Greed to provide more seating capacity has often prompted architects to add a row or two to the balcony and swing it too low to grant a view more than half way up the front curtain. This is an error that often forces motion picture exhibitors to show smaller-sized pictures than the size of the theater warrants. Often, too, people in the last rows do not have a full view of the screen to the top. Such a defect renders standing room in the back, often a valuable source of revenue, absolutely worthless.

Long and Narrow Auditoriums.

Because of the desirability of presenting as nearly a direct view of pictures as possible to the audience to avoid distortion, motion picture theaters are often built long and narrow. It is better, if possible, to straighten the line of sight by providing a stage and placing the screen about twenty feet toward its rear. Such an arrangement permits full illumination of the auditorium, by concealed or indirect lighting, while the picture is being shown, an effect that gives greater depth to the picture, the auditorium being lighted while the stage remains darkened. A lighted auditorium is most desirable with comedy pictures, as laughter is contagious and the audience may readily see each other in paroxysms of laughter.

If it be impossible to secure more width of property upon which to build, it is better to construct a narrow auditorium and abandon any attempt at semblance to a regulation theater. Then build in the form of an Assembly Hall, without balconies. Any number of disirable orders of architecture lend themselves to this treatment.

All of the features embodied in this introduction will be elaborated and illustrated with detail drawings in a series of subsequent treatises published in this magazine by the same author.

LUBIN PLAYERS GO WEST.

Make-up came off early, scripts were folded up hurriedly and nearly the entire acting force at the Lubin plants at Betzwood, Indiana and Glenwood avenues, Philadelphia, ran over to the Broad Street Station to bid "pleasant journey" to Director Edgar Lewis and his group of sixteen who left for the Grand Canyon of Arizona on September 30 to begin work on the "exteriors" of "The Great Divide."

A special car was attached to the through Chicago train and every detail for the comfort of the players was looked after under instructions from Messrs. Singhi and Lowry. Miss Clayton's stateroom was a bower of American Beauty roses, while, in Mr. House Peters' room was much of the Peters' brand tobaccos and an abundance of "first aid tonic."

In addition to Director Lewis, Miss Clayton and Mr. Peters, there were Mary Moore, Marie Sterling, Warner P. Richmond, Hayden Stevenson, Ray Chamberlain and Ford Oheck, four cameramen, two carpenters and a scenic artist.

Lubin Company Off to Arizona to Film "The Great Divide."

The company expects to be gone about three weeks, then to return to Philadelphia to complete the interiors of the play which Mr. Lewis says will "be there, boys."

PECK SUCCEEDS DOUGHTY.

Because of illness Francis Worcester Doughty has been compelled to relinquish his post as scenario writer for the Centaur Features, to which he was recently assigned by David Horsley. His place is assumed by Charles Mortimer Peck, who takes up his new duties at once.

Mr. Peck is well known as a scenario writer, having contributed many stories which have been made into successful pictures. At one time he was associated with film concerns in the East, but later went to California.

Decree Pro Confesso in Duping Suit

A. G. Levi Practically Admits He Offered for Sale Chaplin Prints—P. M. Pierson Enters General Denial of Charges.

THE Moving Picture World told in its issue last week of the action taken by attorneys representing the Keystone and Essanay companies against parties charged with having duped films in which appeared Charles Chaplin.

When the equity suit filed in the United States District Court by the Keystone Film Company and the Mutual Film Company versus Herman S. Waldman, trading as the Chaplin Film Company, the Leemund Film Company, and A. G. Levi, was called up in that court before Judge Hough on the motion for an injunction, pending the suit, defendant Waldman was eliminated. It appeared from the answer, affidavits and exhibits that Waldman was merely an employee of Levi, and had acted in good faith, believing that his employer was legally justified in his methods of business.

It will be recalled the suit was a bill in equity charging the defendants with pirating a Charlie Chaplin film, "Dough and Dynamite." The bill and accompanying affidavit charged that Levi had offered for sale and had sold a number of Chaplin films, alleging he had bought them abroad and could dispose of them at greatly reduced rates. Letters were shown disclosing negotiations with certain houses in Pittsburgh and elsewhere. The Mutual joined in the suit as the sole distributor of Keystone photoplays.

In his answer, Levi admitted so much of the charges that a decree was ordered pro confesso, which means practically that he admitted the allegation and promised not to do it any more. Quite a number of reproductions of Chaplin films were seized at Levi's offices, Room 702, at 145 West Forty-fifth street, by United States Marshal McCarthy. Others will be seized as soon as located.

As a corollary to this equity suit, criminal action was begun against Abraham George Levi in the Federal courts. In this instance not the Keystone but the Essanay Company was complainant. The charge was made that Levi had unlawfully procured a film of "The Champion," an Essanay Chaplin, by representing himself to be a motion picture theater proprietor.

Levi was held, on September 29, in $10,000 bail for a full hearing on October 12. Bond was furnished.

The next day another arrest was made, under two indictments returned by the Federal Grand Jury. Levi is named in both. They charge him with conspiring to defraud and with violating the criminal section of the copyright law. He stands under indictment on two distinct charges found some two weeks before the date set for his hearing.

Jointly indicted with Levi was Philip Lewis, of 110 West Fortieth street, who is accused of being Levi's silent partner in all the various deals. Lewis was arraigned in open court, Thursday, September 30, when the indictments were duly presented. They pleaded not guilty. Bail was fixed in $1,000.

This is the first criminal action brought for a conspiracy to violate the infringement section of the copyright law. The charge as found in the indictment constitutes a felony and can result, on conviction, in the culprits so found guilty of serving terms in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta.

Suit in equity has been brought in the United States District Court by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company against Harold C. Pierson, Paul M. Pierson and the Pierson Film Laboratories, incorporated, of Ossining, charging violations of their copyrights on a number of Chaplin photoplays.

The defendants filed answer admitting the authorship of Chaplin and that he transferred his rights to the complainant. They deny specifically that the films are worth $15,000 each, and to this and the succeeding allegations charging infringement and conspiracy they make specific denial. They ask that therefore they be dismissed with costs.

The Keystone Film Company also filed a suit in equity against J. M. Goldstein, H. A. Samwick, J. E. Chadwick and Exclusive Features, Inc., of 71 West Twenty-third street, New York. The charge is that the defendants have been printing and selling illegally reproductions of Chaplin plays. The defendants in their answer deny any infringement, deny possession of any film or films of any of the plays and generally deny everything set up in the bill. They ask that suit be dismissed.

The Keystone company also filed suit against the Piersons as individuals and the Laboratories company as a corporation, alleging willful infringement of the plays mentioned in the Goldstein suit. In this action, A. G. Levi, who practically admitted piracy in the Keystone suit against him on "Dough and Dynamite," looms up again. He is the man who, with his alleged partner, Philip Lewis, is under indictment for conspiracy to violate the copyright law.

Two answers are filed in this suit. Paul M. Pierson, besides entering a general denial of all the charges, adds that he is not active in the conduct of the affairs of the company and that if any act has been committed by the laboratories company which infringe any rights of the complainant such acts were done without his knowledge and consent and against his directions. He asks to be relieved from responsibility.

Harold C. Pierson and the Pierson Laboratories, for separate answer, admit as probably true the questions of authorship, Chaplin, as star, and the copyrighted ownership of the complainant. They then answer that they did, at the instance and request of A. G. Levi, no address given, make copies of "Dough and Dynamite," one negative and fifteen prints; "A Gentleman of Nerve," fifteen prints, and "His Prehistoric Past," one negative and fifteen prints.

Levi, they assert, represented he was the owner of the films and had the right to make reproductions. But the films they copied from had no notice of copyright upon them. They also say they had three films of these plays which were seized by the United States marshal and that now none are in their possession.

Thanhouser Ball Was Brilliant

Motion Picture Folk Have Big Time at New Rochelle—Local Players Entertain Guests.

FRIDAY morning saw a tired but happy almost 1,000 revelers departing from Germania Hall in New Rochelle, each with a perfectly accurate idea of what a real good time is like. The occasion was the yearly Thanhouser ball, at which Edwin Thanhouser meets the Thanhouserites on a social basis, together with all their friends and well-wishers. The blue-blood of filmdom was there in strong array and the members of the Thanhouser organization did themselves proud as hosts.

The grand march was led by Mignon Anderson, the petite leading woman, and Morris Foster, who heads one of the stock companies. Gladys Hulette, the new acquisition to the Thanhouser array of talent, made friends as fast as they could reach her for a handshake; and Louise Emerald Bates, the "Falstaff Girl" radiated in her charming personality and spontaneous humor. Everybody helped make it a big night, for it was arranged that three big carryall coaches should go down to New York and bring up to New Rochelle all the screen favorites from other companies.

The entertainment arranged was a delight to the eye and ear. It was quite unknown, heretofore, that Grace DeCarlton is an accomplished ballet artiste, and her exhibition of interpretative classic dances was one of the surprises of the evening. Enthroned like a queen in state was Florence La Badie, Thanhouser leading woman, to whom a million fans throughout the country do fervent homage.

The surprise of the evening included vaudeville "turns" by the Fairbanks Twins, little Helen Badgley and Tula Belle, of the juvenile company. Arthur Bauer, Harris Gordon, Morgan Jones, Carey Hastings, George Marlo, Bert Delaney and Madge Drew (the famous horsewoman) added their talent to the entertainment. One of the most popular hits was the singing of Boyd Marshall.

John Lehnberg, the Thanhouser character-man, was the master of ceremonies, and it is a certain thing that he will always be a successful candidate for the task. Claude Cooper, Arthur Cunningham and Frances Keyes, of the Falstaff Comedy Company, kept the guests in roars in a twenty-minute sketch, which the big-time vaudeville managers had better sign up quickly—if they can. The only shadow cast on the evening's fun was that the next day was a working day, and everybody had to be home before five o'clock in the morning. Some were.

KARL NOW OWNER OF COLONIAL.

Peter Karl is now the sole owner of the Colonial theater, Utica, N. Y. He secured exclusive control on September 17 last, and has been managing the structure since. The Colonial was formerly the property of the Utica Hippodrome Amusement Company, of Utica, of which corporation he was the vice-president.

"The Carmen of the Films"

Miss Geraldine Farrar Makes Her Screen Debut at Boston Under Most Auspicious Auguries—How She Came to Long for Expressing the True Carmen in Motion Pictures.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THREE thousand persons thronged the Boston Symphony Hall on the night of Friday, October 1, to see a famous "Carmen of the opera" perform as the "Carmen of the films." Even in these days when the motion picture attracts high class audiences everywhere the Boston assemblage demands notice on the score of quality.

Geraldine Farrar as "Carmen."

When Miss Farrar stepped into the theater a few minutes after eight, she was overwhelmed by a great demonstration. The audience cheered her much in the fashion of an excited political gathering, uproariously welcoming a presidential candidate. They did not set up the familiar yell, "What's the matter with Geraldine?" and then counter with the fierce chorus, "She's all right," but they meant just that. In vain did Miss Farrar try to still the storm by gracious bows and smiles—the noisy ovation lasted until throats and hands got weary and the orchestra started the overture. No doubt about the loyalty of Boston.

Now, as to the picture. This filmed version of Carmen is based in the main upon the story of Prosper Merimae. The scenario writer has made some additions and emendations, which are well justified and helpful to the action of the play. The opening scenes in this "Carmen" are strikingly beautiful and impressive. With a few skilful touches we are led up to this promising situation: A band of smugglers and gypsies who had been doing a profitable business through the connivance of a customs officer find themselves baffled by a new commander, who will not take their bribes. This new commander is Don Jose. How can he be conquered? Carmen, reckless and wanton, bewitchingly beautiful, will overcome his scruples. Thus we are ready for the appearance of Carmen for whom the stage has now been set in such clever fashion. Carmen fulfills all our expectations. Never for a moment do we doubt this girl's victory over the young soldier. She is irresistible whenever she chooses to make herself so. The Carmen of the film is the Carmen of the novel, the Carmen who lived in story and gossip years before Merimee was born. Young, possessed of what the French call "the beauty of the devil," full of whims and every whim a charm, in turn humble and coaxing, wilful and imperious, swayed by no deep or genuine emotion, Miss Farrar's Carmen was by herself characterized as "a wildcat." There is force in the homely comparison. A cruel subtle, feline playfulness is the dominant note in the character of Carmen. It is the playfulness that always ends in a tragedy for the mouse. Some of the Boston critics objected to the realism of Miss Farrar and one of them was shocked by her scandalous conduct with Jose and her fight in the cigarette factory. Well, Carmen is not a person one would ask to a highly decorous social function. When the two soldiers engage in a duel to the death she watches the fatal ending with a wicked relish and like the wanton she is, she laughs and jeers at the tragic plight of the man who murdered for her sake.

Scene from "Carmen" (Lasky).

Miss Farrar's comment on her own work furnishes the key to this great success on the screen at the very first attempt.

"The opera," she said, "always imposed restraints and limitations on my 'Carmen.' The technique of the opera, especially its musical requirements, had a cramping influence. I felt there were possibilities in 'Carmen' which could be brought out much more tellingly on the film. Feeling this way I just gave, or tried to give, as perfect and as detailed a picture as possible. The 'Carmen' of the opera as far as characterization goes was but a rough sketch after all. The screen gave me the chance for a finished picture."

The support of Miss Farrar leaves nothing to be desired, the boyish bashfulness of Don Jose showed a fine and convincing conception of the character. The genuine youth of Carmen and Don Jose is by no means the least merit of this film play. Escamillo was a splendid type of "toreador," sensuous, passionate and fearless. They left out the virtuous Michael, for which relief much thanks. Michael was invented for the opera and always seemed painfully out of place, much like a sprig of honeysuckle grafted on a wild olive.

"Carmen" surely afforded magnificient opportunities for spectacular displays. Some of these opportunities were improved by the director just as we would expect it in a Lasky production, others were not. The procession to the bull ring was splendid. The realism of the bull fight was gripping. The opening scenes were superb, the backgrounds and settings were things of beauty. I was disappointed with the smugglers' camp; the riot following the fight in the factory could, I think, have been produced far better with a deep perspective showing numerous animated groups than by a succession of "close-ups." A Lasky production cannot be judged by ordinary standards. There were traces of hurry, faint and few to be sure, but they were there.

It goes without saying that such a Carmen as that of Miss Farrar will be enjoyed and admired everywhere. The ovation in Boston was due to her personal popularity in her old home, but it would have been well justified if she had never been in Boston before. The entrance into the motion picture field of an artist of the renown and talent of Miss Farrar is bound to raise the prestige of the screen; it will benefit the industry generally.

Of course the music is a vital part of the performance. The opera "Carmen" has proved its extraordinary popularity during the last season here. Extra performances had to be arranged and every performance resulted in a crowded house. Carmen is one of the most tuneful of all operas, its score is easily adaptable to the needs of the screen; the scenes are long enough to give each motif and each air a chance to make itself heard and understood.

LASKY STUDIO TO BE ENLARGED.

With the return to Hollywood, Cal., recently of Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky Feature Play Company, and Jesse L. Lasky, president of the big concern, it became known that one of the reasons for their conferences in New York with Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the company, was the consummation of elaborate plans for the enlargement of the Lasky studios at Hollywood.

The largest addition to the plant, it is said, will be a great laboratory with a capacity for 600,000 feet of film a week. All prints will be made in the west. Mr. De Mille, while in the east, visited the plant of the Eastman Kodak Company, inspecting the new daylight system of developing which will be inaugurated at the Lasky studios.

The Mutual Film Corporation's office at Memphis, Tenn., has been compelled to move into new quarters at 500 South Main street on account of increased business.

"Carmen" Will be "First Run" at Strand

Theater Management Declines Big Offer to Permit Farrar Subject to be Shown First at $2 Prices.

THE fact that the film production of "Carmen," in which Jesse L. Lasky is starring Geraldine Farrar, will not be shown in New York at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2 is entirely due to Mitchel H. Mark, president of the Mark Strand Theater Company, who has refused a large offer made by the Lasky Company, in which it was stipulated that the management of the Strand theater would receive a percentage of the profits derived from showing the "Carmen" picture in a New York theater, with a guarantee of $20,000. Mr. Mark has sent the following letter to Samuel Goldfish, general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company:

My dear Mr. Goldfish:

With reference to our recent conversation regarding the playing by your company, of the Geraldine Farrar picture "Carmen," at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2 for an extensive run, and allowing the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the Strand Theater of New York, a share of your profits by reason of our company acquiescing in your playing this picture as above indicated, and prior to its showing at the Strand, I have come to the conclusion, after careful consideration, that it would be best to adhere to the original program, and that the picture should have its premier at the Strand, on its release date November 1st.

This picture has had a great deal of advance publicity, and it is generally known and understood, through the medium of the press and various other sources, that it will have its first showing in New York at the Strand Theater. As to the Strand, with its schedule of prices, following a high price run, this is out of the question. The Strand always leads; it never follows.

No picture is too good for the Lasky Company to produce, and likewise no picture is too good for the Strand to play. It is vital to the continued success of our business that the producers are constantly striving for better results and higher ideals, and institutions like the Strand offer a fitting home for such pictures. In my judgment it is a mistake for any manufacturer to withdraw his master pictures from the regular program. We all need such pictures to bolster up the weaker sisters.

The success of the Strand has been due to the fact that we have always considered the public first, last and all the time, and therefore should not wish to break faith with them by withdrawing this picture from our program for pecuniary or any other reasons. No amount of American dollars could tempt me to do this.

I appreciate, indeed, your liberality in offering our company a share in the profits which you would expect to derive by exploiting this picture in New York City at a $2 price, but there is a principle involved in this issue which is of far greater importance than any financial gain we would receive by accepting the same.

I can assure your company that this picture will be presented at the Strand in a manner befitting the star and the play, and I feel confident that we will produce it so well that it will mark an epoch in the upward career of the Strand and the Lasky Company. I therefore trust that you will see the benefits to be derived by your company, by reason of this picture following the course laid out in your program.

WHM:B. MITCHEL H. MARK.

How Harry Carter Doubled

IN THE majority of cases, "all work and no play may make Jack a dull boy," but Harry Carter, famous for his character portrayals in Universal pictures, believes he is immune from such a malady, for recently, not satisfied with playing one of the principals in Robert Leonard's production, "That Lass o' Lowries," he has essayed an equally important role in Otis Turner's feature, "The Frame-Up."

Harry Carter.

Since Carter is a member of Leonard's company it was something of a surprise when Director Turner came to the head of the Rex Company with the request that Carter be allowed to leave for one picture. Then began the debate. Leonard insisted that he had to have Carter for his picture. Turner likewise insisted that he needed Carter for his picture, and he purposed to have him. Then it was Carter stepped into the breach with the announcement that he would work for both.

"Don't kid us," snorted the directors. "This is serious." "So am I," returned Carter, and so the matter was settled. Carter was to try working for two directors in the production of two big five-reel productions at the same time. More than that, he did it.

It was not easy work. While Turner staged a few scenes in which Carter had no part, the actor would be at work with Leonard. Through juggling the time well neither director lost any time waiting for Carter, who, however, is now busy making up several nights' postponed sleep.

Flora Zabelle With Famous Players

FLORA ZABELLE, star of many successful musical comedies and a stage favorite popular throughout the country, who made her greatest hit in "The Red Widow," the celebrated fun-feast by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company to make her screen debut in the title role which she created on the stage in the feature adaptation of that comedy to be the Paramount picture of November 11.

Flora Zabelle.

Miss Zabelle will be supported on the screen by several other members of the original cast of this popular production. So singularly clever was the work of George D. Mack in the comic role of Popova and of John Hendricks in the part of Baron Scorpiof, the chief of the Russian police, that the Famous Players decided the photoplay would be incomplete unless these inimitable comedians could be secured for the purpose of repeating their clever performances on the screen. Another important acquisition to the screen cast of this notable subject is Denman Malley, who has appeared for the last five years in important comedy roles with Lew Fields, and who has been engaged for the role of Cicero Hannibal Butts, the characterization originated on the stage by Miss Zabelle's husband, Raymond Hitchcock. This unusual galaxy of comedy artists should make the film version of "The Red Widow" as great a comedy achievement as it was in the legitimate theater.

MRS. THOMAS WHIFFEN IN NEW METRO PICTURE.

Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, who has entertained and delighted playgoers in this country for two generations, during the last of which by her masterly delineation of elderly women parts has been engaged by the Popular Plays and Players to appear in the big five-part feature production, "Barbara Frietchie," which will be released on the Metro program. Mary Miles Minter will have the stellar role in the production, and Mrs. Whiffen will play the part of her grandmother in the Clyde Fitch version and dramatization of the famous poem, which has been picturized for Metro.

KLEINE WANTS COMEDY SCENARIOS.

George Kleine is in the market for comedy scenarios of one and two reel length. The Kleine organization has begun work on a series of short comedies and will pay attractive prices for available material. All manuscripts should be addressed to Scenario Department, George Kleine, 11 E. 14th street, New York City.

VITAGRAPH THANKSGIVING PICTURE.

Bobby Connelly is playing the lead in a Thanksgiving story entitled, "Sonny Jim and the Family Party," a Sonny Jim story of exceptional appeal and timely interest. It is being produced for the Vitagraph Company by Director Tefft Johnson.

REALISM IN "THE END OF THE ROAD."

The breaking of a dam, depicting thousands of gallons of water rushing madly through the opening, flooding the surrounding territory and setting awash houses, barns and other structures, is but one of the may thrillingly realistic scenes presented in "The End of the Road," a forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, screened at the American studios.

Plimpton Epics to Expand

Horace G. Plimpton Says Through Association With Authors' Film Express Distribution His Company Will Enlarge Original Plans.

As a result of its association with the Authors' Film Company the Plimpton Epics Pictures Company, of which Horace G. Plimton, formerly head of production at the Edison studio, is president, will materially extend the activities tentatively decided on at the formation of the company. The Plimpton company has acquired a studio in Yonkers approximately at Two Hundred and Fiftieth street, between Yonkers and Mount Vernon, with excellent traffic facilities accessible. The top floor of the building has a clear space of 50 by 100 feet. Lights are now being installed. It is probable production will be commenced within two weeks.

Mr. Plimpton is convinced his company will have an ideal situation and for its size be one of the best studios in the country. He says the first two releases of his company are nearly ready and that the order of their issue probably will be "A Mystery in Black and White," by Wallace Irwin, the second subject to be by Reginald Wright Kaufman. The latter is based on the great pearl robbery of 1913, in which $600,000 worth of pearls were sent by registered mail and securely sealed, from London to Paris, but when the seals were broken there were found three lumps of sugar. Mr. Kaufman has worked out a solution of the mystery which the authorities have never solved. He has added those elements which go to make for picture entertainment, including love interest. Mr. Plimton is confident the subject will be a strong one.

The Plimpton Epics Pictures Company will release through the Authors' Film Express Distribution, with the plans of which Mr. Plimpton is very much impressed. A World man during the week sat in on a little chat with Mr. Plimpton. George Jordan and Gerald F. Bacon. The last two named are associated with the Authors' Film Company, with offices in the Empire Theater Building.

"The Authors' Film Company was primarily formed to carry out the idea of distributing film not through exchanges but through the express companies," said Mr. Jordan. "Mr. Bacon, who, too, is connected with Sanger & Jordan, has been for a year working out the plans. We send out traveling representatives with film just like any wholesale house sends its men with sample goods. By arrangement with express companies we send out features for first, second or third runs, etc., just as the exhibitor desires. We route the picture and give the express company a list showing where the film is to go, the hour it is to be delivered, the sum to be collected C. O. D., and the hour the film is to be collected. The express company guarantees the subjects will be delivered on time. Our system absolutely does away with exchanges, and we believe with many of the evils—from the manufacturing side—which grow out of exchange distribution.

"The exhibitor is assured of getting a picture on the minute he expects it. He does not have to go after it and he does not have to return it. We have made arrangements to see that each subject will reach him in proper condition. In the past few months we have demonstrated to our own satisfaction the plan is a success. We have been routing 'Just Out of College' through New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. To that territory we have added Kentucky, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas and Minnesota. Now that the Plimpton subjects will be released through our organization we are going right on to the coast, covering not only the United States, but Canada as well.

"Through our association with Sanger & Jordan we have access to the seven thousand subjects in their control. These comprise 3,000 plays and 4,000 books. From these the Authors' Film Company and its allied interests will have first selection."

Mr. Bacon explained to the World man his novel plan of distribution through express companies, showing the duplicate sheets which accompany each shipment. From each exhibition of a subject a return is made to the Authors' Film Company, accompanied by a draft for the amount of the booking, minus the express charges. Mr. Bacon said that while at first exhibitors were slow to look with favor on the new plan they were so impressed with its compensating advantages that now he heard no complaints. He said express distribution meant a square deal for the exhibitor, the certain delivery of his film not only on the day contracted for, but also on the minute, and to the manufacturer it meant cash in hand and no bad debts.

John Noble Finishes "One Million Dollars"

JOHN W. NOBLE, director of many notable Rolfe-Metro features, has just made an unusual record by completing the big five-act picture, "One Million Dollars," in which William Faversham is starred, in less than three weeks. For a time it appeared that Mr. Faversham would not be able to finish the picture, as a previous contract called for his presence in Pittsburgh this week, where he opens the theatrical season in his big stage success of last season, "The Hawk." But by working day and night under high pressure Mr. Noble succeeded in finishing the picture in time for Mr. Faversham to take a brief vacation and rest of several days aboard his yacht before beginning his theatrical engagement.

John W. Noble.

One of the secrets of Mr. Noble's success in effective and expeditious directing is his masterly handling of big situations where discipline counts. He is a strict disciplinarian, a training he received while a student at West Point. He was born in Kentucky of a long line of pioneers who had to fight for their existence in the early days. When the opportunity presented itself, Mr. Noble entered the army and was a lieutenant during the Spanish-American war. He served in the Philippines and was sent to China during the Boxer uprising. For a time he was stationed in Japan. His experience as a soldier has often stood him in good stead where military or mob scenes are called for in a script. In "The Bridge or the Bigger Man," a recent Rolfe-Metro feature, he directed a mob scene of strikes and militia that attracted wide attention.

RECEPTION TENDERED MARGUERITE CLARK.

Under the auspices of the management of the Third Street Theater, Easton, Pa., a huge reception was tendered Marguerite Clark, the Famous Players Film Company's star, and to her director, J. Searle Dawley, on Tuesday night. The elaborate executive offices of the theatre, which is the handsomest in the city, were exquisitely decorated with plants and myriads of cut flowers.

The most conspicuous feature of the affair, with the exception of the star herself, was a magnificent portrait of Miss Clark which, mounted in a gold frame, formed the keynote of the mural decorations. But even the painted idealization of the diminutive actress failed to compare in interest with the real Miss Clark, who was the vivacious center of an admiring throng.

Over two thousand gravure photographs of Miss Clark were distributed to the ladies who attended the function. The social set of Easton was prominently represented at the reception, which was one of the largest gatherings in the history of the city.

BUTTS ON DECK.

That sound as of a battleship being rolled along the street which has recently disturbed Times Square is only the ordinary movement of an erstwhile invalid. It is F. Worthington Butts, president and general manager of the Greenwich Lithographing Company, going through the town in his yellow automobile. Mr. Butts, after a long siege of illness, during which on several occasions undertaker's estimates were furnished, is now in prime condition and wants all doubters to know it. He is one of the most popular figures in motion picture circles, having been identified with the display end of the business since its inception. "Worthy" they call him for short, and worthy he has shown himself of the esteem of the hundreds of friends who will be glad to learn that they may cancel their florist orders.

Kann Goes to Coast

Will Be Business Manager of Universal City—Associates Give Him Farewell Dinner.

WITH fond memories of the wonderful send-off which was given him before he left for Universal City, where he is to take up his duties as business manager of the film capital, George Kann is now somewhere between Kansas City and Denver gloating over the proof that he is just a thousand times more popular than he had imagined.

This energetic young man, who in the short space of two years and a half worked his way up from private secretary to President Laemmle to secretary and assistant treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has now made another leap, which puts him in the chair of one of the most responsible positions this great organization has to offer. But those who have watched his rise are convinced that he will make good in his new post, and they predict he has not stopped soaring and that the next time he is heard from it will be in connection with another stride up the ladder as reward for the fulfillment of the duties he is now on his way to undertake.

In order to show their admiration for Secretary Kann and to give him a cheerful Godspeed across the country to his new post, the Universalites held a "Con" night last Saturday night. It started with four rows of seats at the Garrick theater where they witnessed "The Tempters" and listened to the principals pass Universal jokes across the footlights and the orchestra playing the new "Universal Fox Trot" which was recently dedicated to the Universal by the writer, Joe Rosey.

From the Garrick the party went to Bustanoby's eating palace on West Thirty-ninth street where a big room had been set aside for the occasion. Here a sumptuous feast awaited the honored guest and he was compelled to listen to a whole lot of very pleasing things said about him by Vice-President R. H. Cochrane, Joe Brandt, Julius Stern and everybody else present. Gifts galore were showered on him and toast after toast was drunk to his health. He was entertained by singers from Shapiro, Bernstein & Company, Whitmark's and other music publishers, who sang all the latest song successes.

One of the beautiful presents he received was a solid silver cigarette case with his initials inscribed on the outside in gold and inside with the words, "Yours for Universal Prosperity, October Second, Nineteen Hundred and Fifteen."

After Sunday had arrived and everybody had talked himself out on the subject of George Kann, the party broke up with the decision that it was one of the biggest Universal hits of the season.

Cissy Fitzgerald

CISSY FITZGERALD, who will shortly make her appearance as a Mutual star in "A Corner in Cats," a rollicking single-reel comedy being screened at the Gaumont studios, for release in the regular Mutual program, was christened Marie Kathleen Cecelia Fitzgerald. She was educated in a convent. She started work on the stage under the abbreviated title of "Cissy." It was because her brothers back in England had given her the name of "Sis."

Cissy Fitzgerald.

Cissy Fitzgerald first came to this country in "The Gaiety Girls" company after a long and successful run at the famous Daly theater in London. She scored a tremendous success, and before she had been here very long she was under contract with Charles Frohman, making her first appearance in "The Family," one of the successful productions of the season. She soon was called home to accept a more lucrative engagement. There she played for a number of years. Then she married and left the stage. She traveled all over the world with her husband.

Miss Fitzgerald returned to America about eighteen months ago. She was engaged by the Vitagraph Company and remained there for sometime, playing comedy leads. She has wonderful hair and the clear, colorful complexion of her countrywomen, an extraordinarily keen sense of humor and a great amount of intelligence. "A Corner in Cats" will be a great success with Cissy Fitzgerald to lend her personality to it.

HARMO COMPANY OPENS NEW YORK OFFICE.

R. S. Hotz, Sr., of the Harmo Electric Company, is in town this week to arrange for the opening of the new eastern office of the Harmo Electric Company which will be located at 126 West Forty-sixth street. J. J. Lodge, well known in theatrical and moving picture circles, will be in charge of this office.

Billy Quirk Screeners New Head

Nearly Two Hundred Members Turn Out for the Annual Election on Saturday, October 2.

THE annual election of the Screen Club was held on the afternoon and evening of Saturday, October 2. Approximately two hundred members of the organization went to the clubhouse at 165 West Forty-seventh street to register their preferences. Among these were men prominent in the amusement world, Daniel Frohman and Adam Kessel, Jr., for instance. Peter Lang, Charles C. Brandt and George Terwilliger came over from Philadelphia. The following will be the officers of the Screen Club, beginning November 1.

Billy Quirk.

President, Billy Quirk; first vice president, Harry Meyers; second vice president, Adam Kessel, Jr.; third vice president, Robert Edison; treasurer, John Race; corresponding secretary, Harry Ennis; recording secretary, Robert E. Welsh; board of governors for two years, C. A. Willat, George De Carleton, Hopp Hadley and Arthur Leslie.

It was natural that in the assembling of such a large number of Screeners there should be a get-together, and this was what happened. There was the best of feeling over the result of the counting of the votes, which began at 9 o'clock. On the whole, the election was a quiet one and was conducted with a minimum display of partisanship.

The next big thing on tap for the film men will be the Screen Club's annual ball, which is scheduled for Saturday, November 20, at the Astor. It is likely President Quirk will endeavor to eclipse the similar function of last year, and those who attended the ball of 1914 will agree that will be some job.

GROSSMAN TOURS FOR LINCOLN CYCLE.

H. Grossman, general sales manager of the Charter Features Corporation, producers of Chapin's Lincoln Cycle, will leave the latter part of the week for an extended tour, which will carry him through the East, Middle West and as far south as Atlanta.

During this trip Mr. Grossman intends to get in close touch with both the exchangemen and exhibitors, as well as the press and the local officials who have indorsed the general plan of the Cycle.

Benjamin Chapin, whose Lincoln work on the lyceum platform and stage for years has been favorably and intimately known in theatrical, official and educational circles, has been the recipient of countless inquiries concerning his moving picture undertaking.

Together with these inquiries came flattering offers of co-operation and numerous suggestions of great worth, evidencing the profound interest which the entry of this exponent of Lincoln in picture fields had aroused.

"The prime purpose of my forthcoming tour," said Mr. Grossman, "will be to meet the representatives of the various local motion picture interests, city officials and educational authorities and formulate some plan whereby all of this phenomenal interest may be crystallized and brought into direct co-operation with the theaters which are to play the Chapin's Lincoln Cycle. During the trip I will visit Harrisburg, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis, as well as Atlanta."

LOTTA SAVEY DEAD.

Mrs. Lotta Savey, mother of Viola Savey, is dead. She was well known in the motion picture profession and appeared recently in a production of "Alice in Wonderland," in which her daughter Viola was featured.

Maude Fealy in Knickerbocker

THAT there's many a slip in the producing game has been ably demonstrated in the instance of the Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Dragon's Claw," which will be released October 13.

Maude Fealy.

It was originally contemplated to release this feature near the end of September and the picture was taken with that in view. Under the skillful direction of Stanner E. V. Taylor, the work progressed rapidly and well; the work of the cameraman ended and the cast was discharged. But while the negative was at the factory, disaster befell the feature when over 1,200 feet of it were destroyed by fire. This has made necessary the re-engaging of the cast and the retaking of scores of scenes.

Fortunately, Knickerbocker Star Features, believing in preparedness, were not caught entirely off their guard, but had their next feature far enough under way to shove its release date ahead to September 29, the original release date of "The Dragon's Claw."

The name of this feature is "The Girl from Tim's Place," a picturization of Charles Clark Munn's well-known novel of the same name. It is a story of the Maine woods and abounds in the most beautiful backwoods scenery.

Following their policy of a star in each release, Knickerbocker Star Features present Maude Fealy in the leading role of "Chip." Miss Fealy is a well-known figure on the legitimate stage and "The Girl from Tim's Place" marks her initial appearance before the moving picture public.

Louise Lester

LOUISE LESTER, who has for several years past been one of the leading players in Flying A pictures of the American Film Company, Inc., has been and will henceforth appear in photoplays produced by the second Mustang Company, releasing in the regular Mutual program.

Louise Lester.

Miss Lester is remembered by motion picture fans more for her delightful "Calamity Anne" characterizations, perhaps, than any of the other of the numerous types of roles in which she has appeared. "Calamity Anne," it will be recalled, was a Western woman of quaint habits. She was possessed of many of these rare qualities of humor which characterize Mark Twain's personages, and was a constant delight to picture enthusiasts when she was the feature of the "Flying A" series on the Mutual program. Miss Lester was the originator, as well as the impersonator of the role.

Louise Lester has appeared frequently in Western cow girl roles. She is a marvelous rider. Her versatility is shown in her ability to adapt herself to the interpretation of elderly society matron parts as easily as to don riding skirt and sombrero. She has frequently played the part of a girl of the Western dance halls, and again has appeared as a gray haired grandmother with cap and knitting.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

A VALUABLE COLLECTION OF NEW PICTURES.

WE ARE indebted to the Variety Films Corporation of New York for a most valuable series of new films which cover a wide area in advanced educational work. This series while always interesting at any time, are especially so when classified as they may be for many distinctive purposes. They are at once Scenic, Industrial, Biological, Travel, Natural History and Geographical.

Upper Bavarian Mountain Lakes.

Scenes in Germany are exceedingly uncommon, the lists of scenics, while rich in many respects, have always been lacking in view of the fact that central Europe has been much neglected; this present series aims to overcome that defect and fill the vacancy always felt hitherto. These Bavarian Mountain Lakes take second place to none in the richness of their scenery, or the quiet dignity of their majestic grandeur. Although located at great heights their depth is often surprising and each lake seems to possess some historical value. The Walchen Lake, one of the most picturesque, is about 200 yards deep, the Schlier Lake, famous from the reason that the old-fashioned peasant theaters originated there. Chien Lake, with the romantic island of Fravenwärth, the inhabitants of which are fisher folk, and the Tegern Lake, well known as the most popular lake in Bavaria.

In the Land of the Hindoos.

Benares. Nowhere is religious fanaticism interwoven with daily living more than in India. However accustomed we may be to the habits and customs of these people, the present films reveal greater detail than any of their predecessors. Benares, the most holy city of the Hindoos, traditionized as not belonging to the earth, but held aloft by the God Siva perched upon one of the prongs of his Trident. The funeral pyre is well known, but this film shows the actual preparations of this earliest form of cremation. In detail the corpse is dipped in the river for the washing of purification, then surrounded with faggots which relatives ignite from flaming torches as they march round the pyre.

Religious fanatics doing penace is one of the details illustrated at length, showing how these poor people remain in attitudes of acute discomfort for hours and gives a thorough insight into the unfortunate religious customs of these people.

Fishing Expedition of Maharajah of Karputhala (Variety Film).

Delhi. The ancient place of residence of the Grand Mogul before the conquest of India. The noteworthy interest of this film is a fishing expedition by the Maharajah of Karputhala.

The procession to the place of sport is far from being an insignificant event when a dozen or more elephants are found necessary to convey the party to their destination.

The fishing is no tame affair, but rather one of frolic and excitement. The old story of fishes leaping into the boat is literally true here. Large schools of fish are brought together by means of nets drawn by natives in their canoe-like boats, when a sufficient number seem gathered together they are speared by the expert "fisher" and so great is the commotion among the fishes that they are seen leaping out of the water and many drop right in the boats, the "catch" being a prolific one.

A Ramble Through Hindu Villages.

The continuation of this series is of increasing interest as not only showing people and customs but also a close insight into their industrial pursuits and sports. Hindu farms are still very primitive, yet it is evident they are very productive and profitable. Hindu metal workers are famed the world over for their marvellous productions. When we become acquainted with the crude conditions under which they labor, their productions give proof of unusual artistic skill and ability.

Casting in Precious Metals (Variety).

The illustration shows the higher class workmen casting precious metal objects in small hand-made moulds which afterwards by expert workmanship become elaborate and expensive articles of Oriental matchlessness. The animal sports take the place of European athletics and games among the wealthier people, being a combination of hunting both of necessity and for pleasure in a land particularly adapted and by nature stocked for the occasion.

THE "NEDRA" COMPANY GOES TO THE BAHAMAS.

Edward Jose, who is producing for Pathe "Nedra," the play adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel of the same name, has taken a large company of some eighty players to Nassau in the Bahama Islands, where he will spend several weeks. Among the players with Mr. Jose are George Probert, Margaret Greene, Fania Marinoff and Craufurd Kent.

"THE HOUSE OF SCANDALS" IS NEW TITLE.

The Mutual Film Corporation's Masterpicture, entitled "The House of a Thousand Scandals," must be retitled as the result of an injunction granted in the Supreme Court of New York. The new title will be "The House of Scandals." This is a drama featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison and produced at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company. The story and plot are original and in no way an infringement.

Equitable Directors Active

Big Productions Under Way and More Being Planned—Some Popular Stars to Appear.

THE activities of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation are now producing wide-spread and far-reaching results. Five directors are busily engaged upon productions, with several other important functionaries assembling casts or revising stories preparatory to beginning work.

Marshall Farnum, responsible for "Wormwood" and other big, sensational productions, is directing the destinies of Alexandra Carlisle and her supporting cast in "Creeping Tides." This company hied itself away a short time ago to the mountains surrounding Gilboa, N. Y., in the very heart of the Catskills, where the preliminary stages for productional work had been done by the Equitable's traveling crew, which later journeyed to Block Island, R. I., where Charles Seay and a company, working with Muriel Ostriche at the head, are engaged in the first scenes of "The Fisher Girl."

Alexandra Carlisle.

William Sheer whose work in "The Regeneration" called forth exceptional praise, is playing opposite Miss Carlisle in Kate Jordan's vivid tale, "Creeping Tides."

Webster Cullison, who recently completed a highly sensational version of Paul Armstrong's play, "The Bludgeon," returned to New York last Saturday, accompanied by Katharine Kaelred and her supporting cast, from a ten days' stay at Hudson, N. Y., where many of the scenes to be shown in "Idols" were staged. Mr. Cullison and his cast of principals sailed on Wednesday for Bermuda, where a great many sets will be made, with the British Naval Station as a background. Permission for the co-operation of the British naval officials at the station has been granted. The "Idols" company will remain at Bermuda three weeks. The final scenes of "Idols" will be made at the Flushing Equitable studios.

At the Triumph headquarters Director Joseph Golden is working on the last few scenes of that concern's production of Edgar James's absorbing story "Justice," in which the noted dramatic player, Cyril Scott, will handle the principal role. "Justice," as transferred to the screen by the Triumph will lose none of its charms, and will gain greatly by the addition of a few counterplots inserted by the scenario staff, which will make the original script even more interesting.

Scene from "The Cowardly Way" (Equitable).

Henry Kolker, in "The Warning," a semi-allegorical fictional document, is in the preliminary stages under Director Golden. This feature will characterize the Triumph's units on the Equitable program the latter part of January.

Harry Pollard, formerly with Mutual, now a permanent adjunct of Equitable, is busily engaged at the Fifty-second street studio, assembling his cast to support Marguerite Fischer in her first Equitable production, "The Dragon," which promises to afford the former American Beauty star ample opportunity to show off her remarkable collection of new gowns and her unusual screen personality and talent to the best advantage.

Director John Ince, who completed "The Cowardly Way," with Florence Reed, last week, is working on his next production which, by the way, has not been named as yet, but which, from all indications, will be Richard Le Gallienne's "The Chain Invisible," with Robert Edeson as the star. The plan of allowing directors to select their own stories and players, as put in vogue by the Equitable, is working out so admirably that at times a great economical movement results from a director knowing well ahead his forthcoming three plays. Mr. Ince read no less than fourteen scripts and novels before selecting his next working document.

E. Mason Hopper, whose recent work with Thomas Wise in "A Ready Made Family" established him as an important screen figure, will start work at the Fifty-second street studio during the next week, gathering players to support Gail Kane in her first Equitable picture, "The Labyrinth."

Guy Coombs

GUY COOMBS, one of the best-known leading men on either the speaking stage or in motion pictures, who joined the Metro forces to play the lead with Mme. Petrova, the star in "My Madonna," produced by Popular Plays and Players, will be seen hereafter in feature productions of that corporation. Mr. Coombs is one of the "young veterans" of the silent drama and early was induced to desert the speaking stage for the pictures. For three years he was the leading man in the Kalem stock company, when he became the idol of thousands of picture fans. He spent one year directing productions at the Kalem studio. Incidentally, he is one of the few successful directors who prefers acting before the camera to directing productions behind it.

Guy Coombs.

Mr. Coombs makes his bow on the Metro program in "My Madonna," in which Mme. Petrova has the stellar role. In this five-part production, which is a picturization of a poem by the same name by Robert W. Service, Mr. Coombs has a part that is admirably suited to him. It is a strong, vigorous role in which Mr. Coombs is given apportunity to display his remarkable dramatic talents at their best.

When "My Madonna" was completed last week Mr. Coombs was immediately engaged for the leading male role in the Popular Plays and Players' forthcoming production, "Barbara Frietchie," in which little Mary Miles Minter will be featured. Mr. Coombs was elated with the part given him in this production, as it was in "soldier roles," while playing with the Kalem stock company, that he came into motion picture prominence.

PLAISETTY IN IMPORTANT TASKS.

Rene Plaisetty, the well-known young French-American director who has done some splendid work since his arrival here about a year ago, has been engaged by Harry Lambert, vice-president of the Mirror Film Company. He will begin work for this company on November 1. Until that time his services have been secured by the Lubin Company. Mr. Plaisetty will direct Raymond Hitchcock in a four-reel comedy.

Extraordinary Scenic Effect

Massive Tropical Scene, Weighing Twenty-seven Tons, Constructed for Vitagraph's "The Island of Surprise."

TECHNICAL DIRECTOR CHARLES CHAPMAN of the Vitagraph Company has just completed one of the largest and most beautiful tropical scenes ever staged by the Vitagraph Company. This scene, which represents a cave with three compartments and a rocky approach, looks like a transplanted section from one of the South Sea islands. It was built for the picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Island of Surprise," on which Director Paul Scardon is now at work, assisted by Eleanor Woodruff, Julia Swayne Gordon, Zena Keefe, William Courtenay, Charles Kent and Anders Randolf.

Tropical Scene Built for "The Island of Surprise."

Mr. Chapman and a corps of thirty workmen, including carpenters and expert workers in burlap and plaster of paris modeling, were engaged for four weeks on the construction of this mammoth set, which is forty feet high, one hundred feet wide and three hundred feet long. The burlap and plaster of paris were used in the construction of the sides and entrance of the cave and to reproduce huge rocks that weigh several tons apiece. Tropical plants, clinging vines, grass, shrubbery, trees that mask in the opening of the cave and lend atmosphere to the scene were brought from nearby woods and florists. Special boats were hired that made many trips after sea plants, while automobile trucks were continually running to and from the beach transporting sea weed, sand and other material necessary to give the scene the realism demanded. In the construction of the rocky approach to the cave huge boulders had to be built to rest on a superstructure strong enough to stage a battle between the three island castaways in the Brady story and a band of two hundred cannibals that were intent on their capture. In the construction of these boulders alone a hundred and seventy-five barrels of plaster of paris were used.

The entire scene was first modeled in clay, then cast in plaster of paris, put up in pieces, and joined together on a wooden frame. It took two tons of clay to fashion the original model. Mr. Chapman estimates the entire scene weighs in the neighborhood of twenty-seven tons and, besides being the largest of its kind ever staged, represents his conception of what kind of scenes will be required as backgrounds for all feature pictures in the near future.

METRO PICTURES IN CANADA.

Canadian rights to the famous Metro program have been contracted for with Metro Pictures, Limited, of Montreal, according to an announcement made by Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation. The Canadian organization was formed by Herbert Lubin, the managing director of the new concern, and is backed by a group of financial men, including Paul Galibert, one of the largest leather manufacturers in Canada, and a steamship owner; A. N. Brodeur, vice-president of the Eastern Canada Fisheries Company; Arthur Ecrement, ex-member of Parliament, and one of the leading notaries of Canada; B. H. Brown, president and general manager of the Prudential Trust Company, one of the largest trust companies of the Dominion. Hal. Macd. Brown, son of Mr. B. H. Brown, is secretary-treasurer of the Metro Pictures, Limited, and the Prudential Trust Company are its fiscal agents.

Mr. Lubin is well known to the trade, having very successfully conducted the Allied Features, Inc., as president, for the past two years. The formation of Metro Pictures, Limited, was worked out by Mr. Lubin, with the idea of practically reorganizing motion picture trade conditions in Canada. When he was in New York last week he told some of his ambitious plans to a representative of this paper.

MARGARET GREENE THE NEW PATHE STAR.

Margaret Greene, who is being featured in "Nedra," the Pathe Gold Rooster Play produced by Edward Jose from George Barr McCutcheon's well known novel, is one of the better known of Broadway's younger stars. She is a New York girl and though only twenty-three years old, has held a series of remarkably fine engagements. She starred in "Tipping the Winner" at the Longacre theater; was leading woman in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" at the Astor theater; leading woman in "Broadway Jones" with George M. Cohan; leading woman in "Ready Money" at the Maxine Elliott theater; leading woman with Cyril Scott in "The Fatted Calf"; leading woman in "Common Law," and starred with Willard Mack at the Palace theater.

British Notes.

THE problem of distribution is the most serious one that faces any undertaking dependent upon the public circulation of its wares. That is an axiom of newspaperdom costing in its fullest significance many years' and expensive experiments to realize. And the only solution, the railroad systems, was—as identically in the case of film distribution—the only reliable connecting medium between the printing office and the public. A mild foretaste of what would happen in the extraordinary event of railroads being swept out of existence was provided by the railway strike of a few years back. Since that eventuality, nearly every newspaper of importance has maintained some reserve resources, some standby in case of emergency, with the result that a number of the private garages of our larger publishing offices are a revelation in road transport. The moving picture industry at that day was too infantile in England to fully foreshadow its gravity. In the first place, the interruption was not absolute and, fortunately, of short duration, and, secondly, motor vehicles were obtained in the majority of cases for the asking. Today, however, conditions are vastly different. Every spare motor vehicle is snapped up by the government before it has time to leave the makers' works. The railroads, too, are virtually under government control, and, couple this with a remote possibility of a colliers' strike, the film exchanges of the industrial districts of Lancashire, Yorkshire and Staffordshire are to be commended in co-operating to support an independent film distributive medium. The first trip was made the other week and the success of the initial journeys is encouraging the promoters to extend their field of operations. Hereabouts the rule is for moving picture theaters to change their program only twice each week, Monday and Thursday. The road system begins its operations by the collection each Sunday morning by light, speedy commercial vans of those films having finished their runs the night previous. Experiments in the Manchester area show it is practicable with one vehicle to serve two hundred exhibitors, consequent, of course, upon each being situated upon the same route. By noon the used films, some from shows twenty and thirty miles distant, are back in the respective hiring establishments, quickly re-sorted, re-directed and similarly distributed before nightfall to their new destinations. For the mid-week change the plan is repeated with greater hustle and done through the night. Radiating in southeast Lancashire alone, it is hoped to install twelve delivery vans to accommodate exhibitors along the principal roads. Obviously the system has its drawbacks, the risk of mechanical breakdowns for instance, but the great point in its favor is the delivery of films straight into the exhibitors' hands from the exchange. Many disappointments have been occasioned, not through the railroad companies' failure to despatch films, but through neglect in delivery and, in particular, through the carelessness of porters in dumping down film cases among less urgent luggage to be warehoused and forgotten.

Mr. Arthur H. Gore, a lieutenant in the Territorial Force, and previously a prominent player in the St. Margaret studio stock company of the London Film Company, was killed a fortnight ago in Gallipoli. Before acting for the camera, Mr. Gore spent considerable time upon the spoken stage. His most recent appearance before the camera was in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Chaplin is still the veritable breath of life to some of the Sunday papers. The newest journalistic incursion within his precincts is a special cable on Saturday from Chicago saying just what Charlie was doing on the previous day. The new film circulating system of the Essanay Company, which it appears was declared in this country a month ahead of its official announcement in New York, will be drafted into being at the end of the present month. In a very gallant attempt to make the new scheme as plain as possible to everybody, Mr. G. K. Spoor has been regardless of time, trouble and expense and in face of the severe and bitter criticisms levelled at the principles involved he has made it impossible for any exhibitor following its inauguration closely to be able to say afterwards that he misunderstood the issue. The last two weeks have seen accredited representatives of Mr. Spoor propounding the pros and cons of the impending change with provincial film men and exhibitors on their own doorsteps. Perhaps some of them are being converted if they are not members of the Exhibitors' Association. To this body, more than to any other, the reaction of the Chicago firm is inexorable miasma, and at the last meeting of the executive committee the following was appended to the lengthy list of censures upon the Essanay Company: "The executive committee of the Exhibitors' Association resolve herewith not to show any Essanay films until such time that firm announces publicly in the trade press that it has abandoned its present policy, and the committee urges all members of the association to support it in this attitude and withdraw any offer they may have made." A mass meeting of exhibitors is being convened in London at an early date to further debate the point.

Exhibitors in Swansea, South Wales—and the proviso also embraces ordinary theaters and music halls, have been burdened with a new form of censorship. Before posters can be despatched to the billposting companies for display on the boardings, they must now be submitted to the eagle-eyed scrutiny of the chief officer of the law.

London Trade Topics.

The materialization of Mr. Adolph Zukor's tempting offer to Hall Caine, the novelist and playwright, when he was last over on this side, seems to have exceeded the anticipations of the most sanguine. The Famous Players' version of "The Eternal City" was initially unspooled to the trade at the Marble Arch Pavilion to an audience including many notables. One incident in this film, by the way, that may very probably excite criticism if it follows the precedent of the stage play is the introduction, as an impersonated character, of the Pontiff. J. D. Walker, who handles Famous Players Company's releases in England, has had special musical accompaniments composed to supply to theaters booking "The Eternal City."

The associated, if not exactly identical, Universal and Trans-Atlantic Companies are now working upon genuine reciprocal principles. Omitting the fruits of Herbert Brenon's visit, three years ago, it is safe to say that the first Trans-Atlantic-Universal production from Britain has just been despatched to your shores and is by name "Hard Times," after the novel by Dickens. This is an actual production of the Trans-Atlantic Company, but it is also out for buying U. S. A. rights of meritorious contemporary work. "My Old Dutch," a most extraordinary piece of cinema sentimentalism, is about to be shipped under the Trans-Atlantic banner, consigned to 1600 Broadway, New York. It embodies a strong picturesque story, coherently bound up by the Hepworth Company with Albert Chevalier and Florence Turner in the leads. With perhaps a single exception, it is the British production of the year, and if, as we are often told, the American public appreciates tales of old London, of love and life in the east end, and of Cockney revels at "'Appy 'Ampstead," the Hepworth picture will not be found wanting in realism.

Frohman's "Builder of Bridges" is another new arrival of the week and its photography in general, but the spectacular engineering scenes in particular, have profoundly impressed the critics. When in 1909 Sutro's play was produced at the St. James theater, London, it was the dramatic event of the year. The visualized version, which has been sold as an exclusive to a Cardiff firm, should be a good second.

The laxity of a number of American film exchanges in disposing of copies of feature releases lays open to unscrupulous buyers of second-hand stock an opportunity to occasionally score a mean advantage. Film smuggling is by no means a new discovery; it existed years ago, but when a scheme is mooted for its exploitation as a legitimate commercial venture and inexperienced people are invited to invest their capital in a syndicate which (vide a prospectus mailed to the writer) "can purchase copies of the newest American films at one-tenth the release price in London," it certainly seems high time the damper was applied. The "modus" of this new company—it emanates from Dublin—is to appoint their own agents in New York and Chicago who will do the buying. "It is a well-known and invariable fact," proceeds the bait-sheet, "that all American films are issued for exhibition in the United States many months and often years before they are ever seen in Europe. * * * Our agents will thus be in the unique position of being able to ship regular supplies of the newest films at prices below the bare cost of the celluloid and well in advance of the arrival in this country of the usual trade stocks." True enough, the agents will be in a unique position, particularly if they get caught.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

George Holt

SOME photoplayers are easy to interview. Some are so busy that they never can be seen. I found one interesting gentleman at the Western Vitagraph studio in Santa Monica whom I wanted to talk with at length, but for many weeks he was always busy and in a hurry to change costumes or his makeup. Finally I got to him one afternoon when he was free and believe me he is an interesting person. He is George Holt, who specializes in playing "heavies."

George Holt.

Mr. Holt is from Massachusetts. He was born in Fall River. He is a husky New Englander, and has a mind as prodigious as his physical powers. He was brought up a thorough American boy, and attended public schools in his home town. It was the desire of his father to have him become a great electrical engineer, so after finishing school he went to Toronto to learn the business. He smiled and said that he was a poor mechanic, and that after eighteen months of concentration on his studies he found that all he knew about electricity was the proper way to turn on and off the lights in his home! Soon he gave up the idea of ever becoming an Edison, and proceeded to Detroit where he fell in with a colony of actors. Then he became interested, later going to New York where he played his first engagement. He was the bellboy in "The Mysterious Mr. Bugle," with Annie Russell as the star. Mr. Holt was then still in his teens, and was on the job when it came to learning anything about theatrical work. The period following was spent in stock and traveling companies. His first worth while heavy part was in the role of Juan Lobos, with Edwin Arden, in a vaudeville sketch called "Captain Velvet." After he so cleverly played this villainous part, he concentrated on this line of acting, and is still doing it. He thinks that his "fattest" and largest part was as Bradley in Frederick Thompson's production of "Via Wireless."

Lubin first released a picture in which George Holt played. That was in 1908. He used to travel during the winter with a legitimate company, then work in Lubin pictures during the summer vacations. He came west with the Universal and stayed with that concern for a year. He intended going back east, but thought he would try the Vitagraph before leaving. He saw Rollin S. Sturgeon at the old Vitagraph cottage-studio, and was cast for the hypnotist in "The Spell," featuring Mary Charleson and Edwin August. His work was so well done that Sturgeon immediately signed him for stock. He played a prominent part in "The Passing of Joe Mary," one of the best western pictures ever made in the western studio of the Vitagraph. In "Daddy's Soldier Boy" he played the main part. "Captain Alvarez," with William D. Taylor featured, was another vehicle for Mr. Holt. In this big feature he was seen as Turso, the spy, and this was the picture that put him on the map of the moving picture business. Some of his other notable Vitagraph pictures were "The Sagebrush Gal" and "The Chalice of Courage," now under release.

Mr. Holt's one ambition is to play a part equal to that of the leading man. He laments that he generally gets killed before the picture is well under way, or that he is introduced late in the story and then executed before he has had a fair chance; yet I notice that he always gets a big hand for his work.

In private life Mr. Holt is the opposite of the villain that he seems to be on the screen. He is a proud daddy, having a bouncing eighteen months' old baby boy and a little wife that helps him in his work. He is a real man, with athletic habits such as swimming, and other outdoor sports. He has a bungalow overlooking the placid Pacific and everyone who comes to visit him is invited to enjoy a plunge into the cool waters of beautiful Santa Monica Bay. When not working, he goes promenading with George Junior, and if it is night time he is sure to be in a good seat in some picture theater, for that is his business and his pastime, and he is as regular a fan as the most ardent picture lover.

MYRTLE STEDMAN STILL WITH MOROSCO.

The New York offices of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company most emphatically deny the report printed in various papers that Myrtle Stedman, the popular star who has been appearing under this banner since its inception, has left to join the forces of another producing company.

Miss Stedman is at present actively engaged at the studios of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in Los Angeles with whom she has a long term contract. A telegraphic dispatch from Los Angeles states that Miss Stedman has never had any dealings whatever with the company with which she is supposed to have signed.

Miss Stedman's success, particularly since she joined the Oliver Morosco forces, has resulted in her receiving many tempting offers from competitive producers, but in the case of the most recent announcement in connection with her acceptance of another contract she states that she does not even know the company involved.

Some of Miss Stedman's latest triumphs on the screen have been evident in such productions as "The Wild Olive," "Kilmeny," "Peer Gynt" and others of equal merit. The next production in which this splendid actress will appear for Oliver Morosco will be "Jane," a comedy by W. H. Lestocuque, in which Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant make their screen debut.

Myrtle Stedman.

PICTURES IN NORMAL SCHOOL.

English classes at the big state Normal School, Monmouth, Oregon, have added motion pictures to the regular curriculum. Twelve Kleine Features were rented through the Seattle office of that institution last week after an inspection of more than a hundred reels.

"Anthony and Cleopatra" will open the program which includes "Quo Vadis?" "Julius Caesar," "Spartacus," "Othello," "Vendetta," and "The Last Days of Pompeii."

KLEINE ENGAGES GALAXY OF COMEDIANS.

The list of professional fun-makers in George Kleine's comedy company headed by Bickel and Watson is growing steadily. Already it includes, in addition to Bickel and Watson, almost every type known to the American theatre. Recently the famous vaudeville team of Crimmons and Gore were added, following the engagement of Snitz Edwards and Maxfield Moree.

REGENT THEATER OPENS.

The Regent theater, Norwalk, Conn., which cost $100,000 to build, was lately opened by Samuel Kantor. The house is given over to the exhibition of feature productions. Mr. Kantor is a man with years of picture experience at the back of him.

Matters of Type.

THE A-Muse-U theater, Clinton, Ia., sends in a new program for comment. It is four pages, about five by eight, white paper and black ink. With the exception of the back page it looks rather bleak because the printer does not know how to lay his type. But even before that, we would suggest that the page is a trifle too long for the width. The extra inch and quarter over a seven-inch length is not much as a measurement, but it makes the sheet look out of proportion.

The front page is bordered with Paramount cuts top and bottom and part of the sides with rule work to make up the gaps. Planted in the center of the panel is a cut of the house just two inches wide. It looks lonesome with as much white space as there is cut—an inch each way. Above this is a type title two and a quarter inches wide. The face is regular where it should have been not only slightly expanded, but the letters themselves should have been spaced so that the title approached the edges. Then the word "theater," just below, should have been set in a smaller point or else have been taken from the title. At present the two lines are so close together that the lesser kills the greater. Then, too, the words "Paramount Pictures" rise to the top of the space. This is a cut, presumably supplied by the company, and it looks so much better than the type name that the house title is killed both top and bottom.

Since the house is more important than the pictures it shows, the house title should rise to the top, but reset to let it comfortably fill the width without crowding. Then below should be the statement that the Paramount pictures are used. A larger house cut can come below this and still leave about three inches for some eight or ten point house talk, possibly that at present appearing on the back page, but set as a paragraph and not as display advertisement. Then the back page could be used for notes.

The inside pages are given to a lot of undated titles of films to be shown during August. In each of the eight corners is a cut of some player. The cuts are too large to be used as corner pieces and throw the page out of balance. The titles are set in a twelve point condensed Gothic bold. They can be read only with care. There is no reason for the use of condensed type, unless it is all the printer has, and that is no reason whatever. There is plenty of room for a larger point and a wider letter. As it stands the titles are straggled down the center like a minstrel troupe in a one night stand parade.

Were there enough cuts to completely frame the two page space as a single page; the space thus enclosed being set in two columns, the effect would be decidedly good, but as it stands, the make up is childish. With the material at hand it would have been better to have brought the four cuts from the back page to form bands across top and bottom of the pages. This could have been done very nicely and to the betterment of all three pages. The present arrangement is childish. The names of the companies are given in a light face larger than the title of the story. This is another error in type selection. The title should have the largest point and the maker's name be set slightly smaller. It would have been better to have run the advertising more on the lines of reading matter, but bringing the titles out to the margin and letting the rest be set in hanging indentation, something in this manner:

Stolen Goods—

> LASKY—(Paramount Service.) A film version of the famous French play that has set the nation thinking. Done under masterly direction with a cast of stars headed by Blanche Sweet.

Something like this would have been better, and it could be done in the space at command.

Late, But—

It may be a litle late to appeal to the parents, but even now this clipping will be useful during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays and can be tucked away for next summer. It is from the Colonial, Haverhill, Mass.:

> YOU WERE A KID ONCE.
> Until school opens again the matinees at the Colonial are the kiddies delight. A program here brings smiles to the face and sparkles to the eyes of the little ones. Don't forget that you were once a little boy or a little girl yourself and try to remember what joy would swell your heart when father or mother would say: "Here, youngster, take this money and see the show at the theater." Gosh! you couldn't wait to eat your dinner. Well, you're grown up now; what are you going to do for that youngster at home?

This is taken from a throwaway done in very black ink on light yellow paper. The paper is too long for regular use and too closely set, but here they announce a change in service and make a telling point when they call attention to the fact that the man who handles this service in their territory was formerly directly interested in the house. The ink is too greasy and the printer made a rather poor job of the printing, but the type is well laid and the big lines come up nicely.

Climbing.

The Stramco Post, the house organ of the Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala., is coming right along. A changed front page gives a vastly better effect. R. B. Wilby, the Manager-Editor, takes his editorial space to tell about the leasing of the Knickerbocker theater in New York. This may seem to be a waste of good space, but Mr. Wilby is a real editor and knows that this engagement means much to the picture business all over the country and he spreads the news that his own patrons may gain increased respect for the pictures. That is real advertising, and is better than a puff for the local house.

Could Have His Own.

F. P. Hale sends in some bills for comment and says that as they have no daily paper in Dunn, N. C., where his Bijou is located, this is the only way he can get to the people. Mr. Hale should try the Reid scheme of running his own daily paper if there is none in town.

He sends in three throwaways all of which carry too much type for this style of advertisement. Of the three the one for The Madcap Queen of Gredshoffen is the best, save that the title should be in larger display even should this necessitate setting in two lines. Even so simple an expedient as running a bit of two point rule beneath the title would have helped to throw up the line. In laying out flash paper it is necessary first to get the big lines well displayed and then fill in with descriptive matter, but not to give too much. One bill carries eighteen lines of all capitals. Few probably took the trouble to read it through and so the effect is lost. It is never a good plan to use more than a line or two of capitals in combination. The upper and lower case makes for ease in reading and nowhere should reading be made easier than in something that is merely glanced at.

And in throwaways there should always be some one line that will catch the eye quickly and hold attention until the interest of the reader is gained. One bill announces a policy of features on Friday. It merely tells about them. If the paper had read

is NOT

the person getting the sheet would want to know why the statement is made and he will read to find that Friday is not unlucky because on that day the pictures will be the best of the week. Attention is gained by challenging a widely accepted belief. It is natural to want to answer back.

Another Old Friend.

The Arcade theater, Tientsin, now has a sister house in Premierland. Both houses have been showing the Lucille Love series and booming it with a thoroughness that characterizes all their work. Three and four handbills for a single number is not uncommon and as an avant courier a letter was sent in facsimile handwriting announcing the coming of "the girl of mystery." It carries a cut of Miss Cunard with the face masked, and this seems to have been adopted as a sort of trademark. Evidently eternal hustling is the price of business in China, and the Arcade management assuredly knows how to hustle.

Gets Opinions.

The American theater, Chicago, a vaudeville house, prints a blank line under the billing of each act and invites its patrons to return them to the management with comment on the turns. This would work well with the pictures, giving a line on the taste of the patrons and adding to their interest.

Neatly Done.

Pingrey and Williams, of the Princess, Neodesha, Kan., send in number two of their four page program, which offers a neat arrangement of the program proper. This runs on page three and is ten point cap titles and eight point description with a hanging indentation. The program runs three columns wide and each day gets half of a column. Each day is dated and each title carries a few lines of description, not taken from the manufacturer's synopsis but written in a chatty style. They have an editorial page, but no editorial, and a front page with general film news. The back page is sold to a local dry goods store. They might say a little more about the house, since they have the space at their command. A two hundred word editorial each week on some feature of the house would help a lot toward confirming the fans in their fancy.

Good Work.

M. E. Lash, of the Grand, Searcy, Ark., is one of those who realize that something besides film titles can be advertised to help business and he sends in a very interesting advertisement, two columns wide and eight inches deep that reads:

> WHAT OTHERS SAY AND ARE DOING.
> THE GRACE M. E. CHURCH OF ELGIN, ILL., HAS INSTALLED A MOTION PICTURE MACHINE.
> Rev. George Gable says: "This innovation follows the conviction that the church thereby may better interest the public. Sunday and most week nights will be free, and occasional offerings will be taken."
> The First Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, is furnishing motion pictures to the people, with great success. An admission fee of 5 and 10 cents is charged, with all high school pupils admitted free.
> CHURCH AND SCHOOL MANAGE PICTURE SHOW.
> The Parent Teacher Association of the Rock Hill school of St. Louis is giving the people in the neighborhood a moving picture show of 4 or 5 reels twice a week. The price of admission being enough to cover the expenses. Only those with good reports may attend and it is proving a big success.
> KANSAS PROFESSOR TESTIFIES TO VALUE OF SHOWS.
> Frederick Winship of the English department of the Kansas State School of Manhattan, Kansas, says: "The moving pictures are doing more good in every way than the majority of people think."
> California Senate provides bill for use of moving pictures in schools, Board of Education to open bureau to provide films, slides and everything needed, at lowest prices. Will make marked advance in educational efficiency.
> WHY? WHY?
> If pictures are so bad, will churches and schools all over the United States install them?
> WHY? WHY?
> THE GRAND THEATER SHOWS PICTURES ONLY THAT HAVE BEEN PASSED BY THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORS.

No hint is given as to the reasons for the advertising, but it may be supposed that the advertisement was inserted to combat some local prejudice, though just on general principles this is good work for the house as well as the pictures. With the two dollar picture at hand and the advance made in many directions, it is a good plan to force your patrons to realize that the pictures are by no means what they were ten years ago. And you'll notice that Mr. Lash does not use the word "movies." It is a detestable word and a handicap.

But No Dates.

Dave Seymour, who calls himself "Inciter of Public Interest," for the Pontiac, Saranac Lake, N. Y., sends in a nice looking program with the days run in the margin, but no dates other than the inclusive top line. The days should not only be dated, but a display instead of body type should be used; not an over ornamented face but a clear and elegant one.

Each One Better.

Number seven of the Stramco Post is the best yet. The house advertisements now carry cut heads instead of type, linear border replaces the straight rule and the printer makes very effective use of Bullfinch ornaments in forming up the front page. If you want to use a cut that looks lonesome on a front page, frame it in Bullfinch, using both characters, and you cannot go far astray. Mr. Wilby is getting some very pretty results. But it is in the text that the greater improvement shows, for Mr. Wilby is an author-manager and writes pulling chat. He does not try to tell too much about the house, but he has plenty of room and fills it nicely. Stuff like this makes friends of the patrons:

> The seats in the Strand are 30 inches apart, where 27 inches is the usual distance between rows. That loses us some capacity, but it also makes unnecessary the continual rising to let people pass, a disturbing factor in a carelessly planned house. It is just another of those little details looked after in the effort to make you as comfortable as possible when you visit this house.
> Our object is not to see how many people we can "handle" in a single day, but to see how enjoyable we can make things for those people who do come. And for that reason, too, no picture has been or ever will be run at more than its proper speed in the Strand. Nor, for the matter of that, at the Plaza or the Orpheum.

Overgood.

Robert Israel, of the Norwood, Brooklyn, sends in his house program for comment. It is on a buff paper four by nine inches, printed in a deep brown. A tint ink is used for a second printing on the cover, giving a faint pink design. The money for this second printing is wasted. A simple decorative effect can be gained with one printing that will do as well, if not better. The cover carries no type other than the house name, address and times of performance. The back page is blank. It would not be quite as elegant, perhaps, were the back to be taken for a series of chats about pictures and the house, but done in a fancy face it would not look obtrusive and would bring a return.

Inside, the program for the week runs on the second page and the underlines on the third. It would be even better to move the house talk to the second page, the program to the third and put the underline on page four. The present arrangement of type is good and should be adhered to.

With the program comes an attractive time table on yellow paper printed in brown. It announces a tour of South America by the Kroonland and lists the various "stops" which are the Paramount travel films. It is a better job than the program because the stock takes the ink better. Brown is not a handy color to work, as a rule, and does not come clean from the types. Mr. Israel writes that they alternate between blue and brown.

Got the Business.

Fred G. Wright, of the Dreamland, Linton, Ind., sends in a postcard of an impromptu band that paraded with a placarded auto. He writes: "However crude it may seem to you, I played to capacity business." That is the test of any scheme. If it makes good, it is a good scheme.

Likes a Weekly.

Percy L. Smith, of the Empire, Montgomery, Ala., writes:

> I have noticed with much interest lately several comments in regard to the theater weeklies. I beg to call your attention to the enclosed weekly that is issued by us. This is issued and put in the lobby on Thursday night of each week containing the next week's program.
> We have a mailing list and same is sent out only on request. As you will notice, besides carrying the program we carry a page devoted to plays and players and a page of squibs, and each week we run a story concerning one of the stars, or a story regarding the manufacturing of pictures.
> The writer has been in the moving picture business as, no doubt, you will recall, for several years, and after making a careful study of the advertising end, I have decided that this is the best medium of advertising. At the same time, I don't think that these programs or weeklies should carry any advertisements other than the theater, as I am inclined to think that it depreciates their value when they are filled with commercial advertising.

The use or avoidance of foreign advertising is purely a matter of personal opinion with a majority in favor of its use in moderation. Mr. Smith might take a page or two of advertisements and get out an eight page instead of the four he now offers.

His issue is a four page nine by twelve inches. The front carries a large cut and the second page the program with each day a display advertisement. Six point rule separates the days. The third page is made up of film talk and the back page is more gossipy. Ten point is used for body type and the pages are well made up except for a border that is rather too fancy. Two point rule would be better or a hair line double rule. It is a clean and business-like sheet.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Appraising Multiple Reels.

THEME and crises, rather than footage, should be the standard of measurement in judging the multiple reel story. Too often it is footage rather than theme that determines the release length.

Given a theme of a certain definite importance, that theme should develop an approximate number of dramatic situations. The more important the theme the more numerous these situations or crises. So well does this work out in competent hands that from five to seven crises can be counted upon for each reel of story, and given a proper theme these crises may be so arrayed in plotting that the more important events happen at about the end of each division of the story.

The theme that presents a single climax and perhaps three minor crises, the bulk of the development being given over to demonstrating the premise, is not worth the footage. It has the material for a one reel story, perhaps, with the action that requires two or three. Almost invariably it will be found that the story suffers in order that argument germane to the theme but not to the story may be presented. In other words, the story becomes a tract and not a story at all. It is a preachment and not an entertainment, or a succession of "if's" with but a single answer.

This does not mean, of course, that a certain theme must carry with it a certain number of crises. It means that a theme of sufficient importance to demand three thousand feet in its showing, should be so developed as to present these crises. The theme may be a strong one and yet so developed that the telling is worth but a single thousand feet. If to one thousand feet of plot action is added three thousand feet of padding, the result is not a real four-reel release, but a one-reel story released in four parts. The theme is sufficiently ample for four reels and can carry with it a sufficient number of crises to warrant the length of action, but if these crises are absent, mere footage will not count. Make certain that your theme is a four or six-reel theme or a two or three reeler, then make certain that you keep the action up.

In stretching a telegraph line poles are placed at regular distances for the double purpose of supporting the weight of the wire and preventing sag. If poles were three times as far apart as at present, fewer poles would be needed, but the wire would sag so that more would be required and the strain put upon each pole would be so great that the additional weight during a sleet storm would pull down the lines. A story is much the same as a telegraph line. The wire of plot must be sustained by the prop of crisis or it will sag, if not actually fall.

Do Not Mix Well.

Three well known authors lately have written that their stories are now being turned down because of their photoplay work. "Too much like a photoplay," was the last comment of an editor who, not so very long ago, used to take about 90 per cent. of our own fiction work, and almost the same words were used by one of the best judges of fiction in the country only a couple of months ago about a story offered by a better known writer.

In the very nature of things the writing of photoplays will develop, consciously or otherwise, a terse, graphic style that utterly lacks the fluency of fiction and those who try for both the fiction and the photoplay market must use extreme care in writing fiction if they would hope to sell.

This really is one of the reasons why there are so few genuinely good fiction authors turning their attention to photoplay. Most of these are in touch with the editors and know the situation. They are told the reason for the non-acceptance of work from other authors whose products used to be in demand, and they avoid writing photoplays themselves until such time as the remuneration will at least enable them to equal their present incomes.

It may be that in the course of time the photoplay will rob magazine editors of some of their pet writers, but not until the writers are given some reasonable assurance that their new field can be made to pay as well as writing for the magazines.

But as a silver lining to the literary cloud, it may be said that photoplay work, in spite of its lack of dialogue, but because of its lessons in the need for action, leads a short cut to stage plays.

And it is not alone because the photoplay writer is taught the value of action that stage success may come. He is taught, also, that photoplay is but the translation of real human beings to the stage. When he comes to write plays he will avoid "hifalutin'" stories and the stilted dialogue that goes with unnatural characters and try to make his players human beings.

Stationery.

Buy your stationery from your local man, or, if you are remote from a stationer, from a department store in the nearest large town. Do not send to the concerns that offer to sell you an "assortment" for a dollar. One of these sets lists one hundred sheets of paper and twenty-five each of ten and nine envelopes. Paper of the kind generally sent runs from sixty cents to a dollar for a box of five hundred sheets. For a dollar you can get as good a paper as you need. Envelopes (they should be tens and elevens) cost from ten to thirty-five cents a hundred. The cost of shipping, in case you order from your nearest large town, would be less than fifteen cents. Less than double the investment will give you four times as much material. More than that, you know precisely what you will get, for your stationer will show you samples, and an inquiry to a department store will bring you samples.

Another Revisionist.

One of the more recent revision and sales agencies bobs up in a small California town. The most interesting feature of the pamphlet he sends out is his offer to supply the addresses of two buying concerns if you wish to handle the script direct. The cost for the two addresses is half a dollar, but the intimation is that these two addresses will be those of the companies most likely to buy the author's style of story. Really these chaps should arrange to sell a few plays for their patrons in order that the aspirants may have the money for the different stingers.

Bombs and Things.

Has it struck you yet that the gas bomb idea would make a fine story? You might make a comedy out of it and change the chlorine to tobacco smoke to be thrown into the trenches of an anti-smoking society of you might use a bomb to get the hero out of the way for the time being or to extinguish the villain for keeps. There are lots of ways that you can use the bomb without writing a war story. You think it will be brand new, not knowing that bomb stories started to come into the studios within two weeks after their use was begun.

Most of the phases of the war have been utilized, both as war stories and as suggestions for other themes, but most of them have been done to death. It may be possible to write stories that give no offense to the partisans of either side. It may be possible to write stories that do not suggest the war, but it is seldom possible to sell stories having war even for a remote suggestion simply because so many stories have been done already that editors are afraid to take any through danger of duplication.

Nix on H. S. M.

There seems to be a fad at the moment to offer scripts in which the devil comes to earth in various disguises in search of new victims. He becomes everything from a minister to a man about town according to the inventiveness of the author, but always with the result that he books many souls for his kingdom through the special iniquity of the trade or profession he follows. Most of these start in the infernal regions to properly establish His Majesty, involving a production cost out of proportion to the result, and none of them seem to have appealed strongly to editors.

Stories of this type belong to one of the forbidden classes. They are easy to think out but difficult to make interesting and inoffensive. It is better to keep away from such.

Questions.

A number of writers have, in asking for advice, suggested that they have hesitated in writing because their question would seem absurd to anyone who knew the answer and that they would be ridiculed. No question that has a bearing on the writing of photoplays and that seems to be asked in good faith is either too trivial or too often repeated. We are always glad to reply, even to the question as to how many scenes make a reel, but we do make confession that we would rather answer more questions on matters of playwriting and receive fewer that want to know what companies will take a particular type of play. Even if you do not actually need help, send in nice technical points, but please do not send in synopses or full plays. These will not be handled.

Two or More Leaders.

"Is it ever permissible to use two cut in leaders in a single scene?" demands a correspondent. It is permissible but seldom advisable, but when it will get over the story better than any other way, then it cannot be objected to. In Lubin's recent "Queenie of the Nile," three leaders and two visions are used in what is practically one scene. The scene virtually gives the entire situation in a nutshell. A physician engaging a man for the household of a harmless lunatic explains that his patient is as crazy as she is rich and is very rich. At once a vision suggests violence. He adds that she is all right so long as she is humored, and again a vision suggests the meaning of the title. A third speech explains that she thinks she is Cleopatra and the employee elect is to be her Antony. In the original this also had a vision, but the film was too long and this was cut out as unnecessary. With about fifteen feet of leader, the entire situation was made more clear than could be done with a succession of leaders, each to its own scene, therefore it was permissible. The visions served somewhat as a break to the scene, but they were not used to break with, but because, following the leaders they could amplify the idea and not only explain the situation but suggest the frame of mind in which the hero approached the position.

An excess of cut-ins should be employed only when they will save more elaborate explanation in a succession of scenes.

Egotism and—

We have just recuperated from a call from a script writer. He came by invitation on our idea that perhaps a chat might help him along, but apparently he did not want to talk the writing of plays, but the writing of his plays. He wanted to tell plots and have them passed on instead of talking about how to plot, and he solemnly laid upon our desk two synopses. Both were poor and old. "This is mine," he announced, taking up one of the sheets. "This," he continued, "was released by American two months after they sent mine back."

Even then we did not perceive his meaning and we were startled when he added, "of course you can see that both are alike." We could not. They were no more alike than the facts that Sam Smith had ham for breakfast and John Jones had had bacon and eggs. Both were breakfasts, but there the resemblance stopped. And yet this man is firmly convinced that American steals stories not alone because they stole his but because a friend of his had one stolen also that was precisely like the story as released. We did not see this second case of theft, but we did not have to. Now and then American, like the rest of the companies, do release an old theme. They probably used a theme that had been sent into them a hundred times, and yet the story was not taken from any one of these, because it antedated the formation of the American company. As a matter of fact American is unusually nice in its dealings with authors and the theft charges were pure egotism. The American had to deal with a rock established in childish memory as a tryst. The other used a flower as a fetish. The author could not realize that literally thousands of others had woven romances around roses. Therefore the rock became a rose and a steal.

The longer a man writes stories the less certain is he that he and he alone can evolve an idea. It is only the very new author who thinks that he and he alone can think of a certain idea. Ten days in any studio will show him that there are certain types of stories that come along as regularly as the mail bag comes from the post office, and every author "knows" that any story in the least like his own must have been stolen from him because it could be obtained nowhere else. It is egotism that hurts, that holds back advancement, because an ambitious aspirant is utterly useless until he realizes that he is more apt to be an unconscious thief than the victim of other thieves.

Business of Smiling.

A Chicago photoplay critic is sending out a letter soliciting business in which he offers to tell you of your faults, correct your technique, tell you of the market and criticise twenty-five scripts, all for ten dollars a year. And two of his letters have been sent to men in editorial positions. When he brags of his pull, he should at least know the names of the men he is supposed to be doing business with.

Building.

Probably the figures from one to ninety-nine are written and printed several million times a day, each business day. Probably the figures from one to thirty are written more often than those of higher value because these appear in the date of each letter. Right now 1915 is written more frequently than any other combination of four figures because this is the numerals of this year. The figures from one hundred to one thousand are frequently written. The same holds good in lesser degree for the figures between the thousand and the million. Beyond that, the seven to ten figure combinations are less frequently used and it is probable that some twelve to fifteen figure combinations never have been written down. Perhaps this is the first time in the history of the world that the sum of 136,975,953,421 has even been expressed in figures because sums that large are generally expressed in "round" numbers.

Now suppose that you have written the story of the girl who was stolen by the gypsies and later returns to her own. You are writing in two figures. Add that before her restoration she has married a gypsy sweetheart. You have added a third figure. You have reached a sum less frequently used. Add that the gypsy queen is jealous of her dual good fortune and seeks to keep her out of her rights, and the story becomes more unusual because the plot is less frequently used. So you may keep on adding and each addition takes you into a higher class just as 10,627 is less frequently written than the 27.

In other words a combination of plot factors will raise the value of your story, so add plot factors until you get an unusual sum, but remember that the figures written above are too large to be comprehended and so do not add so many plot factors that the story becomes too large for the mind to grasp.

Unusual.

In one of the late magazines Rudyard Kipling has a war story. Naturally it would be supposed that he would write thrilling descriptions of battles and the aftermath of battles; better than most others, perhaps, but on the same lines. It is not on that that the Kipling reputation is based. His story did not get very far from the three mile limit. His was the story of the coast patrol and the efforts made to prevent the delivery of submarine supplies to the German fleet by means of ostensibly neutral ships. He spoke of a new phase of war times, of the wealthy yachtsmen who now patrol the coast of Great Britain that the regular cruisers may do transport and other guard duty.

Actually thousands of stories and photoplays have been written of the evils and perils of war. It took a master to see in the little known side issues—the by-products—the material for an unusual and interesting tale. When war suggests a screaming comedy to you and a comedy results in a dramatic plot, then you are getting into the class of authors who can sell, but anyone who can sling words together can write a sort of war story from a war suggestion.

Lately the Allies concentrated their fire on a certain point, knowing that the Germans would take to their bomb proofs until the rain of shells was over. At an agreed moment the firing ceased and before the Germans could emerge, the Allies were in the trenches making prisoners. It was a pretty piece of strategy and might make a good story, but can you imagine from this a comedy cop trying to raid a gambling joint. He cannot get in. The next day he pretends to raid a place across the hall and the gamblers come out curious to see who set up an opposition place so close. Then the cops pile in through the open door at their backs and make the raid. Get the idea?

Comparison.

Now and then when you see a particularly poor picture in the theater, remember that the man who wrote it thought it was good and the man who bought it thought the same as did the director who made it. But it looks not at all attractive on the screen. Then think a little further and realize that perhaps your story is not as good as this was when it started out, and then stop telling yourself that you write better stories than are bought. Half of the swindling schemes that sting photoplay writers are based on this belief of each author that his stories are better than the other fellow's. Get it out of your system.

Care.

A letter sent to one company at the address of another company is an evidence of carefulness. It certainly does not help the sale of a script, yet it is done and done frequently.

A Help.

Get a couple of books of house plans that you'll find advertised in the magazines. Then when you play a story mostly in one house, not only know what that house is but send a sketch to the editor along with the script. He may not use precisely the same layout, but at least he will know what you had in mind and at least you'll not have John exit to the street in one scene, being seen coming through the door in the next and then, ten scenes later, have the same door used by a character in pajamas.

Stove Lengths.

The only pull in photoplay is tugging at the heart strings.

The best script ever written is not as good as the novice thinks his worst.

The author who writes synopses only is close kin to the girl who never gets her bathing suit wet.

If technic interferes with your photoplay writing, give up writing plays until you have mastered technic.

Sustained.

Lately Arthur Real told of a story being returned with the objection that Indian Ike was not a convincing name for the chief character. Mr. Real insisted that it was the name of a real Indian. Now he sends in a press cutting of the death of I. Ike who playfuly started to drag a white man to death at the heels of his horse not because the settler wronged Ike's daughter or did any of the other things that photoplay Indians start out to avenge. Ike thought the white man had stolen some of his barbed wire for a fence, so he lassooed the man, but the man shot him and gave himself up to a fierce western Sheriff named Lamb. Ike is mourned by his widow, whose name is not Lily of the Prairie, but plain Lizzie, a favorite Piute name. Mr. Real is sustained in his facts, but for all of that we'd hate to try and sell an Indian comedy with a heroine named Lizzie.

The Best Way.

Someone wants to know the best way to sell a story. The best way to sell a story is to write one so good that the editor hasn't the heart to refuse it.

Technique of the Photoplay
(Second Edition)
By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed, or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 106.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

> What is the effect of the following: (a) Condensing lenses not square with each other? (b) One set higher than the other? (c) Whole lens out of square with objective? (d) Whole lens higher or lower or out of line sidewise with objective?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 100.

The Roll of Honor on Question 100 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Me.; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, La., and William A. Burnett, Newton, Ia.

I have selected the reply of Brother Crawford for publication.

Reply to Question No. 100.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Question:

What effect has lamphouse ventilation on condenser breakage? How much ventilation ought the lamphouse to have and what, in your opinion, is the best method of supplying it?

The Answer:

Condenser breakage is due to (a) excessive heat in lamphouse, usually caused by poor lamphouse ventilation; (b) sudden drafts, particularly where condition "a" is present; (c) poor condenser mounts; (d) condenser lenses too tight in some types of mounts; (e) contact of the lens with metal at various points, but not all around its diameter.

A well ventilated lamphouse tends to reduce breakage to a minimum, since it prevents high temperatures. Up-to-date lamphouses have sufficient ventilation, provided they are kept clean. It is almost impossible to have too much ventilation, unless it be accompanied by strong drafts. It is even well to remove the entire back of the lamphouse, unless prevented by local law. The best plan of ventilation is a 4-inch metal pipe running from the top of the lamphouse into the operating room vent flue.

Well, I Wonder.

E. B. Thomas, Cambridge, Massachusetts, writes:

> Sent you sample of our program some time ago. This time I have a suggestion to offer. We receive many compliments on our picture, but constantly strive for further improvement in projection. Recently I bought a can of paint (directions on alabastine were too complicated for a quick job), and daubed up one spot on the screen. Goodnight! Our screen is ordinary stage canvas, painted with a screen paint—flat white, almost like whitewash. Well, I had to get rid of that spot. So just as soon as it dried. I took ordinary chalk and went over the spot. Results startling! So good that I made a square about 18 inches in the middle of the screen with the chalk. That square stood out like a sore finger when the picture was thrown on. Later I did the bottom half of the screen for the afternoon show, and finally the whole screen. Think of it! Just common school chalk; used in pieces about 2 inches long and rubbed on! Of course, it is only good for a screen that is seldom moved, although I have rolled ours up five or six times. It really does the work. Hope to see some comment on our programs in the near future.
> And now here's another: there are often small cuts in papers, magazines, etc., which, transferred to glass, make excellent announcement slides, or comics. Trace them by using carbon paper on a slide, and bind with Dennison's slide tape. Do all printing neatly, and if desired to eliminate the glaring white of the slide tint the open space. If done carefully the result is excellent, and the glass can be quickly cleaned off.

Well, now I wonder. That chalk idea looks reasonable on the face of it, provided it can be put on evenly. That is the part I am not certain about. It certainly would make a dead white surface very similar to plaster. More than that, I would not care to say at the present time. The thing is passed along to our readers who care to experiment. As to tracing the comics, why Brother Thomas means to use a clean slide cover glass on which is laid ordinary good grade carbon, preferably black. If carefully done, I see no reason why the results would not be, as he says, excellent. As to the programs, I do not think they were ever received; at least I have no recollection of it. Possibly they were sent to Brother Sargent, as they really belong to his department.

Good Work.

Not long ago in the course of the preparation of the new Handbook I was obliged to motor to Schenectady. I went by the way of the Mohawk Trail, a distance of 350 miles New York to Schenectady, or 540 there and back, returning by another route. Inasmuch as this trip was made leaving New York City at noon Saturday and arriving home 3 P. M. Tuesday, with almost all of Monday spent in Schenectady, you can imagine I did not visit many theatres.

However, I did drop in at the Orpheum, Schenectady, where it was my pleasure to meet Mr. Charles H. Travis, manager, who has risen to that office after having filled all the various positions around the theatre, from scene shifter to manager, including moving picture operator. Mr. Travis assumed charge of the Orpheum after it had been "run down." He has attempted what is always an exceedingly hard task, viz., that of rehabilitating the reputation of a theatre, and to his credit is succeeding. Mr. Travis is a hard worker, and a man who works along practical lines.

A most excellent picture was being projected by J. J. Jones. The light was brilliant and white. Brother Jones is hampered by one old style lamp and lamphouse, but it is hoped that in the near future this antiquated apparatus will be replaced by up-to-date equipment. I found Friend Jones to be using a rather inefficient carbon set. I pointed out to him the error, and believe he will still further improve his excellent results if my suggestion in this regard is adopted.

The Orpheum is using a Martin rotary converter. It is the first one I have seen. Mr. Travis tells me they had a lot of trouble with it at first, but now are getting good results. The current from this machine produces a brilliant illumination at a comparatively small amperage, but I have no evidence as to its efficiency; nor was the machine in a location where it could well be examined as to its mechanical construction. Mr. Travis informs me it has brought about no reduction in light bills and—there you are. I shall doubtless, in course of time, have the opportunity to examine more of these machines, and make actual wattmeter tests as to efficiency, which same will be reported in the department, though I cannot, of course, say when it will be. Meanwhile the above is the first and only authentic information I have on the Martin, other than there are quite a number of them in use in Chicago, where the device is manufactured.

Quite True.

From a large company with whom I have been having correspondence with regard to high-grade lenses, comes the following:

> The work you are doing is indeed commendable, not only in bringing the operator up to a higher standard, making them realize how important their work is to the permanent success of motion picture exhibitions as an amusement business, but also in waking up the exhibitor to the fact that upon his projection equipment depends, in great measure, the success of his theater. To stand in our show room and meet apparently intelligent men, who come in to look over equipment, and to have them inform us that they have just spent fifty, seventy-five or one hundred thousand dollars, as the case may be, to build and decorate a motion picture theater, and then have them almost in the same breath ask us if we have any second-hand machines that we can let them have for about the price of a last year's straw hat, giving them six months to pay for it, would make those who know sit down and wonder how such people manage to get by. The United States government might as well build a fifteen-million-dollar dreadnaught and equip it with popguns and donkey engines. To our way of thinking this would be close to a parallel in intelligent action.
> With regard to high-grade lenses; last fall we ordered between five and six thousand dollars' worth of anastigmat objectives—lenses that would have to retail from $85 to $175, according to foci, but were advised by the factory that the Im> perial government had confiscated all German factories manufacturing optical goods in order to supply the army, and that it would be impossible for us to get shipments. The Imperial government of Germany has, of course, made it a crime to ship such goods out of the Empire. This has left us in a very peculiar position, because of the fact that there is no supply of goods in America, and the American glass manufacturers do not seem to have refined the art of glass making sufficiently to manufacture high-class crown and flint optical glass.

I heartily and thoroughly agree that it is the height of absurdity to build a costly theater, and then the moment the very heart of the thing is reached (the operating room, from whence the whole show must come), drop from the "nothing is too good" plane to "anything-will-do-if-it-is-cheap-enough." I have called attention to the foolishness of such procedure many times, and I presume my work in this direction has had some effect. It does seem that such a proposition as this would be too utterly silly to be considered by an intelligent man. If he were building a costly legitimate theater, would he build a beautiful auditorium, and then get the cheapest possible accessories and scenery, and put in the cheapest barn-storming actors he could find? Certainly not. Well, this is exactly the line of conduct he pursues when he spares no expense until he reaches the operating room, and then suddenly begins to cry cheap, cheap, cheap.

With regard to the high-grade lenses, let us hope the craze for official murder now holding sway over the minds of men in Europe will soon run its course, and that we shall again get down to normal conditions. The high-grade lens is the thing. I don't know about the $175 article, but possibly even an objective lens at that price would be a good investment.

A Neat and Valuable Souvenir.

The Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex projector, have sent to the department a valuable and unique souvenir which may be obtained by any operator who will write that company asking for same.

It consists of a leather pocketbook containing a memorandum book, pencil, calendar for the entire year, stamp pocket with oiled paper, a pocket for the working and an identification card under transparent gelatine; also there is a bill fold capable of holding all the wealth any operator is at all likely to possess. The back is of genuine leather, as are aso the pockets; the lining is of cloth. Write the Precision Machine Company if you want one. They are free to operators.

Outrageous.

The Memphis, Tennessee, Branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, by its manager, R. Hardenbrook, sends in the following:

> The writer has for some time past made note of the fact that various operators are, through the medium of the projection department, making complaints about the condition in which they receive film. I do not care to enter into a controversy as to whether the exchanges give proper inspection of films or not, but do wish to say that, so far as this particular exchange be concerned, we welcome report from any operator or manager regarding our films. If they will return our inspection tags when films are not received in good condition we will thus be given an opportunity of knowing just which inspector is at fault in the matter.
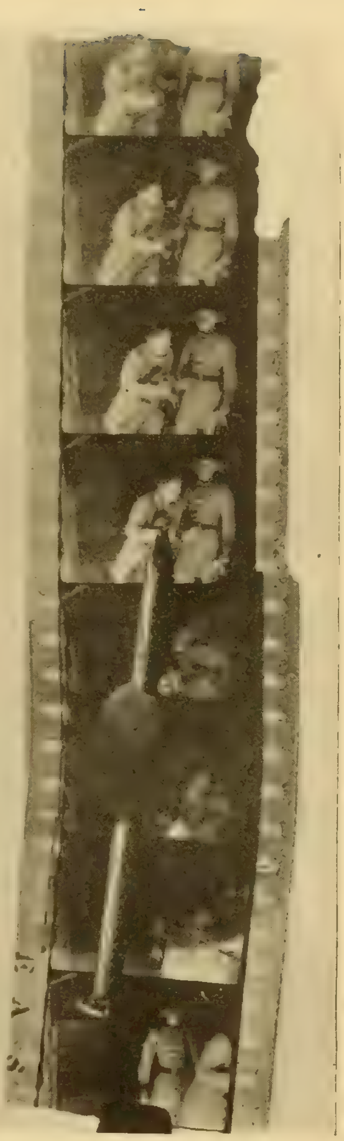
> We are enclosing a photographic reproduction of a portion of a film which was returned to us from an exhibitor in this state. You will note the classic patch made by a new kind of cement, called ten-penny-nail cement. I will also say further that this is the third time films have been received in this condition within one week. If each operator would make it a point to observe a little of the spirit of the Golden Rule, and try to forward films to the next exhibitor, or back to the exchange in as good condition as he received them, we feel sure that within the course of a few months all kicks about the condition in which films are received would be eliminated. We called the attention of the exhibitor, who returned the film in this condition to the matter, and he promptly replied that his operator had attended to this, and he was of the opinion that all films were returned in good shape.

It is, of course, unnecessary to say that the sticking together of a film with a nail constitutes a gross outrage, and the manager, instead of seeking to defend the operator who does this sort of thing, ought to promptly discharge him. He is not a fit man to have in an operating room. No man who takes any pride at all in his profession would do such a thing as this. The man who does a trick of this kind is not an operator, or even a good imitation of one. He might make a good man to juggle hay with a pitch fork; it would not matter what he stuck into the hay, unless it be a lighted match. This mis-called operator has ruined six pictures in the film. Now in this particular instance it would probably be necessary to sacrifice two pictures at the broken part and two more where the sprocket holes are gone, and though this would bring two patches very close together, it would eliminate the big jump which will now be inevitable. Moreover, the winding of that rough nail into the roll is going to injure the film underneath it, and may thus injure two or three thicknesses of it. It is a shame that such a thing would be done, and it is a worse shame that a manager would tolerate that sort of thing, much less defend the operator who does it.



However, get back to cause and effect, I thoroughly agree that it is a part of the duty of the operator to repair, so far as possible, all damage he himself causes in a film, and do the job right, too, but this must be qualified by the fact that many managers require the operator to rewind while projecting a picture, and since every instant of the operator's attention is required at the projector while the picture is being run, he cannot give much attention to the repairing of film; he has not the time to do it. Nor can he reasonably be expected to go over the film after the show is over and make repairs then. Other managers require the operator to be a sort of char-woman for the entire theater; posting up advertising, sweeping the floor, making the fires, and so on. Under these conditions the operator may be reasonably expected to not care a ——— whether the films are properly repaired or are not properly repaired. Still other managers have an irresponsible kid usher who, in the first place, does not know how to make a patch, and in the second place does not care whether it is made right or not, do the rapairing and rewinding.

Now it seems to me the only solution of this is that the exchange itself put the films in perfect condition, and that, as I have before said, a careful report be kept of the repairs made in each film, so that the exchange manager can tell who is doing the damage and get after them. I know it is a hard proposition, since, competition in film rental being very keen, the exchange manager fears to lose business, and the theater manager takes advantage of that fact. Of course, there is one phase of this matter which cannot very well be handled, and that is where the film in on circuit. The only solution to that end of it is to cut out the circuit, and I suppose the exchange won't listen to any such suggestion as that. I thoroughly agree with the Memphis exchange manager when he says that he will welcome reports of managers and operators accompanied by the inspection tag, thus enabling him to fix the responbibility. This department does not wish to butt into this particular thing and make trouble for exchange managers. It would much rather the matter be settled by the exchanges themselves. However, there is no question but the kick of the operator is justified from his point of view, and it must be admitted from the point of view of the exchange the operator and manager almost all too frequently merits a terrific calling down—see one ten-penny nail in evidence.

Silly Both Ways.

A clipping from an Omaha paper says that a fine of fifty dollars and costs was imposed by Police Judge Foster on Bill Bradshaw of South Omaha for throwing an evil smelling fluid in a theater, and creating a panic, in which one woman fainted. Three operators who were charged with instigating Bradshaw to the act, drew similar fines. Bradshaw declared that one of the operators had given him two dollars to throw the fluid. The occasion for the deed is said to have originated in the refusal of the theater to employ a union operator.

How utterly childish it all is. First the manager of the theater, preferring the cheapest possible man he can scrape up, regardless of the fact that cheapness inevitably means poor quality, refuses to employ a union operator. Then, assuming the charge to be true, the operators, acting almost as childishly as the theater manager, adopt what borders closely on strong arm methods. Simply because the theater manager acts like a child it is no reason that respectable operators must emulate his example.

Great Work.

L. W. Carroll, Lancaster, New Hampshire, writes:

> I take great pleasure in enclosing some faulty inspection evidence. Every operator should feel it his duty to report poor inspection, as this is the only way in which it can be corrected. You are doing a great work in helping operators to achieve something near perfection. I am anxiously awaiting the new edition of the Handbook, and hope to be able to purchase a copy soon.

The film faults have been sent to the headquarters of the offending exchange—not the exchange, but the company controlling it. Nothing doing in Handbooks before January 1st, I'm afraid, maybe not then, but I think and hope so.

THOSE LIGHT RAY EXPERIMENTS*

Some Interesting Data Worthy of Further Study.

Part V.

NOW to follow this matter through we will consider Fig. 16, which is a photographic representation of light ray action in an objective lens, in which X is a shield containing a standard machine aperture, covered by a brass plate containing two pin holes. Y is a standard projection lens, with one-half of its barrel cut away, 1 and 2 being respectively the back and front factors of the lens, though 2 is hidden behind its container. This photograph is made with the aperture and the lens in actually working position, and with the light projected through the condenser in the ordinary way, under actual operating conditions. You will observe that the light coming through the upper pin hole, Fig. 16, diverges into a cone, which corresponds to cone A, 1-2, Fig. 13. This cone covers very nearly the full aperture of the lens. The light passing through the lower pin hole does exactly the same thing, and the two cones begin to intermingle at L, and from there on to the lens a small central light pyramid is shown, the upper half of which is the upper edge of the lower pin hole cone, and its lower edge the lower edge of the upper pin hole cone. Beyond the back factor of the lens, between the two lens factors, you can easily trace the action. And it is made clear in this photgraph that the bend which starts the final crossing or transposition of the rays takes place at the first or back surface of the first or back combination of the objective, even as it takes place at the back surface of the rear lens, Fig. 13. The action, as between the diagram, Fig. 13, and the photograph, Fig. 16, is precisely identical in every way. As the light leaves the front end of the objective you will observe that rays of the two cones are not entirely intermingled, but that the mingling can be traced clear through by the brighter light. This intermingling condition continues out to where the cone projected by the upper pin hole has passed down sufficiently to entirely leave the cone thrown from the lower pin hole, which latter is at the same time passing upward on its way to the screen. The action of these two rays are typical of those passing through every pin point of the film picture.

It will thus be seen that that much mooted question, which has been cussed and discussed by operators for lo these many years: "Where do the objective light rays cross?" is answered by saying: they begin to cross at the back plane of the back factor and continue to cross clear outside the lens, though, strictly speaking, viewed merely as a point, the rays actually cross at the back surface of the back objective lens. The actual fact is, however, that there is no such thing as a light ray, in the sense we have been using it in its application to the objective lens. Each individual point of the film acts as does the pin hole, and is sending a cone of rays forward exactly like those shown at L, Fig, 16, and, since each of the rays contained in each of these cones carries an image of the point of the film through which it passed, it follows that all these rays must be refocused at the screen, it also follows that the actual crossing is as shown in the photograph. I believe this photograph will be of vast interest to operators.

And now let us apply Brother Griffiths' theory of the "two sets of rays," and see how it works out in practice. Operators have long been puzzled as to why the spot on the revolving shutter is round when the shutter is close to lens, whereas a little further ahead, toward the screen, it becomes rectangular. Griffiths' two-ray idea is the only theory that seems to account for this, and it is to some extent this fact which has convinced me that he is absolutely correct in his deductions.

First, fix the following firmly in your mind. There are two complete, but entirely separate optical systems in the projection machine lens system, which are, in effect, combined into one. Remember that the optical action of the condenser and objective is precisely the same. In fact the condenser is a crude, extremely imperfect objective lens, therefore, we have, in effect, two objective lenses joined together, and the object is to so join these two systems together that there will be a maximum of illumination of the object to be projected, and the rays directed against and through this object by the first system must be so joined to the second system that there will be a minimum loss of light, and no opposition created by the refractive power of one system as against the refractive power of the other system. The second system (the objective) picks up the rays delivered at the aperture by the first system (the condenser) exactly as they are delivered by it, therefore when the distance of the crater from the rear condensing lens is so proportioned with relation to the distance from the back plane of the rear condensing lens to the aperture that the image of the light source (the crater) is in exact focus at the aperture, and the spot is of such size that the circle of clear, white light covers the aperture completely, with sufficient margin to enable the operator to maintain a clear field, then the plane of light at the aperture, where the objective picks up its rays, contains the maximum illumination, and, moreover, that illumination is evenly distributed over the entire area of the aperture.

And now come added complications. Operators will have observed that, particularly where a long focal length objective is used—anything above 4 inches—the light ray immediately in front of the lens is not rectangular, but round in form, whereas if a screen be moved outward a few inches from the lens a point is soon found where the ray becomes rectangular. There will be a difference in the location of this point with lenses of different focal length, but with very short focal length lenses the front factor of the lens sets so far back in the tube, and the point at which the light becomes rectangular is so close to the lens, that it falls inside the extension of the lens barrel. Now what I am getting at is: This has been a very puzzling point to the average operator. The Griffiths' theory explains it by holding that rays A 1-2, B 1-2, C-2, Fig. 13, form a round spot, by reason of the fact that, reaching the film as converging rays at A', B', C', Fig. 13, they pass through the film, carrying with them the image of the pin point of film they pass through, and continue on to the back surface of the rear factor of the objective lens in the form of a diverging round cone, similar to the cones shown in Fig. 16, and, since these cones, which have their base at the back surface of the back factor of the objective, and their apex at the screen, they emerge from the lens as a bundle of round cones which almost entirely fills the lens barrel, therefore, the ray, as a whole, at that point is round.

"Yes," I think I hear you say, "that is all very well, but why don't the ray continue to be round? Why does it become rectangular?" All right, Brother Griffiths continues with his theory as follows: rays forming cones A-C 1, A-C 2, Fig. 13, reach the aperture in the form of a cone, whose base is A C, hence they carry forward to the objective lens the image of the aperture as a whole, in the form of a pyramid having as its base the aperture, and as its apex a pin point on the rear surface of the rear factor of the objective, which pin point corresponds to pin hole D, in A, Fig. 15, and thence they go forward as a rectangular pyramid, having as its apex the aforesaid pin point on the rear factor of the rear objective, and its base the entire screen. These rays correspond to rays A-C 1, A-C 2, and 1 A'-C' and 2 A'-C', Fig 13.

The reason the spot becomes rectangular, lies in the fact that the rays which emanate from the aperture as a whole, will leave the lens as a pyramid having an angle of divergence corresponding to the E. F. of the lens, whereas the rays which enter the lens as diverging cones, emerge with a long, narrow angle. The round rays emerge from the lens the full size of the aperture of the lens, or very nearly so, whereas the pyramid is smaller, except with short focal length lenses, which spread the pyramid rays very rapidly. Therefore, until the pyramid has spread sufficiently to contain within its area the round rays, the ray as a whole will be round.

And now let us consider the final result of all that has gone before. We have worked out certain tables which are, I think, sufficiently simple to be understood and applied in practice by the average operator.

Tables 1 and 2 (Table 2 will appear in next issue) represent the final results of the experiments. Table 1 is what might be termed the "angle table." It represents the tabulated results of what is shown in the diagram in Fig. 4. In order to apply this table proceed as follows:

First measure the diameter of the opening of the objective lens. Next, with the picture in exact focus on the screen, stick a rule through the aperture of the machine and place it against the back surface of the back combination of the objective lens, and measure the exact distance from the lens to the film, or, in other words, from the lens to the surface of the film track on the aperture. This will give you the exact back focus of the lens at the position in which it works. This is of the greatest importance, because any given lens may work in different positions under different circumstances. Having found the measurement of the diameter of your objective, and its back focus when in working position, proceed as follows. In the left hand vertical column of Figures, table 1, find the number corresponding to the diameter of your lens opening, then move your finger out along the horizontal line of figures opposite this measurement until you find the figure most nearly corresponding to the measurement of the back focus your lens is working at, and at the top of the column will be found the correct distance from the apex of the curved surface of the front condensing lens to the aperture; also the condenser combination you ought to use.

INSTRUCTIONS:

FIRST MEASURE DIAMETER OF OBJECTIVE LENS. FIND THE MEASUREMENT IN THE FIRST COLUMN. FOLLOW LINE OF FIGURES OPPOSITE DIAMETER OF LENS, UNTILL LENGTH OF BACK FOCUS IS REACHED AND AT THE TOP OF THE COLUMN WHICH CONTAINS THE BACK FOCUS AT WHICH THE LENS IS WORKING, WILL BE FOUND THE DISTANCE BETWEEN THE CONDENSERS AND APERTURE PLATE, ALSO THE CONDENSERS TO USE.

EXAMPLE:

DIAMETER OF LENS: 1⅝" — BACK FOCUS: 3" WE FIND 1⅝" IN THE 18TH LINE AND 3" IN THE 11TH COLUMN. THE DISTANCE BETWEEN CONDENSERS AND APERTURE PLATE IS 18" AND WE USE 6½" AND 7½" CONDENSERS.

For instance: Supposing the diameter of your lens to be 1⅝ inches and its back focus to measure 3 inches. We find 1⅝ inches in the left hand column, and, run out to the right on the horizontal row of figures opposite this measurement until we find "3." At the top of the column containing the figure 3 we see that the distance from the apex to the curved surface of the front condenser to the aperture should be 18 inches, and that we should use a 6½ and a 7½ inch condenser with the 6½ next to the light. Again, another example: Let us assume our lens opening to be 2 inches and the back focus 5 inches. Finding 2 in the left hand column we run out on the vertical column but fail to find any "5"; 4.99, however, is to all intents and purposes 5 inches. It is within one one hundredth of an inch of that measurement, which is plenty close enough. At the top of the column containing 4.99 we find 22, which indicates that the distance from the apex of the front condenser to the film should be 22 inches, and, looking just above we see that we should use two 7½ inch condensers. However, we need not strain the limits of common sense at all to conclude that the larger lens diameter would be more suitable to this condition, and, if we had one say 2⅜ inches in diameter we could work with either two 6½ or one 6½ and one 7½ condenser, with the apex of the front condenser about 16½ inches from the aperture. I say about 16½ inches, because we find no 5 inch back focus in the horizontal column, but we find 4.784 followed by 5.214, so that five would come about half way between, thus making the distance 16½ inches, which comes exactly at the dividing point of two 6½ or one 6½ and one 7½.

Care of Film in Tropical Climates.

A. D., Brownsville, Texas, writes:

> Is there any way after negative raw film has become sticky so that it will not work in the camera, that is, the sprocket will tear because the pull is so hard and in consequence lose the loop from the feeding machine, is there any way to treat the film so it can be used or is it worthless after sticking together in the roll?
> Also, what is the best way to keep raw negative in a warm climate for several months? I have to keep stock on hand for emergency and when it arises I find the film sticks and will not work.

Film that has become moist enough to stick tightly together in a roll is pretty apt to be of no further use except for junk or leader stock. About a dozen years ago when times were not so turbulent along the Rio Grande, it was my pleasure to roam pretty thoroughly over Cameron and Hidalgo counties, also in H. Matamoros and the quaint little Mexican villages in Tamulpais with my camera and I know what the moist atmosphere from the Gulf of Mexico will do to film.

The care that is necessary here is the same as is required in nearly all hot countries. Film should be stored in airtight cans with the covers carefully taped with adhesive plaster. Camera retorts should only be loaded at the latest moment practicable before film is exposed and as soon as possible after exposure should be developed. If it is necessary to ship the film away for development it should be packed again as soon as possible in the original containers. If you have a large amount of film on hand that has stuck together this way, rewind some of it in the dark room, expose a few feet in the camera and then develop a three or four-foot test in a tray. If the test is satisfactory, then it is worth while to try and reclaim your stuck together film. Take some kind of airtight container like a clean garbage can, buy a few pounds of fused calcium chloride or some unslaked lime and place in the bottom of the can, make a false bottom of slats or wire netting and place over the lime to prevent it coming in contact with the film and then unwind the film loosely into the can in the dark room. When the can is nearly full, place the cover on closely and after ten or twelve hours the lime will have taken up the moisture from the film and it can be wound up again and sealed in the original containers until wanted for use. It is needless to say that film which has been thus stuck together will not be liable to keep very long, however. Always keep your film stock in as cold and dry a place as possible and do not purchase film in such large quantities that you have to store it long, for remember that celluloid is a very complex chemical product and undergoes spontaneous changes which are, even under the most favorable conditions, bound to affect the delicate, sensitive photographic emulsion with which it is coated. If you intend to keep a stock of film constantly on hand it is well to keep it in its original packages in a large air-tight can or box in which there is also placed a dish of some hygroscopic substance, such as fused calcium chloride.

A successful cinematographer of my acquaintance travels with his film supply in a zinc lined trunk with a perforated compartment containing fused calcium chloride wrapped in absorbent cotton so that if the desiccating chemical should take up enough moisture to dissolve itself, the cotton will absorb the solution and prevent it contaminating the contents of the trunk.

A New Use for the Motion Picture Camera.

Collier's Weekly for September 16th contains an interesting article on the use of the motion picture camera for discovering and correcting inefficient movement made by athletes. Frank Galbreath, the celebrated efficiency expert, has found the motion picture camera an invaluable aid in motion study of factory workers and has obtained astounding increases in the amount of work that assemblers and machine workers were able to accomplish without increase of effort by eliminating unnecessary movements.

Percy Haughton, the Harvard Football coach, is making use of the motion pictures to find out what his teams are really doing. Now the motion camera is a part of the athletic equipment at Cambridge, and it is expected that many hitherto unexplainable weaknesses may be found and corrected by a study of the films. It has also been found that the presence of the camera acts as a stimulus to the men on the field—in a way they feel that they are on dress parade; it may be possible to avoid the eye of the coach, but the lens is relentlessly sure. Coach Haughton is a theoretical as well as a practical coach, and he knew that, being only an active human being, he could not see everything that happened.

Therefore he took photographs of plays that were not going off quite right—that seemed to be perfect, but which failed in execution.

The difficulty that confronted him was human again; although the camera was fast enough, it had to have an operator, and no photographer could possibly tell the exact second when the bulb ought to be pressed. And, even if he did know the second, it was not possible to co-ordinate eye and hand. The motion picture camera offered the solution. With a film the whole play might be taken and then the defect discovered by a study of the various pictures.

Many of the motions of an individual athlete are too fast for the eye. When it is realized that one-tenth of a second means about one yard in a hundred-yard dash, the importance of little things will be realized. The single faulty motion of the hurdler taking the bars makes all of the difference between the fast man and the slow one. There have been men that could not really run fast in a flat race who were very speedy over the hurdles simply because they wasted no motion or effort in leaping across the obstruction.

It was found that certain men shifted their poise just as the ball was being snapped, and thus lost their chance to start; that others relaxed their tension for just the fraction of a second before the play was on, and thus were late. Individual peculiarities of the hands—a thousand and one little things that even the keenest eye could not find—appeared on the screen when the negative were studied one by one.

All our theories of athletic activities are likely to be revamped as a result of the film studies. The eye cannot be trusted to tell what it sees, for it is easily confused by rapid motion. The leading trainers all believe that considerable progress in every branch of athletic activity will come about as a result of the opportunity to make a laboratory study of the human body in motion.

It is in track sports, however, that the greatest good is expected from the film—track performances are a matter of little things done perfectly. The day of great changes has passed; in the last fifteen years the style of athletes has been about universal, and there seems no chance that a man may come along with revolutionary changes, such as the "crouching" start in the sprints or the substitution of the stride for the jump over the hurdles or the approach in the high jump. In many events the limit of human endeavor is near at hand, and the lowering of records will depend upon the conservation of effort toward the end desired. Nearly every big event is now taken with the motion camera and is eagerly studied by coach and athlete to learn if the winner had any new or improved way.

It has been claimed by authorities on the subject that baseball has been placed on a highly scientific basis by exhaustive investigations conducted on the same principles as the most approved efficiency methods; it now seems probable that there are still great possibilities for further improvement under the keen eye of the camera.

Portable Motion Picture Developing Outfits.

Chas. I. Reid, Millersburg, Pa., wants to know:

> Can you give me the name and address of a manufacturer of accessories who can supply portable finishing outfits? What I desire is an outfit that can easily be transported by train or automobile, for the quick finishing of topical work. Also, where can one purchase a compressed air, or other motor suitable for driving cameras, when doing work that requires a mechanical drive instead of human power.

The following firms are the only ones at present known to this department who supply portable developing outfits ready made for the traveling cinematographer

They are:

Burke & James, Chicago, Ill.
Eberhard Schneider, 219 Second ave, N. Y.
Jenkins Phantoscope, Washington, D. C.

As far as this department is aware there are no motor drives for motion picture cameras regularly offered for sale. One man of our acquaintance has a small powerful electric motor attached inside his camera and run by a small accumulator. Another man uses a small toy aeroplane motor which he runs by a small prestolite tank filled with compressed air.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

THE SEYMOUR HOUSE PARTY (Biograph), Sept. 27.—Augusta Anderson, Charles Perley, W. J. Butler, Clairette Clair and Ilean Hume are included in the cast of this one-reel drama, the plot being a new variation of the familiar "crook" theme. The photoplay has all the power to interest that goes with dramas of this class.

TONY AND MARIE (Lubin), Sept. 27.—Lawrence S. McCloskey has put a deal of heart interest into this one-reel drama. The plot is simple and concerned with the fortunes of two Italian emigrants, played by Francis Joyner and Mary Charleson. Their impersonations are earnest and apt, and the minor roles are well taken by Bernard Seigel, George Bliss and Jessie Terry.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 77, 1915 (Selig), Sept. 27.—The New York City subway wreck is the last item shown in this number, but ranks first in interest. U. S. soldiers capturing bandits on the Mexican border; girls in champion swimming race, Boston; railroad picnic and games at Hagerstown, Md.; poor children of New York on steamboat ride; Red Sox defeating Detroit, Boston; Admiral Winslow appointed Commander of the Pacific fleet; University of Pennsylvania football team at practice, Port Deposit, Md.; bench show, Chicago, complete the list.

THE BUTTERFLY'S LESSON (Vitagraph), Sept. 27.—A pleasant little drama has been told on one-reel, by F. M. Theel. The settings are waterscapes, for the most part, and grateful to the eye. Carolyn Birch, Louise Beaudet, Leo Delaney and Harry Northup made the performance a spirited one.

FOILED (Kalem), Sept. 28.—This one-reel photoplay is billed as a burlesque comedy and it never for a moment belies that designation. Its fun is of the most happy-go-lucky, irresponsible sort, done with a relish by Ethel Teare, Bud Duncan, Dave Morris and Charles Simpson.

IN ZULULAND (Lubin), Sept. 28.—Mattie and John Edwards, the Lubin colored stars, are cast for the leading parts in this short reel farce, written and produced by Will Louis. The picture is a good example of what may be termed "cartoon humor" and is given a vigorous performance by the entire cast.

THE WAYVILLE SLUMBER PARTY (Lubin), Sept. 28.—On the same reel with "In Zululand," this abbreviated farce manages to crowd a good deal of wholesome nonsense into a short space of time. The plot is new. Billy Bowers, Mabel Paige and Harry Loraine are the chief funmakers.

HER SLIGHT MISTAKE (Selig), Sept. 28.—Epes Winthrop Sargent struck a happy idea in this one-reel comedy and sent it to the right shop when it was given to Tom Mix to produce. Tom plays the leading part and extracts the last drop of humor from the situations, which are very funny. Howard Farrell, Leo Maloney and Mrs. Chrisman are members of the cast.

THE PARSON'S HORSE RACE (Edison), Sept. 29.—Julian Reed has the title role in this one-reel comedy, written by George A. Lessey. Raymond McKee has another of the leading parts, a spirited "hoss" race at the fair grounds forming the big event of the story. The comedy is refreshingly different and is kept going at a lively pace by all concerned.

DREAMY DUD AT THE "OLD SWIMMIN'" HOLE (Essanay), Sept. 29.—Another of Wallace A. Carlson's clever cartoon comedies, Dud has a flirtation with a beautiful mermaid at the bottom of the river—until Wag wakes him up. Scenes in the Canadian Rockies are on the same reel.

RAGS AND THE GIRL (Vitagraph), Sept. 29.—Cinderella and Prince Charming are characters in this one-reel comedy, which is the work of James Oliver Curwood. On the program the two lovers are called June and Tom, and are dressed in modern clothes, but they are our old friends of the fairy tale, just the same ,and every one will be glad to renew acquaintance with them. Maurice Costello and Adele De Garde are the happy pair. The production has been skilfully made by Van Dyke Brooke.

WINNING THE WIDOW (Biograph), Sept. 30.—This comedy is a light and airy trifle, but it has pronounced entertaining qualities. The way in which a young and good-looking widow plays one admirer against another, and the loser unwittingly pays the honeymoon expenses of his successful rival and the lady in question, furnishes a reel of capital fun. Gretchen Hartman, Alan Hale and Adila Comer have congenial roles.

OFF FOR A BOAT RIDE (Essanay), Sept. 30.—Unadulterated farce of the liveliest description is the only ingredient of this one-reel photoplay. It is built after the latest and most approved plans for works of its class, and is given every advantage by the playing of John T. Kelly, Ann Ivers, Margie Reiger, Jack Pollard and Bud Jamison.

WHY THE BOARDERS LEFT (MinA), Sept. 30.—Hotel life from a burlesque point of view is shown in this one-reel picture. Speed has been the watchword of the producer, but he has not forgotten the necessity for humor as well. The young man who plays the hotel clerk is a clever comedian and is given good support by the rest of the cast.

THE PLAGUE SPOT (Vitagraph), Sept. 30.—A keen-brained doctor and a wide-awake crook match wits in this one-reel drama. The doctor uses his knowledge of bacteriology to defeat the criminal, and an interesting drama is unfolded. Donald Hall, Harry Northrup, Richard Clarke and Billy Billings constitute the cast.

BRUTALITY (Biograph), Oct. 1.—The plot of this D. W. Griffith reissue has marked originality and teaches an excellent moral. Mae Marsh shows that, at the beginning of her career, she had the power to grip the heartstrings, and Walter Miller and Elmer Booth do forceful work.

BRONCHO BILLY MISLED (Essanay), Oct. 1.—G. M. Anderson appears in the role of a big-hearted sheriff, who is outwitted by a girl in helping her father to escape from the law. The sheriff is generous enough to wave the girl a cheerful good-by when he finds that she has been too clever for him. It is an entertaining one-reel drama. Marguerite Clayton plays the girl.

WHEN THE WIRES CROSSED (Lubin), Oct. 1.—The villains, male and female, are "come up with' in this one-reel drama most beautifully. Maude Thomas, the author, has conceived a number of effective situations, and L. C. Shumway, Ada Gleason, George Routh, Vivian Caples, Jay Morley and Melvin Mayo blend them into a diverting photoplay.

THE FOX TROT FINESSE (Vitagraph), Oct. 1.—Nothing better in the way of a one-reel comedy has been offered by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew than this bright little play, credited to M. W. Pool. It most amusingly satirizes the dance craze and permits Sidney Drew to be at his funniest.

HER RENUNCIATION (Biograph), Oct. 2.—Clarie McDowell, Isabel Rea, Hector V. Sarno and Laura LaVarnie impersonate the characters in this one-reel drama, which is a blend of studio life and existence among simple fisherfolk. The story is romantic, and the settings along the seashore are picturesque.

THE BUTLER (Edison), Oct. 2.—The unknown uncle who reveals himself at the proper moment and pays the bills of his spendthrift nephew, is the principal character in this one-reel drama. The photoplay has been carefully directed by George Ridgwell, and is entertaining. Wm. Wadsworth, Richard Tucker and Gladys Leslie have the important roles.

THE RUNAWAY BOX CAR (Episode No. 47 of the "Hazards of Helen") (Kalem), Oct. 2.—Once again does a pair of desperate criminals match wits with the lady telegrapher, only to meet defeat. Incidentally, their lives are saved when Miss Helen overtakes the runaway box car, after a wild chase with a locomotive. A live melodrama.

THE CELLO CHAMPION (Lubin), Oct. 2.—Billie Reeves is the famed musician of this one-reel farce, written by Epes Winthrop Sargent. Not that Billie lives up to his reputation as a cellist, his playing being a most inharmonious proceeding, and the concert breaking up in a riot. This state of affairs is entirely satisfactory to an audience, when shown on a screen.

MUTINY IN THE JUNGLE (Selig), Oct. 2.—Guy Oliver, Wm. Scott, Wm. Sheerer and Anna Luther fill the human roles in this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama. A trained tiger is worked into the story, the scenes of which are in India and have been faithfully reproduced under the direction of Frank Beal.

General Film Company Specials.

DARLING DANDY (Essanay), Sept. 27.—There isn't much plot to this three-reel drama and the incidents of the last reel are not at all convincing; but there is a great deal of Ruth Stonehouse in the picture and her work is a source of continual pleasure. She plays a barefooted, uneducated young person who loves a rag doll, a baby and a six-foot scoundrel, but marries the right man at the finish. The character never existed anywhere but in the playwright's brain; nevertheless, Miss Stonehouse quickly makes an audience oblivious to the fact. John Lorenz and John Thorn are members of the cast.

THE GUILT (Kalem), Sept. 27.—Rather depressing in its atmosphere, but deftly handled by Hamilton Smith, who seems to have had a carefully developed scenario to work from, "The Guilt" comes under the head of strong heart interest drama with a genuine surprise at the conclusion. A girl believes that she accidentally shot her father; the man's secretary is convicted of the crime, and is about to be electrocuted, when the actual murderer confesses. Scenes showing a man seated in the electric chair may add to the dramatic suspense, but they are a bit too gruesome. The picture is well acted.

THE RUNT (Selig), Sept. 27.—The plot of this two-reel drama does not lift it above the ordinary, but Colin Campbell has transferred his work to the screen with such fine effect that the story takes a strong hold on the imagination. The climax is powerful and every step of the drama's progress is on firm, artistic ground. The playing of the entire cast, which includes Wheeler Oakman, Edith Johnson and Gertrude Ryan, is all that could be desired.

THE CONVICT'S THREAT (Essanay), Sept. 28.—The heart interest in this two-reel drama is of the most compelling kind, the saving of the warden's child, by a convict, being one of the chief incidents. G. M. Anderson plays the convict, and his struggle with the villain at the end of the play is an exceedingly satisfactory proceeding. Marguerite Clayton and the little miss who plays the warden's child, are prominent in Mr. Anderson's support.

THE COUNTRY PARSON (Biograph), Sept. 29.—An interesting three-part picture suggested by one of Balzac's stories. Louise Vale gives a sympathetic performance of a girl whose romantic love affair ends in tragedy. A review will be found on page 2195 of the issue of Sept. 25.

THE MAN ON WATCH (Kalem), Sept. 29.—This offering is one of the episodes of the "Grand Hotel" series, and one of the best of them. The story is human and quite convincing and woven into it there is plenty of stirring action also amply realistic. It's a picture that one can heartily commend to exhibitors at any kind of house. It should please the big block of spectators. It was reviewed at length in the issue of Setpember 25, 1915.

THE LAST ROSE (Lubin), Sept. 29.—The pulpit and the stage are brought into close proximity in this two-reel drama, by M. B. Harvey. The story is a salutary one and contains many touches of real sentiment. Lottie Briscoe makes a distinct and sympathetic characterization of the Italian opera singer, Carlotta Valondi; and Arthur Johnson is equally convincing as the minister, John Converse. Eleanor Blanchard, Rosetta Brice, Howard Mitchell and Frances Hanson complete the cast.

VOICES FROM THE PAST (Lubin), Sept. 30.—A Shannon Fife three-reel drama with plenty of action and a story which moves along conventional lines, but admits of strong acting by several members of a well-selected cast. The picture was reviewed in the previous issue.

THE AGONY OF FEAR (Selig), Sept. 30.—Excellent acting of the leading role makes this three-reel drama impressive. The story which W. E. Wing has written has strong motives, and the fate of the man who unintentionally causes the death of the girl he has wronged, is followed with deep interest.

THE CURIOUS CASE OF MEREDITH STANHOPE (Kalem), Oct. 1. —The atmosphere of the studios forms the background for the human interest of this two-reel drama, which is a new version of the oft-told tale of man's weakness and woman's wiles. The plot is ingenious and the acting of the company brings out its best points.

THE HOUSE DIVIDED (Essanay), Oct. 2.—The excellent method and earnestness of purpose that are always features of H. S. Sheldon's scenarios, make this three-reel drama of decided value. The story is a clear exposition of the author's views on the separation of husband and wife, and the evil which thus falls upon the children. The play has been intelligently directed, and is acted by a cast which includes such tried players as Edna Mayo, Bryant Washburn, John H. Cossar, Florence Oberle and Lewis Edgard.

A QUEEN FOR AN HOUR (Vitagraph), Oct. 2.—The clever playing of Edith Storey in a dual role assists materially in the success of this two-reel comedy. R. H. Knorr, the author, has devised a goodly collection of humorous situations, and George D. Baker has adapted them to screen requirements with a keen eye for the best effect. Hughie Mack, Evart Overton, Albert Rocardi and Jay Dwiggins are valuable members of the cast.

Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

VANITY FAIR (Edison), Oct. 6.—Mrs. Fiske gives an interesting interpretation of Becky Sharp in this seven-part vision of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair.' The picture is artistically staged and very well acted. A review may be found on page 281 of the issue of October 9th.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 39, 1915 (Mutual), Sept. 30.—Interesting items of this issue are the opening of the Football Season at Harvard University, Flag Day at Washington, showing Secretary Daniels buying a flag, several close views of the subway cave-in on Seventh avenue, New York City, showing the removal of victims of the accident, the Del Monte, Cal., golf links, and Henry T. Ford and Secretary Daniels discussing his plan for the "baby" submarine.

THE MYSTERY OF EAGLE CLIFF (Thanhouser), Oct. 3.—An interesting story of the way in which circumstantial evidence sometimes seems to incriminate an innocent man. The scientist in this borrows money from a rich man; the latter follows him to restore a locket and is killed in a fall from a cliff. Simple, but convincingly worked out. A natural episode, well handled.

COUSIN CLARA'S COOK BOOK (Falstaff), Oct. 4.—This pictures entertainingly the adventures of a book agent. At first unsuccessful, he pretends to be a maniac and thus obtains a pocketful of orders. The photography is very good and the situations contain considerable humor.

CORSICAN BROTHERS UP TO DATE (Novelty), Oct. 4.—A broad burlesque on the well-known story of two brothers, one of whom goes to avenge the death of the other. This possesses a fair amount of amusement for one familiar with the original story.

MOTHER'S BUSY WEEK (Beauty). Oct. 5.—An amusing number, picturing the annoyances of a wife and mother. The opening scenes are at the seashore where the small boy pretends to fall off a dock. Later the elder son brings home a wife, whom he passes off as the new maid. A pleasing little domestic comedy. Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber appear.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST, NO. 4 (Gaumont), Oct. 5.—Some of the best possible views of the downtown section of New York are presented in this picture. They span the island and enable the eye to take in a perspective reaching away beyond the bounds of the East River on one side of Manhattan Island and the Hudson on the other. Also several of the principal streets and buildings of the downtown section are shown. On the same reel with "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Oct. 5.—On the same reel with the above, Harry Palmer's animated drawings cannot fail to amuse. This time a camel which has been adopted gives considerable trouble, and refuses to "stay put."

JUST LIKE HIS WIFE (Mutual), Oct. 6.—This is the story of a wife who has her husband shadowed and forgets to call off the detective after they make up. The husband beats up the detective. The plot lacks directness, but some quite interesting scenes taken in the South are shown. A fair number.

DICKY'S DEMON DACHSHUND (Falstaff), Oct. 7.—This film makes good entertainment. The dude of the boarding house has a small dog forced on him through the misrepresentations of the other male boarders, who send a letter with the dog to which the name signed is that of a German countess. Some amusing incidents occur in the picture which will be found to be a comedy worth while.

THE STING OF IT (American), Oct. 8.—Winnifred Greenwood plays the feminine lead in this production and plays it charmingly. The story is rather slight, but the picture pleases. The misinterpretation of a letter found by the ward of a deceased man, almost leads her to relinquish her life's happiness, and to refuse to marry a man whom she really loves.

CURING FATHER (Beauty), Oct. 9.—A comedy featuring Nan Christy and John Sheehan. This picture will doubtless get a good many laughs. It treats of how "Father," who was a chronic grouch through being dyspeptic, was cured through the work and starvation method, and inveigled at last into giving his consent to his daughter's marriage.

THE HAS BEEN (Thanhouser), Oct. 10.—A western story containing a rather pathetic situation. The sheriff, in the opening of the picture, gladly greets his son, who returns from college a full fledged lawyer. Later the ambition of the young man to possess money leads him into paths of shame. His father resigns, but shields the name of his son. The close of the picture shows them both starting out to begin life anew.

BILLIE—THE HILL BILLIE (Beauty), Oct. 12.—This picture is in some ways pleasing. It is at least original as far as the story goes, but borders on the improbable. An old man whose boy has run away from home years before meets a young man on the road, insists that he is his lost son, and forces him to remain in his family. The young man falls in love with the daughter.

GOLDBRICKING CUPID (Novelty), Oct. 13.—An amusing burlesque comedy number, by Wm. A. Seiter, featuring Bill Parsons as head of a matrimonial agency. The character types are very good. The plot could have been stronger, but the picturing is good throughout and the action quite pleasing.

TAKING A CHANCE (Cub), Oct. 15.—Here is another amusing burlesque of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." George Ovey and his pal do some excellent comedy team work in this. While old in subject matter, the situations are funny and will bring much laughter.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

STANLEY'S SEARCH FOR THE HIDDEN CITY (Centaur), Sept. 30.—A fairly interesting two-reel production in which the Bostock animals are used to advantage. The story of the search for the hidden city, inhabited by cannibals, and the rescue of the white girl who has lived among them since her childhood is attractive. The young reporter of the Stanley party falls in love with the girl regardless of his sweetheart at home.

THE FOOL'S HEART (Eclair), Oct. 1.—In spite of the fact that there is an over-plus of killing in this melodrama, the picture has been presented against such attractive settings and with such a capable cast, that it is difficult to discriminate against it. The photography of the production is also noticeably good, and it is a certain thing that the picture's development has fallen in capable and artistic hands. Lower California is the scene of the story.

MAN-AFRAID-OF-HIS-WARDROBE (Mustang), Oct. 2.—A three-reel production made by the American Film Company, Inc. The story belongs to Chas. E. Van Loan's "Puck Parvin in the Movies" series, and is one of the best things of the kind that has been seen. Or perhaps nothing just like this picture has appeared on the screen. Art Acord and Anna Little are featured, with A. Lester Hale playing the title role. The story treats of the experiences of a moving picture director with a new "gentleman" actor who appears at every occasion with his valet and other accessories and is the cause of much profanation as well as merriment through his decided objection to wetting or otherwise soiling his costume. Lawrence Peyton plays the role of the producer, while Wm. Bertram has the distinction of having produced the picture.

AS IN DAYS OF OLD (Reliance), Oct. 3.—The first reel of this two-reel number pictures a wagon train, followed by an Indian massacre, in romantic, picturesque fashion. The cast is pleasing and the story of the way in which the renegade tries to defraud the children of their heritage works out well. A poetical feature is woven into the plot in the Mohawk Indian song sung by the boy; the redskins spare his life and that of his sister when they hear it. While this is done in the manner of the usual Western Indian tales, it is superior in plot and execution. The photography is also excellent.

THE LIGHT OF THE REEF (Thanhouser), Oct. 5.—A two-reel number, featuring Morris Foster and Winifred Kingston. The young keeper of the light attends a cabaret performance and marries one of the singers. Later he becomes unreasonably jealous over the visit of a man to the light house and sends the wife away. The husband then drinks heavily, but the wife is faithful and when he neglects the light, she hastens to look after it. The story has no great dramatic strength, but is picturesque and quite entertaining.

SUNSHINE AND TEMPEST (Rialto), Oct. 6.—This is an unusually interesting three-reel feature produced for the Gaumont Company by W. F. Haddock, and features Florenze Tempest and Marion Sunshine, stars of the Ziegfeld Follies and the New York Winter Garden. One of the points about this production that will strike the spectator forcibly is the exquisite quality of the photography. The work of Florenze Tempest as the little girl of the wild Kentucky mountains is unusually artistic and intelligent, while that of Marion Tempest is also pleasing with smaller opportunties. The production leaves a very distinct impression, has been directed with skill, and is rich in interesting incident and appropriate atmosphere.

PARDONED (American-Clipper), Oct. 9.—A three-reel number, featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison. Both the principals play two roles. The former appears as Forrest, the hero, and as Paul Brent, the weak son of the governor. The latter is entangled with a woman and child; he also falls prey to an adventuress and commits a murder. This latter series of events bids fair to wreck his father's political fortunes. Forrest, convicted of Paul's crime, is pardoned by the governor to take the wayward son's place. The story is very complicated, but has been skilfully handled; with close watching it may be followed clearly. The plot itself is not entirely convincing, but holds the interest.

LET THERE BE LIGHT (American). Oct. 11.—This is a nicely produced two-reel subject with Helen Rosson in the feminine lead. The picture, which demonstrates many of the uses of electric light, is based on an interesting story in which a bachelor who spends much of his time in search of a certain electric ray, marries his pretty ward. The story is human in its development, and is bound to please.

THE SCOOP AT BELLEVILLE (Thanhouser), Oct. 12.—Loraine Huling does unusually attractive work in this two-reel production which deals with an adventure in the life of a woman reporter. The thrill of the story occurs in a race between her and a reporter from a rival publication on getting the story of the capture of a certain criminal to their respective offices. At the top of a telegraph pole she becomes betrothed to the millionaire whom she interviewed a year previous, and who in consequence of her slighting remarks had gone to work to prove that he was able to earn at least a dollar a day. Harry Benham plays the male lead. A short animated cartoon, "Down on the Phony Farm," is on the last reel.

DOWN ON THE PHONY FARM (Thanhouser), Oct. 12.—An excellent animated cartoon on the last reel of the above, showing what happened when a farmer took undue advantage of the thirst of his cow.

THE MIRACLE OF LIFE (Mutual Masterpicture No. 42—American), Oct. 15.—This four-reel Mutual Masterpicture is a protest against childless marriage. The subject is handled in a symbolical way throughout. Some of the treatment is a little vague, but it is all notable for its pretty settings and sincere manner of presentation. A well-pictured novelty. Marguerite Fischer and Joseph Singleton play the leads. Reviewed at length on page 281 issue of Oct. 9, 1915.

North American Film Corporation

THE DOUBLE CROSS (American), Oct. 4.—Chapter XXIII of "The Diamond from the Sky." This instalment is largely taken up with piecing together the various plot threads after the recent dramatic events in the circus tent and later. Arthur, still known as Powell, does not understand the plot against him on the part of Blair and Vivian. He still seeks to shield the former, even though he may lose his fortune in so doing. Luke is thrown into jail while making an effort to recover the diamond, which is in possession of the police when the number closes. The instalment shows careful construction throughout.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

'TWAS EVER THUS (Bosworth), Sept. 23.—An Elsie Janis picture showing how men have wooed women in different periods, starting with the stone age. A review of this passable offering may be found on page 283 of the issue of October 9th. It is in five reels.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 76, 1915 (Pathe), Sept. 22.—Interesting items of this issue are the burning of the Eccles lumber mill in Oregon, Canadian soldiers guarding the border line at Niagara Falls, James F. Archibald landing on American soil, the result of the use of nitrate fertilizers on cotton land, and East Indian soldiers convalescing at Bournemouth, England.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 5' "A Message from the Past" (Panama Films), Sept. 30.—"A Message from the Past" is the title of this episode, which is attractively staged and thrilling. Annette is attacked by Hernandez and his accomplices, and is thrown into the sea. One of the most attractive scenes of the episode occurs on board the U. S. S. Alabama, where a view of a dance being held on its deck is shown. The brute man, guided by some strange instinct, rescues Annette from a drink-crazed sailor whom he promptly throws overboard, and various other thrilling incidents occur among which is the discovery by Annette of an inscription on the watersoaked map showing the latitude and longitude of Lost Isle whereupon she and her friends embark for the mysterious isle.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 6, "The Cavern of Death" (Panama Films), Oct. 7.—With episode 6 of the series, and which is entitled "The Cavern of Death," there follows the same variety of thrilling incident that characterizes the foregoing chapters. Lillian Loraine and William Courtleigh and the others of the notable cast, including Wm. Conklin as the "Brute Man," continue to do pleasing work.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 7, "The Gun Runners" (Panama Films), Oct. 14.—"The Gun Runners" shows Annette starting for Santa Maria, Lower California, in search of the original grant. Her letter to the Fathers of the Mission is intercepted and an attack is made on the house where Annette is stationed, by Hernandez and some revolutionists. The naval forces protecting American interests in that vicinity takes a hand, but not so successfully as to prevent Annette and Neal Hardin from being captured and thrown into prison.

Triangle Film Corporation.

A FAVORITE FOOL (Keystone), October.—A multiple-reel featuring Eddie Foy. An incongruous jumble of a story which gradually wins through the personality of Foy and well-known Sennet methods. Polly Moran, vigorous widow, circus owner and mother of a tapering row of children, deliberately courts Foy after the deed of her circus is stolen by a villainous ringmaster. Foy finds himself the unexpected father of a large family, foils the villain and gives a highly amusing performance from the moment of his first appearance on the screen.

THE COWARD (Kay-Bee), October.—A multiple-reel produced by Thomas H. Ince. The story of a southern boy who exhibits cowardice at the beginning of hostilities and redeems himself by extraordinary bravery later on his been done so often that it offers little that is new, but it is admirably handled, and the impersonations of Frank Keenan and Charles Ray, father and son, are so strong that the drama takes on new vigor. Its principal fault is that many of the scenes are overplayed, causing the action to drag at times where there should be more snap.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

MOLLY'S MALADY (Nestor), Sept. 17.—An Al E. Christie number, with Jack Dillon, Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns and Jack Connolly in the cast. Billie meets the young doctor and encourages him to locate in her home town. Their love affair is amusingly worked out. A pleasing comedy number.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 186 (Universal), Sept. 29.—Many fall celebrations, fairs and other American scenes are pictured in this, also numerous European war scenes. The number is well up to the average.

MARRIED ON CREDIT (L-Ko), Sept. 29.—A low comedy, featuring Billy Ritchie, Louise Orth, Henry Bergman and others. This is the conventional knockabout comedy, with a mixup in the park. The action toward the close is rapid and some of the humor is fairly good.

MARINA (Laemmle), Oct. 10.—A pretty story of the Italian tenement district, with a religious touch in it. The Italian girl is taken from jail, where she had been under arrest for peddling plaster busts without a license, by the landlord, who tries to ruin her. She prays for deliverance, which reaches her in time. The settings and atmosphere are very good.

ALAS AND ALACK (Rex), Oct. 10.—A story written by Ida May Park and produced by Cleo Madison. The latter also plays the leading role, and is assisted by Lon Chaney and Arthur Shirley. Some of the settings are quite novel, though a little dark in places. The story, which shows the manner in which fate sometimes marries the wrong couples, has a fair degree of interest.

SOME FIXER (Nestor), Oct. 11.—A seacoast comedy, by Marjorie Jones, featuring Corrine Lesser, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Jane Waller and Harry Rattenbury. Eddie pretends to fix things up for his rival, but arranges to carry off the girl himself. A trifling plot, but quite amusing.

BASHFUL GLEN (Imp), Oct. 12.—A summer resort comedy, in which Glen White poses as a married man to rid himself of so many girl admirers. He shows the picture of a married woman and when she and her husband appear trouble ensues. The offering makes very fair light comedy.

THE HEALING OF MARY BROWN (Rex), Oct. 12.—An extremely pretty fairy story for children. The little lame girl, after hearing her grandmother tell how a boy was cured of lameness through fairies, visits a big estate which she thinks is fairyland. She is cured through the kindness of a girl, who carries out the childish illusion very nicely, Elsie Albert and Baby Early play the leads. A good number.

MYSTERIOUS LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK in "When the Wets Went Dry" (Powers), Oct. 4.—Another of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series. In this Max Asher, as the burlesque sleuth of many disguises, saves the governor from making a grave mistake. This has amusing moments, but is not as strong in plot as some of its predecessors.

AND THE BEST MAN WON (Nestor), Oct. 15.—A comedy number, by George Marshal, featuring Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallegher and Neal Burns. The girl forsakes her sweetheart because of an artist, with whom she elopes. The climax comes during a fake wedding scene, in which the first lover appears in black face. This is not strong, but quite pleasing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE WOMAN WHO LIED (Victor), Oct. 6.—A four-reel number, written by Olga P. Clark, featuring Mary Fuller, supported by Paul Panzer, Milton Sills and Edna Hunter. The story has ample action for four reels, but in spite of the excellence of the cast, does not get far beneath the surface There is some overacting. This makes on the whole a feature offering of about average strength. Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

A BATH HOUSE TRAGEDY (L-Ko), Oct. 10.—A two-reel low comedy, featuring Hank Mann, Peggy Pearce and others. The opening scenes are disgusting because of dirty settings; cleanliness and humor are the best affinities. Plain soap and water and fresh, clean costumes would help the work of this company greatly. Some of the bath house scenes are quite amusing, though somewhat vulgar. Love and jealousy are the chief plot ingredients. This is only fair.

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT (L-Ko), Oct. 13.—A two-reel low comedy number, most of the scenes of which are laid in an office. Gertrude Selby, Fatty Voss, Alice Howell and others appear. The situations are farcical and bring out considerable laughter. The plot is one in which the boss flirts with the stenographer, who already has the rest of the office force at her feet. The wife comes and finds her husband flirting. She proceeds to take charge of the office and discharges the stenographer. The latter seeks reemployment in boy's clothes. This plot has been used before, but is here handled without offense and is quite amusing.

THE GIRL OF THE DANCE HALL (Laemmle), Oct. 14.—A three-reel number, by F. McGrew Willis, featuring Malcolm Blevins, Agnes Vernon and Ernest P. Evers. This is the story of a waitress in a western town who is thrown out of a job and becomes the mistress of a gambler. The hero helps her escape from the situation. She goes east, becomes a stenographer and marries the hero's best friend. Further complications follow. The story lacks somewhat in dramatic feeling and intensity, but is well constructed and enacted by an agreeable cast.

A KENTUCKY IDYLL (Victor), Oct. 15.—A two-reel Western town story, by Jacques Jaccard, featuring Warren Kerrigan, Norbert A. Myles, Ethel Phillips and Helen Leslie. This is an old theme worked over, picturing the clash between the new minister and the local bad man. In this instance the bad man becomes converted and closes up his saloon, but does not marry the minister's daughter. Instead, the latter refuses him, and he marries the girl with whom he had formerly lived. This makes an offering of about average interest.

THE YELLOW STAR (Bison), Oct. 16.—A three-reel adaptation of a story by Randall Parrish, featuring Kingsley Benedict, Marie Walcamp, Frank Newberg and others. This pictures the rounding up of a gang of smugglers, dealing in Chinese contraband. The hero is a secret service man and he is assisted by the office stenographer. The latter procures evidence showing that there is a traitor in the government department. This is well constructed and contains some thrilling incidents, A good, live number.

World Film Corporation.

THE FLASH OF AN EMERALD (Shubert), Oct. 3.—A five-part melodrama, produced by Albert Capellani with Robert Warwick in the leading role. The picture is likely to appeal to the average audience. A review may be found on page 284 of the issue of October 9th.

Miscellaneous.

THE WONDERFUL ADVENTURE (Fox), Sept. 27.—William Farnum plays a dual role in a very well produced picture that holds the attention. A review may be found on page 284 of the issue of October 9th.

RIGHT OFF THE BAT (Arrow), October.—This is the first production of the Arrow Film Corporation. Mike Donlin is featured in an entertaining story introducing a baseball game. A review of this five-part picture may be found on page 283 of the issue of October 9th.

THE PEARL OF THE ANTILLES (Picture Playhouse), October.—Tom Terriss produced this picture and acted the leading role. The story is fairly entertaining and there are many attractive scenes photographed in Jamaica. A review may be found on page 282 of issue of October 9th.

WOMAN'S PAST (Federal), Oct. 4.—This production is not well founded morally. It is the story of a young woman who decides to leave her old life of immorality and go into a part of the country where nothing is known about her. She marries a young westerner. But after they have lived happily for some time one of the old gang appears on the scene and wickedly reveals the woman's past. The husband leaves the cabin without speaking a word of forgiveness, and the woman goes desperately back to the old life.

A SONG OF THE SEA (Deer), Oct. 4.—A story set on the sea coast, and treating of an escaped bandit who tries to win the love of a fisherman's daughter lures her away on the rocks and is tracked and caught by the sheriff and his posse who have been informed of his whereabouts by the girl's lover. The story is a slight one but has attractive settings.

AN INNOCENT KIDNAPPER (Banner), Oct. 4.—This film will be found amusing to many audiences. It contains some rather highly eccentric types, and is based on an old idea. Nevertheless the main situation of the picture is very funny, namely, the return of a young man from a hunting trip, and the misinterpretation of his wife's letter to the extent that he picks up a baby that he finds on the couch in his sitting room, and runs off to display what he supposes to be his heir to his club friends, thereby causing considerable commotion in Irish Pat's household.

GETTING THE GOODS ON FATHER (Empire), Oct. 4.—Here is a very acceptable comedy, of the sort that has been done many times over, yet it is always pleasing. Father, adamant in his determination that his daughter shall marry as he wills and not as she pleases, is lured off to the beach by a friendly young woman who is the cause of father making a fool of himself. The end of it all is that he is obliged to give his consent to his daughter's marriage to keep his escapade from getting to the ears of mother.

Associated Film Sales Corporation Specials

GOOD OUT OF EVIL (Santa Barbara), Oct. 4.—A gruesome sort of story dealing with a woman inebriate has been used as the basis of this two-part production. She maltreats her stepchild, and after an oath sworn to to her husband that she will let liquor alone, she immediately breaks her promise and is the cause indirectly of the death of the husband who rescues his child from fire in their home.

WOLF'S DEN (Navajo), Oct. 4.—This is a fairly interesting two-reel melodrama with Dorothy Davenport, Benjamin Horning and Rupert Julian playing leads. The father of a young woman artist is ruined at a gambling den. Later the head of the den sees the daughter and in order to get her within his power disguises as an Italian. The girl begs him to pose for her, which he does, and afterward lures her to his den, and is about to assault her when her lover and the police raid the place.

PIERCING THE VEIL (Alhambra), Oct. 4.—There is too much of a tendency toward the lurid sort of melodrama in the development of this two-part production. The story is rather a good one, and should have been more fully developed, without quite as sudden a jump into the assault of the girl by her employer. There is a cripple brother of the girl introduced into the story who, it appears, has second sight, and leads the way to the girl's rescue.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS PREPARE FOR ANNUAL DANCE.

Vitagraphers are preparing for the monster ball and entertainment which they will hold on the evening of Thursday, October 27, at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, the proceeds of which are to be turned over to the hospital and sick fund of the Vitagraph Company. Their preparation has taken an unusual turn, for, in the promise of a dance contest, it has been announced that the old-time dances will be featured. While the Vitagraph actors and actresses are familiar with the tango, the one-step and all varieties of the fox trot, the old waltz, two-step, lancers and other old-time favorites are "something else again."

At various cabarets in town some of the players have been noticed doing the old-fashioned steps. In one of the studios of the Vitagraph plant in Flatbush the other day, the dancers took advantage of a band that was to be used in a picture, with the result that the studio resembled a dance hall of twenty years ago, when the square dances were in vogue. So with all this practice those visitors at the ball on the 27th should see some fine stepping.

The committee, headed by "Vic" Smith, studio manager, has begun to cut down the acts which the players have offered to present. So numerous have been these offers that the committee is selecting the most choice from these, with the result that the show put on that night will rival any Broadway success in real, honest-to-goodness talent. If the committee used all the acts that were offered, the whole show would last several days. That is how good it is going to be and if the roof of the Casino is not raised on that night, it will not be the fault of the Vitagraphers.

TWO NEW PLAYS FOR HORSLEY.

This week's additions to David Horsley's playing forces were Edward Roberts and Clarence Baker. The former has been cast for an important part in the "Stanley's Adventures in South Africa" series which Frank Montgomery is staging for the Centaur Features, while Mr. Baker is playing heavies in the Centaur Feature Company, directed by Carl Le Viness.

Edward Roberts began his stage career with T. Daniel Frawley at the Lois theater in Seattle in "The Sign of the Cross." Later he was with the Del S. Lawrence Stock Company, then with Kolb and Dill, and also played the Pantages vaudeville circuit with Bothwell Browne. His first picture experience was with the Phoenix Film Company and his next with the Kalem Company in "The Hazards of Helen."

Clarence Baker is an actor of wide and varied experience. He first attracted attention as a member of the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco. Then he spent one season with Taylor Granville in "The System" over the Orpheum Circuit and another with Melbourne MacDowell in a repertoire of Sardou's masterpieces. He began his motion picture career with the Balboa Company in Long Beach, Cal.

Art Form Toward Which the Moving Picture Is Trending.

THE following editorial in the New Republican should be read studiously by every intelligent worker in the moving picture industry. The pronouncement in favor of a "frank" photoplay as against "the tedious episodic feature film," sometime in the future, should attract the keen attention and careful study of producers. Directors also will be particularly interested in this forecast of the art form towards which the moving picture is trending. It would be worthy the time of David Wark Griffith to give us a written expression of his views on this question. The editorial follows:

> The art form toward which moving pictures seem to be struggling is a form of suggestive pantomime. Just what type of pantomime this will be we cannot yet say, but it seems fairly certain that it will be on the order of a frank, naturalistic spectacle, such as "Cabiria." It will not lie in "screen versions" of famous novels or plays, however much this particular kind of feature film may be exploited at the present time.
> For these "screen versions" are neither more nor less than a book or play; they are essentially different. Moving picture directors in their more honest moments will tell you this. They know only too well that "movie" plays are not the same in structure or form as the regular "legitimate" plays from which they are now so often taken. "A fair average," a director said recently, "is this: One-third is taken direct from the original play, one-third more is adapted with considerable alteration, one-third is original-created."
> The emotional appeal of a book or play adapted for the movies is much weaker than the emotional appeal of an original "movie" play. Compare an ordinary short film, written especially for the screen, with the photoplay version of some famous novel which you have not read. (In case you have read it, a fair judgment will be difficult, because associations and memories give the film a certain extrinsic value.) There will be no question—the frank "movie" play will be remembered long after the tedious episodic feature film is forgotten.

"Triangle" Premier at the Studebaker a Big Success.

The premier offering of the Triangle Film Corporation at the Studebaker theater was made on Sunday evening, October 3, before an audience that occupied every seat and considerable standing room besides.

The opening presentation was largely an invitation affair. Most of the men and women present were in evening dress, and many notables in society were on hand to judge of the $2 program in moving pictures at the Studebaker.

Many of those on the ground floor were guests of President H. E. Aitken and other members of the Triangle Film Corporation.

Prominent business men, players (dramatic and photodramatic), directors, photoplaywrights, out-of-town theatrical men and others of nearly every calling showed keen interest in the launching of "Triangle's" big enterprise.

It was everywhere evident that the great audience was pleased throughout the entire program. "The Iron Strain," by Ince; "My Valet," by Sennett, and "The Lamb," by Griffith, were each received with much enthusiasm. Laughter rose joyously at the fun furnished by Raymond Hitchcock, under Sennett's direction, while the rough wooing of Dustin Farnum had its thrill, and the subtle comedy of Douglas Fairbanks, its appeal to the finer perceptions.

Judging from the ecomiums of the Chicago daily press, the $2 moving-picture programs at the Studebaker have come to stay; but time is the safest guide in the case—that and the marvelous growth and possibilities of the moving picture.

L Pollard, Dealer in Projecting Machines, Is Denied Use of U. S. Mails.

A special dispatch from Washington, D. C., of October 1, conveyed the information that the Post Office Department issued a general fraud order on that date, denying the use of the mails to the Co-operative Exhibitors' Supply Company, the P. & W. Sales Company and L. Pollard, manager, at 443 South Dearborn street, Chicago, on the charge that "they are engaged in conducting a scheme for obtaining money through the mails by means of false and fraudulent pretenses, representations and promises."

The Post Office Department charges that the names, Co-operative Exhibitors' Supply Company and the P. & W. Sales Company, have been assumed by Mr. Pollard, and that by means of advertising in periodicals and circulars sent through the mails he represents that he has for sale moving picture machines and accessories; also that the machines offered for sale are priced by him at $175 or more; furthermore, that he offers to ship them upon receipt of a part payment amounting to nearly one-half the stated price; also that when orders are received it is his practice either to make no shipment at all, or to ship machines much inferior to that which the remitter was led to expect, the furnishing of which is fully covered by the advance payment made; also that he is not a manufacturer and has no machines or accessories regularly on hand, and that the machines he has furnished have been purchased by him from other concerns.

Mr. Pollard in reply states that he had no intent to defraud, and that his failure to live up to his promises was due to "business reverses."

Postmaster Campbell, of Chicago, reports that these concerns and party are receiving, on an average, three or four letters a day.

Get-Together Meeting of Chicago Exhibitors.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Chicago met in the regular headquarters, Room 210 Masonic Temple, Friday afternoon, October 1. There were over 200 present.

The meeting was open to all exhibitors, and its purpose was to reawaken interest in the organization and to consider matters of municipal origin which affected the interests of exhibitors. John H. Frundt, president of the association, presided.

Ordinances that are expected to come up in the near future were considered, chiefly: the Bureau of Fire Prevention, regarding fire exits and the apprentice in the operator's booth; the raise in the city license, owing to the higher type of moving picture theater now prevailing, and the war tax on theaters.

The frequent changes in the ownership of moving picture theaters in Chicago in the past year, it was found, has made it extremely difficult to get the owners together, at a fixed time, for meetings. Thirty-four new members were admitted at the meeting. Among these were Mrs. Burt Saltes, owner of the Park theater, 1149 West Fifty-first street, and E. A. Rysdon, of the E. A. R. theater, 6859 Wentworth avenue.

The meeting partook of the nature of a social gathering, rather than of business. It was a regular get-together affair, and good feeling and harmony prevailed. A lunch was partaken of, after which able speeches were made by Messrs. Hamburger, Choynski, Alcock, Katz, Schindler and others.

It was moved and seconded that meetings of the kind indulged in at the present gathering should be held about four times a year, without fixing the date. A campaign for membership was also advocated and started.

Prominent among those present were Alfred Hamburger, Charles Schaefer, R. R. Levy, Julius Alcock, George Henry, Fred Hartman, Sam Katz, Harry and Max Hyman, L. Schindler, Paul Sittner, Wm. J. Sweeney, treasurer of the association; Ike Gelder, Max Schwartz, M. A. Choynski, Messrs. Applebaum & Kahn, and E. A. Franke.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. H. Frundt, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Illinois, and owner of the Ariston theater, 3419 Lawrence avenue, this city, paid us a visit last week and renewed his subscription for the World. The Ariston runs programs of General Film and Paramount service, and charges an admission of 10 cents for six reels on Mondays, Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays. Five cents is charged on the remaining days of the week, for four reels of pictures. The Ariston seats 300 people, and excellent business was reported by Mr. Frundt.

Arthur Bard, general manager of the Associated Film

Sales Corporation, of New York City, arrived in the city Wednesday, September 29, and returned Tuesday, October 5. The object of Mr. Bard's visit was to arrange for the disposal of middle western territory for the distribution of the Associated products. Several exchangemen in the territory mentioned, met Mr. Bard during his visit, and Mr. Bard stated that the outlook was very promising for his company. The Union Film Exchange is distributing the Associated product in the state of Illinois.

E. T. Peters, president of the United Film Company, of Dallas, Tex., arrived in the city October 2. He came on to meet Mr. Bard about the Associated product, and he left for New York Sunday evening, October 3, to satisfy himself fully about Associated programs.

A recital on the "Fotoplayer," a musical instrument for the accompaniment of moving pictures, manufactured by the Photo Player Co. of Illinois, was given at the company's offices in the Lytton Building, Thursday, September 30. A musical program of twelve selections was presented, including a selection on the "Fotoplayer" by Bernardine and Mary Lee Korn, two pretty, little artists, to be known from now on as the "Fotoplayer Twins." These two youngsters demonstrated the simplicity of the manipulation of the instrument. Myrtle Moses, of the Chicago Grand Opera Co., also aided in making the affair delightful, by singing two numbers. Mr. Leo Weissenbach, president of the company, announced that he will give a special recital on this "Fotoplayer" for Chicago exhibitors, at some future date. This "Fotoplayer" has been fully described by C. E. Sinn, in the "Music for the Picture" department of the Moving Picture World.

In Baraboo, Wis., the winter home of the Ringling shows, ever since the Ringling Brothers engaged in the circus business, with a population of about 5,000 souls, Al. Ringling has almost completed a magnificent moving picture theater, at a cost of $175,000. The theater has been constructed so that it can be used for dramatic as well as photodramatic productions. The front is of white marble, and the lobby is also finished with the same material. It will open on October 23d, and Mr. Ringling has billed all the surrounding towns and cities within 50 miles. He expects that the occasion will be a gala affair for his home city, and he has arranged for a program selected from Kleine-Edison features and General Film Company's regular service. The admission prices will be 10, 15 and 25 cents. Frank L. Hough, manager of the Kleine Optical Co., visited Baraboo last week, and furnished the entire projection equipment, which includes two Simplex machines, with motors, Kleine objective lenses, a 71 ampere rotary converter, a spot light, etc. Mr. Hough tells me that, barring none, this is the most beautiful theater he has ever seen, whether devoted to the drama or to moving pictures. Al. Ringling has built it as a memorial to himself in his native town, and naturally, takes a great deal of pride in it. It will seat 1,100 people, and, by the way, every seat in the house, the upholstering of which was especially made to order, will cost $17.50 each. It is called the Al. Ringling Theater, and a full description of it will be given later in The World, in the department devoted to that purpose.

A special invitation presentation of "Vanity Fair," the big Kleine-Edison feature, was given at the Strand theater, Orchestra Hall, Tuesday morning, Oct. 5th, at 10 o'clock. The invitation cards were sent out from George Kleine's Chicago office to exhibitors, professional and society people.

F. O. Nielsen advises me that all the territory controlled by the Chicago office for "Guarding Old Glory" has been closed, with the single exception of the State of Iowa. Of the territory controlled by the New York office for this feature, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and the New England States are still open. "Guarding Old Glory" opened at the Davidson Theater, Milwaukee, on Sunday, Oct. 3, for a four days' run.

The double feature program, "Trilby" and "Just Out of College," at the Fine Arts theater, has been continued for another week. The strong contrast between the stories of these features has made the bill extremely popular. The rollicking fun of the George Ade comedy, controlled by F. O. Nielsen in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin, serves to lighten the sombre tinge of the fine "Trilby" production. "Trilby" is the harbinger of the Equitable production in this territory, and has made a big hit.

Charles Danzinger, a film broker of this city, was arrested Wednesday, Sept. 29, in connection with the purchase of films stolen from World Film Corporation's exchange some time ago. It is alleged that Mr. Danzinger purchased films valued at $250 for the payment of $40, from Morris Taitus, a former employe in the World Film Corporation's exchange at 207 S. Wabash avenue. Taitus is charged with having entered the offices of the corporation by means of a pass key. Taitus, at the time of his arrest, implicated Danzinger. The latter has denied that he instructed Taitus to steal the films, and is willing to return all the films he had purchased. He was released on bonds of $1,000, and was given time to collect the reels, which he had rented to various theater owners.

The Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, at Locust and La Salle streets, this city, was given a novel change in the evening services held on Sunday, Oct. 3, by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. E. L. Williams. After the processional, the hymn, prayer, the reading of scripture, and the anthem, a film showing China and its vocations was screened, explanatory remarks being made by Captain Barclay, U. S. A. A sacred song was then sung and was followed by a film showing Indian religious forms, which was accompanied by a lecture delivered by Mrs. Kingsley Pease, a missionary traveler. A quartet was then rendered by the choir girls, after which little Baby Carison, recently kidnapped, was baptized. A solo followed, and was succeeded by a lecture on Japan by Mrs. Pease. At this time Pastor Williams locked the doors of the church, remarking as he did so: "We are trying to get ouside the church, and we need money to cover the remainder of the church debt." One hundred and two dollars were collected, and the pastor declared that he was satisfied, as he needed only one hundred dollars. The gathering was a churchly audience, and all present declared themselves pleased, and went home thoroughly satisfied with the new order of things.

It has been announced from the office of Jones, Linick & Schaefer that a new theater will be built by them on State street, between Jackson Boulevard and Van Buren street, at a cost of between $200,000 and $250,000. The new theater will have a site of 100 by 100 feet, and will seat 1,800 people. It will be called the Strand, but E. Q. Cordner, manager of the Strand Theater Co., has given out that his company will defend its right to the name. "There won't be two Strands in the Loop," says Mr. Cordner. The Jones, Linick & Schaefer structure will be finished about Aug. 1st, 1916.

Chicago is to have another high priced photodramatic production, for Vitagraph's "Battle Cry of Peace" will be shown in the Olympic theater, for ten weeks, beginning Oct. 18th, at regular theatrical prices. The Chicago engagement will be managed by Wallace Monroe, a well known theatrical manager.

The Rev. Dr. William T. McElveen, of the First Congregational Church, Evanston, who had counted on showing moving pictures at the evening services, on Sunday, Oct. 3d, met with disappointment. He was unable to find a moving picture operator for the occasion, and also found that the Evanston lighting plant failed to supply a strong enough current for the machine. Dr. McElveen also had some trouble over the legality of his showing moving pictures on Sundays, being reminded by an opponent that the Evanston law would not permit them on the Sabbath. After examining the law Dr. McElveen pointed out that it applies only to picture shows "for profit."

E. C. Divine, president of the Strand Theater Co., left for New York Thursday, Sept. 30th, to invite Geraldine Farrar to attend the opening of the new Strand Theater, formerly the old Globe, at Wabash avenue and Seventh street. "Carmen" will be the opening feature at the new house, and in this fine subject Miss Farrar had her first experience before the camera.

Eugene J. Cour, formerly with the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, has been appointed managing director of the Producers Service Company. Mr. Cour is superintending the completion of the new laboratories of the company at River Highlands, Lyons, Ill., giving them a much increased capacity. Mr. Cour for a number of years has been connected with the Chicago newspapers, both in an editorial capacity and as manager of photographic departments. Two years ago he turned his attention to moving pictures and as a camera operator in the Central West and South has achieved some notable beats for his company. He is taking into his new field the spirit and enterprise of his newspaper training. As a close student of the technical side of motion pictures, Mr. Cour has become thoroughly familiar with the manufacturing end of the business.

A striking improvement in posters for photoplays is now noticeable in the bill board and lobby displays showing the Essanay product. These are in the form of lithogravure posters made for the Essanay Company by the Central Lithograph Company of Cleveland. The posters are photographic reproductions of stills taken from the photoplays and add greatly to the drawing power of the poster by giving perfect reproductions of the actors, stage settings and costumes, even to bringing out accurately, in colors, the finest details such as beading, tinsels and the weave of the fabrics used in the productions. The process is screenless and certainly is a great improvement over the old handmade posters. Paper used in "In the Palace of the King" advertising is a very good example of this new poster, as the elaborate costumes used in this production offer ample opportunity for the process to reproduce detail. This feature, together with the color scheme, makes the posters one of the most attractive lines of paper yet furnished to advertise a photoplay.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week At New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The White Pearl" At the Strand.

At the Strand theater Marie Doro, the stage and screen favorite, is appearing in "The White Pearl," a fanciful romance of the Orient, by Edith Barnard Delano. This photoplay tells a fascinating romance, which centers about the love of an American girl and boy, whom destiny transplants to far off Japan, under strange and thrilling circumstances. The story is as follows: On a Japanese island the Sacred Pearl of Buddha is stolen by a Chinaman, who later finds employment on a ship sailing for America. The inhabitants of the island believe that the loss of the sacred jewel will bring them unhappiness. The manner in which the young American gets hold of the Sacred Pearl, prior to his sailing for Japan, and the way his sweetheart, Nancy, becomes linked with the fate of the jewel, furnishes a series of highly dramatic situations.

The last instalment of the patriotic American picture, "Guarding Old Glory," is shown: also a new scientific, and a travel picture, a comedy and the Strand Topical Review. The soloists this week are: Martha De Lachmann, soprano; Alfred De Manby, baritone, and Autumn Hall, violinist.

Mary Pickford at the Broadway.

At the Broadway theater the Famous Players' Film Co. are presenting their latest romantic comedy, "A Girl of Yesterday," featuring Mary Pickford, the popular motion picture star, who is seen in the role of companion to the internationally famous aviator, Glenn Martin, in one of his daring aeroplane flights.

Aside from the delightful mixture of quaint humor and romantic thrills, there are many points of novelty in this remarkable film. For the first time in her life Mary Pickford is seen in an actual aerial flight. It is also the first time that Mary and Jack Pickford appear in their true relationship as brother and sister.

Other attractions are Charles Chaplin in his latest two-part comedy, "Shanghaied," Pathe latest events, new South American Travel Scenics and cartoons.

The Knickerbocker Program.

Conspicuous among the third week's pictures at the Knickerbocker is Thomas H. Ince's "The Golden Claw," with Bessie Barriscale as the star. Mr. Ince did wonders with "The Coward," but his latest picture is fully as interesting. Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson are the stars of D. W. Griffith's contribution to this week's Triangle program. The title of the picture is "The Sable Fuchsia." Hale Hamilton in "Her Painted Hero" is the Sennett release.

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty theater, and "The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Vitagraph, are continuing their remarkable runs.

Richard Ridgeley

RICHARD RIDGELEY, of the Thos. A. Edison, Inc., forces, has attracted no little attention recently because of his combined activities as author and director. On October 13, labeled as a Kleine-Edison feature, there is to be released "The Magic Skin," a photoplay with the production of which Mr. Ridgeley says he is particularly proud to have had to do. "The Magic Skin" is based upon the Honore Balzac story entitled "The Wild Ass's Skin," and the screen adaptation, as well as the direction, is by Mr. Ridgeley. Mabel Trunnelle and Everett Butterfield are featured in the release.

Richard Ridgeley.

In general, the big Ridgeley-Edison pictures of the past few months have featured Miss Trunnelle, Marc MacDermott and Edward Earle, and among these pictures to attract favorable mention have been "The Wrong Woman," "Tragedies of the Crystal Globe," "Eugene Aram" and "Shadows of the Past." Of all of these Mr. Ridgeley claims authorship. The "Magic Skin," with a story that is fanciful and unique, is expected to stand out prominently among the features which are carrying the Kleine-Edison trade mark. Unusual care has been exercised in making the production, and no expense has been spared in providing settings which are quite out of the ordinary. The opportunities provided for good direction are many, and with Miss Trunnelle and Mr. Butterfield in the principal roles, Mr. Ridgeley and the Edison company are eagerly awaiting the verdict of the public, which will be expressed when the picture is released.

BALBOANS QUIT WORK TO WATCH UNIVERSALITES.

Speaking to a reporter at Long Beach, Cal., the other day, J. P. McGowan, directing a troup of Universal players who had been filming a number of scenes for "Helen's Hazards," said: "Not only the hoi polloi dashes madly to see motion pictures, but the picture people themselves like to see the staging of kinematographs.

"That was proved at the Balboa studio in Long Beach, near which a company of Universals took a railroad scene. When there passed about the word that the scene was being staged by our company, every Balboa actor, cameraman, property boy and extra at the plant rushed out to see it. They witnessed the stunt with as much curiosity as would have been displayed by so many school children and with apparently as much pleasure as though they were not making their living at that same profession.

"It was a novel thing to see several hundreds of sailors from 'Neal of the Navy,' cowboys, cowgirls and other folk in all sorts of makeups from the Balboa plant forming the outdoor audience for the Universal show."

BIOGRAPH TO ISSUE FEATURE EVERY WEDNESDAY.

The Biograph Company announces that beginning Wednesday, November 3, and on every alternate Wednesday, it will release, through the regular service, a four-reel subject. The company adds that for the putting on of this extra subject a large stock company will be required, and that in consequence it has canceled its Monday and Saturday releases, the cancellation to take effect October 30.

M. E. HOFFMAN AS STUDIO MANAGER.

It is announced that Milton E. Hoffman has been appointed assistant to the president of the Peerless (World Film) studio at Fort Lee, N. J. Henry Bayard, the present general manager of the Peerless studio, will occupy a similar capacity to the World Film's Paragon studio, also at Fort Lee, N. J.

ARCHBISHOP GILLOW VISITS CLUNE'S STUDIO.

Distinguished Refugee from Mexico Arrives in Los Angeles and Is Impressed by Magnitude of Picture Industry.

ONE OF the most interesting persons to arrive in this city during the week was Archbishop Gillow, who fled from the interior of Mexico to escape the bandit bands. When the distinguished prelate arrived, he heard of the Clune studio, which is now putting on "Ramona," the story by Helen Hunt Jackson. He was immediately interested and visited the studio as the guest of Director Donald Crisp.

Archbishop Gillow and Donald Crisp.

The archbishop expressed much admiration for the sets which have been erected for this film production of the story of California's early days and approved details which mark the likeness to the period which they represent.

"I am greatly surprised. This is my first sight of a moving picture studio and it interests me very much," he remarked. "I had no conception of the vastness of this large industry until I came to Los Angeles. What interests me most is your attention to the small details—and now I see why the pictures of today are so much better than those of the past."

The prelate spent nearly a whole day in going through the streets of the small "pueblo," built in the eucalyptus grove adjoining the Clune studio. He even asked regarding the acquisition of a print, of the completed picture, which he desires to show to his parishioners when he is able to return to Mexico.

Selig Zoo Entertains Swedish Residents.

Quaint folk dances of Sweden participated in by a bevy of pretty girls in native costume was a feature of the big Swedish picnic and benefit held at Selig Zoo park Sunday.

In addition to the dancing there was an elaborate speaking and musical program. Mayor Sebastian and other city officials were present and addressed the merrymakers.

Special dances were executed by Miss Pearl Swanson and Miss Ruby Nelson, and native songs by the Harmony Singing Society.

There are approximately 12,000 Swedish people residing in and around Los Angeles, and nearly all of these were on hand.

Plays Tramp and Loses Good Clothes.

"It's no laughing matter," objected Thornton Thompson, extra motion picture actor, who sought sympathy in his troubles at the office of the state labor bureau.

Thompson said he dressed up in his only good suit to canvass the picture studios for work. He was given a tramp part for the day in a play.

A costume suitable to the part was furnished him and he left his good clothes at the dressing-rooms of the studio to go out to the "location."

When he returned, all of his own clothes were missing. He still wore the tramp costume when he called at the bureau.

"I'll never be able to get a job in these," he complained.

The bureau was doubtful that its authority extended to the recovery of clothing and referred Thompson to the public defender.

Mme. Bourgeois Fondles a Lioness.

When the Universal Company produced "The Tiger Woman," a three-reel animal feature, the company worked on the animal stage at Universal City with a grand collection of beasts of the jungle. Among these was a young and frisky lioness, which might well be called incorrigible. But Madame Bourgeois was the person who feared not—she even made a pet of the young feline—and as a result won much admiration for herself.

Mme. Bourgeois and Ethel.

She took the big cat from the cage and played with her—going so far as to sit on a bench out in the yard.

"The Tiger Woman" has been finished and will be released shortly on the Universal program.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

When the new Vitagraph studio is finished it will have a unique christening. The members of the company will entertain with an informal house warming, a feature of which will be a real old-fashioned barn dance. All guests will wear overalls and calico dresses—and good old cider (soft) will be on tap. Dessert will be gingerbread cookies, apples, and other old-fashioned delicacies.

George Holt, of the Vitagraph, had a narrow escape from death when he fell twenty feet down the side of a cliff. He had a rope tied about his waist and the men above were supposed to keep it taut. He went through some business on a ledge—and then swung out, trusting to the taut rope—but someone had left it slack—twenty feet of slack, to be exact—and he dropped that distance—coming up with a jerk in mid-air. Beyond a sore feeling about his ribs, he declares he is all right—and finished the day's work with his usual vigor.

No sooner had the ground been bought than the plans for the ground-breaking of the twelve-acre tract at Culver City, where Producer Thomas H. Ince will erect a new $30,000 studio for the production of Ince-Triangle features, were made and are assuming concrete form, this week, and, according to an announcement made from Inceville, the epoch-making event will take place within a short time. Architects have completed their plans for the structural work and the various contractors of Southern California are now bidding for the job. With bids in by next week, the contract will immediately be let and work commenced.

Jesse L. Lasky, head of the feature film company which bears his name, is intending to remain here permanently. He is even going to cancel his daily reservations on the limited for the next two months. The head of the Lasky company does so much commuting between the studio and New York that a drawing-room is held for him every day on the Limited and only canceled an hour before the departure of the train. This is done in order that he will be sure of accommodations no matter how short a notice he may have before the time of leaving.

Joseph Wadell, cameraman with the Universal City forces, this week left the studios for a five-day trip from Tia Juana, Mexico, to Vancouver, British Columbia, on an endurance trip in a Chandler car. The car is not to stop from the time it starts on the Mexican line until it has crossed the United States and reached the Canadian line. Wadell is going along to make scenic pictures of the more picturesque bits of landscape along the route.

In view of the additional companies which have recently started to work at the Universal City studios, and the consequent additional sets made necessary for production thereby, more than $10,000 of extra furniture has been ordered by Director General Henry McRae for the property rooms at the western studios. The greater part of this furniture will come direct from the factories at Grand Rapids, Sheboygan and Chicago.

The Universal certainly deserves credit and Robert Z. Leonard, in particular, should be complimented for "The Lass o' Lowrie's," which features charming Helen Ware. The picture, in something over six reels, was privately run Thursday night at the Woodley theater on Broadway to about two hundred persons. Helen Ware portrayed the part of the pit girl, while the minister's daughter was carried across on the screen well by dainty Ella Hall. This picture will be sent out on the regular Universal Broadway Features.

Enrique Vallejo, who is head of the Cinema department at the Clune studio and who is to photograph "Ramona," the first release now under production at this studio, has started a movement to reorganize the Static Club of America.

A visitor from Goldfield says that a company of moving picture men has started under the name of "The Nevada Motion Picture Corporation," which intends establishing a plant at Reno, where they will make pictures. They are capitalized at $250,000.

The first monthly dinner and dance of the Motion Picture Directors' Association of America, Lodge No. 1, was held one night this week at a local hotel. The lodge numbers about sixty directors. Among the directors present were Otis Turner, Robert Leonard, William Robert Daly, Del Henderson and Al Christie. The list of stars included Miss Helen Ware, Ella Hall, Fritzie Brunette and Jack Kerrigan. Otheman Stevens, dramatic critic of the Examiner, in an address, congratulated the directors upon their enterprise.

Crossed wires caused a blaze in the projection room at Quinn's Superba theater one night this week. No one was injured, but a portion of the third reel of the "Climbers" was partially destroyed. Mr. Quinn immediately booked an emergency order. "The House of a Thousand Candles." A funny part of the incident is that the same picture is running at Tally's theater, two blocks down Broadway.

That Griffith intends moving from Los Angeles is disproved by the announcement this week by the studio management that a large new outdoor stage will be built in the course of a few weeks. In addition to this another indoor stage is to be constructed, with roof and sides, and will be equipped with electric lighting systems.

The Scream Club held a Beefsteak Brawl at the Cafe Bristol on Thursday evening, at which about twenty newspaper men were present. The order on the invitation said "Shop talk and the anvil chorus will be punishable according to the capacity of the revelers."

L. O. Vaughn, of Santa Ana, is remodeling his theater on Main street. It is to be enlarged and improved. It is called the Temple theater and has first-run pictures.

Hobart Henley is to be featured in a big serial at the Universal. The first two episodes are ready to be produced and the company is only waiting for the remainder of the story. It is not yet known who will direct this story in chapters.

Mitchell's Creation theater, which is at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Mohawk street, has been completely remodeled and enlarged. The new playhouse opened Saturday evening with a feature program.

Siegmund Lubin has become so infatuated with California that he has almost decided to consolidate and bring to San Diego his studios in Jacksonville, Newport and Phoenix. If this action is made, it means that the Lubin headquarters in San Diego will have to be greatly enlarged.

Charles Giblyn, one of Tom Ince's directors, had charge of the production in Shrine Auditorium of a spectacle in which 400 nobles participated, including the Arab patrol, the Shrine band and chanters.

The two charming Gish girls are now residing in the beautiful "Denishawn," the home of Ruth St. Denis, who is at present on a tour. We may now expect to see many lawn parties, garden fetes and pink teas.

"Pennington's Legacy" is the vehicle that has been chosen for Jack Kerrigan since his return to the civilized studios at Universal City. He spent several months in the mountain wilderness, near Lake Tahoe. Otis Turner will direct the piece, which will be in five reels. Simultaneous with the releases of the feature, the story will be run in Collier's Weekly.

Jessie Burnett, who is working at the Balboa studios at the beach, is not an American, as it would seem, but a native of France. She was born in the Pyrenees mountains, then came to this country and was reared under the shadow of the purple hills of Arizona, among coyotes, sagebrush, and the arid atmosphere of the desert. Later, from the convent, she went to the stage, and eventually landed on the screen.

Hal Roach, director of the Rolin Film Company, is busy this week on another Pathe comedy with his collection of comedians. The lead is in the hands of Harold Lloyd, who is a great fall artist. He is supported by some slapstick men such as Harry Pollard and Bud Jamison, who, by the way, was only last week brought into this company from the Essanay. The leading woman of this company is dainty Bebe Daniels, who is rapidly winning for herself a long list of admirers.

That trade rivalry is practically nil between the real heads of the large manufacturing concerns, was again shown this week when Siegmund Lubin, head of the great Philadelphia film concern, visited Director General Henry McRae at Universal City. Mr. Lubin was escorted through the maze of sets on the enormous stage, and taken all around the big city. Every place he went he expressed his approval of the systems in use at the plant. Mr. McRae has worked wonders in the time he has had charge of the place.

Among the vast throng of American who come out west to be thrilled, and to taste the flavors of the great outdoors, was one miss of the pictures, Beverly Bayne. She joined Francis X. Bushman at the Quality studios in time to participate in a mountain scene hunt. One night she awoke and, looking out the cabin window, saw two moving objects which she took for mountain lions, but which, next morning, proved to be but cows.

Otto Lederer, the make-up wizard, who portrayed seven totally different characters in "The Chalice of Courage," which featured Myrtle Gonzalez, and William Duncan, opposite, is soon to be presented in a new three-reeler now being put on at the western Vitagraph by Billy Wolbert. It is called "The Wander," and has as its leading man William Duncan.

The newest addition to the art and technique departments of the big Triangle studios is a fencing master, who has been especially engaged to teach the art to those who will be featured in "Don Quixote," a new three-cornered play starring De Wolf Hopper. Those who will study the foils are S. Chester Withey and twenty other players.

Back to the footboards and lights went American players this week, when they presented "The Great Divide" at a theater in Santa Barbara. The event was a benefit for some poor people. One of the stars of the legitimate play was Vivian Rich.

"Kenneth McGaffey presents" a notice which says that Harry Hadfield, one of the best-known dramatic directors, is now a student at the Lasky studio under Cecil B. De Mille. It will be several weeks before Mr. Hadfield will be able to start work as he is familiarizing himself with picture conditions before starting the actual making of feature plays.

Billie Burke is a Brick! That's all. She is having the time of her life at Tom Ince's mountain studio. She said so herself. So has everyone else said that she is a "regular" fellow for work. For two solid weeks the little star with the great smile has posed and reposed before the lens. But this week she rested a few hours and a swooping of interviewers soon followed, with the result that some good lines were gleaned from Miss Burke. She expressed much interest in the making of pictures. "Why, they take them all backwards. How in the world do they ever get them straight again? I can't for the life of me see how the picture is run right when they make me go out the door saying 'goodbye,' then later, after going around many times, I come in and say 'hello.' It is certainly funny to me."

One of the unique features of the new Keystone studios now under construction at the Sennett lot, will be a doorless cafe. The eating place will be built without any barricading panels and will be left open always, so that hungry developers from the all-night dark-room may get a good meal between film changing times. During the winter several companies will probably work at times during the night and they will have to be fed.

Carlyle Blackwell is back on the stage at Lasky's, appearing in a film play called "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo." For this picture a duplicate of one of the corners of the Monte Carlo money-losing places has been placed on the stage. During the noon hour the employees play for fun with Theo. Roberts dealing at the faro table. Kenneth McGaffey ran the roulette wheel one noon and won all the buttons from the wardrobe master, and Tom Fortune (not Miss Fortune) won all the nails from "Bill," the stage carp.

Dick Stanton is producing at the Universal, a lively story called "Does It End Right," featuring pretty Myrtle Gonzalez, formerly of the Vitagraph. The story is one that will impress every person who sees it.

Dorothy Gish and Owen Moore are on their way east to appear in several big productions to be staged there. They have completed "Jordan Is a Hard Road," filmatized by Mary H. O'Connor. It is possible that the couple will remain in the east for some time.

Tom Chatterton, who has directed and played leading parts for Tom Ince at the Triangle mountain studios, has joined the Universal and is playing opposite Edna Maison. Their first big picture is "Live and Let Live."

The "Diamond from the Sky" company, under the guidance of Bill Taylor, spent nearly a week in San Diego, getting some exciting scenes for the last few installments of the Diamond serial. In the last scene of the airship men the machine wrecked, naturally enough, just when the film was supposed to register the actual wrecking.

Robert Harron and Elmer Clifton again play brothers in a forthcoming Mutual picture. They were the war brothers in "The Clansman."

World Film's Fall Program

A Galaxy of Famous Stars in Great Productions—Strong Features in Preparation.

THE World Film Corporation has in preparation a series of feature productions far transcending in dramatic intensity and spectacular magnificence anything hitherto produced by the company. The foremost stars, whose popularity is increasing so rapidly that it is impossible for the company to supply enough pictures in which they appear, are working simultaneously day and sometimes at night in order to hasten the completion of the plays in which they are cast. World Film's list of stars is probably not excelled in individual and aggregate popularity by that of any other producing organization. Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Holbrook Blinn, Alice Brady, Vivian Martin, George Beban, Barbara Tennant, Edwin Arden, Frederick Lewis, Ethel Grey Terry are only some of the names of the famous artists working in World Film features.

Albert Capellani has in hand a very great production in which Clara Kimball Young makes the most pretentious appearance of her spectacular career. The name of this production will be shortly announced.

Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady are cast for the leads in "The Rack," a tense drama of love and jealousy, directed by Emile Chautard, who was so successful with "The Boss," in which Mr. Blinn and Miss Brady were so strikingly successful.

"The Gray Mask" will serve to reintroduce Miss Barbara Tennant to her millions of admirers; Edwin Arden plays opposite her. Director Frank Crane says the story is a splendid and originally dramatic one. Crane knows.

MRS. FISKE ENJOYED "VANITY FAIR."

Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske was an interested and delighted spectator of her own "Becky Sharp" in the Edison Masterpiece, "Vanity Fair," released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service October 6. Mr. and Mrs. Fiske last week visited the Kleine studios where the big film was projected for them.

"The filming of 'Vanity Fair' was especially interesting to me," said Mrs. Fiske, "because of the artistic rather than the mechanical problems it presented. Every problem solved in any art means just so much advancement, of course. The picturing of Thackeray's novel offered problems of a purely artistic nature; to present the emotions, wit and satire of the great story without the aid of spoken word.

"I think we have accomplished a great deal in this direction in the 'Vanity Fair' picture, and that through the efforts of the director, the atmosphere of time and place has been quite wonderfully preserved.

"Frankly, I believe the motion picture as a medium of artistic expression is still in its formative state. It is an art that has not yet found itself—though it has, assuredly, found its public. Really, it has not so far found a suitable name for itself—as witness the various absurd and vague terms used to identify it. When its furthest capacities have been discovered; when its limitations have been fixed, then shall we have in the motion picture an art that will be, in the full meaning of the term, superb. Its possibilities reach beyond the boundaries of the imagination. That is why it is so fascinating to the artist. It is a new road, pressing further and further through a wilderness of great possibilities and at every step one is likely to meet with some new and delightful adventure."

EMERSON TO DIRECT FAIRBANKS.

On placing Douglas Fairbanks under a three-year contract, David W. Griffith immediately commissioned John Emerson to stage the new Fairbanks picture, resultant on the hit scored by the young star in "The Lamb," now at the Knickerbocker theater. Mr. Emerson arrived in New York from Los Angeles last week. He spent the first three days in a whirlwind search of locations in the upper part of the city for scenes required in the picture which will have an eastern locale and be staged here. Rehearsals will begin within a week. This beginning of Triangle Film activities in the east means that Griffith will visit New York within six weeks, and he may ultimately decide to divide his time between the east and west coasts. Mr. Emerson, the sub-director of the new picture, is well known as author-star of "The Conspiracy" on the legitimate stage. He brought back with him the films of "Old Heidelberg," which he staged, and "The Scarlet Band," in which he plays the stellar part. Both of these Griffith-supervised dramas are soon to be seen at the Knickerbocker.

William R. Dunn

FROM a position as money messenger with an express company, through the viccissitudes of a career as an actor, is the route traveled by William R. Dunn to the position he now holds as a prominent member of the Vitagraph Stock Company. Mr. Dunn, who is thoroughly American, was born at Astoria, Long Island, on May 23, 1884.

William R. Dunn.

It was during the time when he was acting as money messenger Mr. Dunn first became imbued with a desire to become known on the professional stage, until finally, the lure of the footlights became so strong he gave up his position to become an actor.

During the time when he could lose himself in the identity of the character he was portraying, the fascination of the work held, but continual traveling became irksome and Mr. Dunn concluded he would try moving pictures. After a try-out with one of the smaller producing firms that satisfied him he had at last found a branch of artistic endeavor best suited to his temperaments, he made application for membership in the Vitagraph Stock Company. This was about five years ago and since then he has been gradually forging to the front as a portrayer of character roles with this organization. Mr. Dunn's best known impersonation was Phillip Harding in the sensational screen drama, "The Juggernaut," "The Wreck," "Narcotics," "My Lost One," "For Another's Crime," "The Night of the Wedding," "One Night," etc., are other feature pictures in which he played prominent parts.

JEANNE EAGELS TO BE IN NEW ARNOLD DALY PICTURE FOR PATHE.

Arnold Daly, who is producing the "Ashton-Kirk" series of features for Pathe, has engaged Jeanne Eagels for his new picture, "The House of Fear." Miss Eagels started in upon a theatrical career at the tender age of twelve and, as she says, "played almost every kind of a part in stock and repertoire" for four years in the west. Then came musical comedy for two years, with Richard Carle and "The Pink Lady," and then a season with Billie Burke at the Lyceum. Last season she played the lead with Julian Eltinge in "The Crinoline Girl." She has been engaged for a new stage production to be seen in New York soon. Miss Eagels is a girl of pronounced charm and should make a hit on the screen.

AN ALL-STAR FEATURE.

What is practically the first all-star feature to be introduced in motion pictures is to be released October 18th, by the Kulee Features, Inc., a new moving picture organization which makes its debut with the production of a multiple reel feature, entitled, "How Molly Made Good."

No less than twelve recognized stars of the legitimate stage assisted the heroine in this production. They include Leo Ditrichstein, Cyril Scott, May Robson, Lulu Glaser, Julia Dean, Charles J. Ross, Mabel Fenton, Henry Kolker, Julian Eltinge, Henrietta Crosman, Robert Edeson and Madame Fjorde. The scenario was written by Burns Mantle and Marguerite Gale, a new beauty of the screen, is featured in the role of the heroine.

UNIVERSAL COMPANY AT PORT KENT, N. Y.

Jack Adolfi is directing a company of Universal players at Port Kent, N. Y. In the company are Violet Mersereau, Harry Benham, Florence Crawford, Miss Marcel, Sidney Bray, Assistant Director J. W. Kellette, Cameraman David Wills, Propertyman George Alkein, and Mrs. Mersereau. The play is a three-part subject, written by Elain Stern.

Equitable Secures Lillian Lorraine

LILLIAN LORRAINE, whose wonderful work as star in the numerous Ziegfeld Follies, Shubert's Winter Garden, and later as supreme star of the bigger Keith vaudeville houses, and who is now at Los Angeles devoting her time solely to motion picture work, is to be a feature on the Equitable program early in the forthcoming schedule, at a date in December to be definitely set and announced shortly.

Lillian Lorraine.

Miss Lorraine makes her screen debut on the Equitable program in a specially elaborate production of an original work entitled "Should a Woman Forgive?" which was produced by Messrs. Horkheimer at their Long Beach, Cal., studios, especially for Equitable.

"Should a Woman Forgive" is in five acts, and was staged amid extremely beautiful surroundings, and in scenic sets that, judging from their looks, must have required long, patient work. The story itself, even in the hands of a less talented artiste, would have had a potent appeal. Its striking situations, the element of human interest, and the absolute logic of it all, constitute what should prove to be one of the real big hits of the season.

Flickers

THE American Slide and Poster Co. has not been doing much in the way of publicity of recent months, and I was quite pleased during my last trip to Chicago to find them still housed in the same quarters, in the First National Bank Building. S. VonRonkle, sponsor for this company, informs us that he has disposed of the Milwaukee and Chicago, North Side branch exchanges, which are now operated by the General Film Co., and he is devoting his entire attention to the above mentioned office.

The American Company is specializing in mounting paper for all releases, also regular posters unmounted for all General Film Co. releases. Their mounting plant, although not advertised, is doing a large amount of work for outside exchanges, likewise their advertising slide plant.

That genial personage, Tom Quill, is still calling on the picture trade in Chicago, and telling everybody how perfectly good the Goes Lithograph Co. is. Tom, by dint of hard work and the reliable concern behind him, is cleaning up.

F. O. Nielsen, whom you have all met more than once in New York, Dayton, yes, and any other place a convention has happened, hasn't changed a bit. He is the same old fellow with the same old habits, excepting one. Now he says, no, thank you, I'll have a cigar; or, no, thank you, a little water, please.

Herbert Hoagland, now assistant general manager for the Selig Co., is longing for another week-end on the big white lighted alley.

V. R. Day, of the Essanay Co., after his five months' trip through South America, looks fine and fit. He still aspires to the title of amateur champion, but believe me, Day knows a lot more about pictures than he ever will know about Kelly pool.

I had the thought of New York brought back to me very suddenly one night in front of the Sherman Hotel. What at first sounded to me like one of those well-known underground rumbles we now hear every day along Broadway proved to be that well-known bass voice of George Magie, saying just an ordinary, "Hello, Mac."

I was promised a visit in Chicago by another New Yorker who was sure he would be there during my stay. He disappointed. I won't mention his name unless he breaks his word again. Jack Skerrett, please write.

In Cleveland, H. A. Bandy, district manager for the Triangle Film Corporation, allowed himself to be talked with in his private office, and an interesting little story will be coming from him shortly. MAC.

E. P. Sullivan in Kalem Feature

Will Play Title Role in "The Black Crook"—Much Activity At Cliffside.

A SMALL army of people is working at top speed over at Kalem's Cliffside (N. J.) studios these days. In one part of the spacious grounds, a score or more of girls are assiduously practicing the intricate steps of a chorus number. On one of the big stages men are busily engaged in constructing fairy grottoes, gnomes' dens and other places which, during our youthful days, we imagined were inhabited by immortal creatures. On still another stage, a company of people dressed in the costumes of other days, are working under the eagle eyes of Robert G. Vignola, the Kalem director, who is responsible for some of the most notable successes that company has ever produced.

E. P. Sullivan.

The reason for all this activity lies in the fact that Kalem is engaged upon the task of filming a four-act production of "The Black Crook," the famous extravaganza which created theatrical history and excited such a furor when first presented at Niblo's Garden, New York City, in 1866.

Of more than passing interest in this connection, is the acquisition of E. P. Sullivan, who is to play the title role and assist Mr. Vignola in producing "The Black Crook." Mr. Sullivan, probably more than any other individual, is qualified to act in this dual capacity, because of the fact he has appeared as Herzog, "The Black Crook," upwards of five hundred times upon the stage and has staged the extravaganza for the celebrated Kiralfy Brothers, who were famous for the magnificence of their productions.

Mention has been made of the score of girls rehearsing chorus numbers for the Kalem production. The chorus girls, as we know them today, were first introduced to the public in "The Black Crook," and created a tremendous sensation. The Kalem production also establishes a precedent since in it, for the first time in the history of motion pictures, are seen chorus numbers originated exclusively for use in a photoplay. These numbers, by the way, are being rehearsed under the direction of Julian Alfred.

An unusually strong cast of players has been engaged to enact the roles of Rodolphe, Count Wolfenstein, Amina, Von Puffengruntz, Zamiel, Greppo, Stalacta, etc. Incidentally, Roland Bottomley, the English star who appears in another Kalem production, "The Net of Deceit," makes his bow as a permanent Kalem star, in the role of Rodolphe. It was due to Mr. Bottomley's superb work in "The Net of Deceit," that he has been added to the Kalem stock company. The date upon which "The Black Crook" is to be issued will be announced shortly. The feature will be released in regular service.

MAUDE FEALY GOES TO KLEINE.

George Kleine has engaged Maude Fealy to head a new company. Miss Fealy will be seen in a series of big features during the present season. Her first subject will be "Bondwomen." the making of which is now under way. The latest Kleine star, in accordance with the policy of the company, will be supported by a strong cast.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

ARRANGEMENTS FOR OHIO CONVENTION.

President Sawyer Appoints Local Committees to Take Care of Visitors.

INVITATIONS have been sent to every exhibitor in the state to attend an organization convention in Cleveland October 19 and 20, on call of Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and officers of the Cleveland local. Committees have been appointed and a program of business and entertainment arranged.

The convention, with President Herrington in the chair, promises complete and satisfactory settlement of affairs with regard to the league in this state (Ohio). It is the aim to unify all exhibitors into a compact organization strong enough to combat the forces that have in the past worked to harm the picture business. The permanent alliance of all exhibitors undoubtedly will be the result of this conference—and for years this has been the aim of Cleveland men. Sessions will be held at the Hollenden Hotel. Committees, appointed by President Sawyer of the Cleveland local, include:

Finance—C. A. McGown, A. Mahrer, Frank Kenney, W. H. Horsey and Gus. Schroeder.

Automobile—F. E. Simmons, George Heimbach and C. S. Horner.

Banquet—Ernest Schwartz, Frank Kenney and Sam Bullock.

Shows—Fred Brandt, E. N. Downs and M. A. Malaney.

Manufacturers—W. J. Slimm, Sid. Bartlett and F. J. Schad.

Ladies' Committee—Mrs. S. E. Morris, Mrs. George Heimbach, Mrs. W. J. Slimm, Mrs. E. N. Downs, Mrs. Foster E. Simmons, Mrs. F. E. Brandt, Mrs. Frank M. Kenney and Mrs. B. J. Sawyer.

Speakers—C. A. McGown, A. Mahrer and Frank Kenney.

Publicity—C. A. McGown, E. N. Downs and A. R. McCandlish.

MASSACHUSETTS MEETING.

Bay State Exhibitors Confer on Legislative Matters—Ball December 1.

A MEETING of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held on Wednesday afternoon, September 29, in Rathbone Hall, Boston, Mass. The meeting was addressed by Granville P. Macfarland, editorial manager of the Boston American, who gave some valuable advice to the members regarding the fight against any adverse legislation that might come before the Massachusetts legislature during the coming session.

Following his address, President Ernest H. Horstmann appointed a committee to outline a campaign against legislation. This committee comprises John Lydon, J. Eslow of the Universal Film Company, Manager Harry F. Campbell of the Fox Film Corporation and Mrs. Alice Carroll.

This committee will hold frequent meetings and will advise the members of their decisions. To be successful in their work, it is absolutely necessary that the committee receive the co-operation of every exhibitor in the state. It makes no difference whether that exhibitor is a member of the league, he should feel it to be his duty to help this committee and work with them in their efforts to defeat the enactment of adverse laws.

Chairman S. Grant of the ball committee announced at this meeting that the ball will be held on December 1 in the Boston Arena. The price of the tickets will be one dollar each. This affair proved an unexpected success last year and every effort should be made to eclipse that affair.

A large number of the manufacturers have assured the committee of their intention to send several stars to the affair and every effort will be made to introduce each star to the audience in person.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS ACTIVE AND UNITED.

The Campaign for New Standee Regulations and Against the New Constitution.

THE organized exhibitors of the City of New York had a well attended meeting at the Vitagraph Theater on Friday, October 1, to consider the plan of President Lee A. Ochs for the passage of an ordinance allowing standees in motion picture theaters under certain restrictions. The text of the proposed ordinance was printed exclusively in the last issue of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Ochs called the meeting to order and in a brief resume of the situation urged the exhibitors to get in touch with their respective Aldermen and induce them to vote for the ordinance. Mr. Ochs then called upon W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World to address the meeting on the subject of the fight against the new constitution, the framers of which had given the motion picture interests such scant courtesy. The speaker explained that a committee of film men appeared before the Bill of Rights Committee at Albany to ask that the freedom of the press be extended to the motion picture. The members of the committee who boasted of their ignorance of motion pictures refused to recognize the legitimate rights and aspirations of the film industry. They would not even give the speakers a fair and full hearing. The new constitution, Mr. Bush said, was a thing of shreds and patches and ought to be rejected at the polls. The speaker had brought along sets of slides to be given free to all exhibitors who cared to use them. The slides were quickly used by the exhibitors present. It was resolved to endorse the campaign of The Moving Picture World. The local exhibitors will co-operate with the Moving Picture World in conducting a State-wide campaign.

CALL FOR KANSAS CONVENTION.

The next annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, Kansas branch, will be held in Pittsburg, Kansas, on Monday and Tuesday, October 18th and 19th.

Make a special effort to attend. Even if it does inconvenience you, come. Questions of vital interest to exhibitors, especially the censorship of motion pictures, will be discussed and some method of protecting our rights formulated.

Every exhibitor in the State should attend this meeting. We want to see you at Pittsburg whether you are a member of the league or not. Just so you are an exhibitor is all that is necessary to insure you a welcome. Yours fraternally,

P. J. CONCANNON, Secretary.

HARLEM PICTURE MEN ORGANIZE.

The employees of the moving picture theaters of Harlem, New York, have formed a welfare social club. At a meeting held at the Eagle Theater, 1852 Third avenue, these officers were elected: President, J. Galvin; vice-president, B. Stern; secretary, H. Phillips; treasurer, M. Yerisberg; sergeant at arms, W. Dunham. The club will give a ball at Laurel Garden, 25 East 116th street, Monday evening, October 25.

CINEMA EXHIBITORS THIRD BALL.

The third annual entertainment and ball of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Bronx will be held at Hunt's Point Palace, 163d and Southern Boulevard, on Monday, November 1.

HERRINGTON ISSUES INVITATION.

President Herrington of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has issued an invitation to exhibitors in the States of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kentucky, West Virginia and Pennsylvania to attend the convention of Ohio exhibitors at Cleveland on October 19 and 20. All exhibitors will be welcome and the Cleveland members have made arrangements to give everybody a good time.

E. H. Calvert, Essanay Director

E. H. CALVERT, one of Essanay's leading directors, has gone on a hunting and fishing trip to the Ozarks, in Southern Missouri, after several months of strenuous work. Mr. Calvert is an expert with the gun, having been one of the best marksmen in the army. A West Point man, he retired as a captain after fourteen years' service, to go on the stage.

E. H. Calvert.

Mr. Calvert spent the summer at Chattanooga, Tenn., where he directed the series of "Tish" photoplays by Mary Roberts Rinehart, as well as several other photoplays, in some of which he himself took the leads.

He then went to "The Pines" near Waukegan, Ill., where he directed "The Man Trail," Essanay's six-act photoplay taken from the recently published novel by Henry Oyen. Since then he directed "The Circular Path" and "The Outer Edge," two three-reel dramas featuring Henry B. Walthall and Warda Howard, as well as several other plays.

Mr. Calvert had a wide stage experience before joining Essanay as an actor and later as a director. He played the part of Captain Hogman in "Arizona" and Messala in "Ben Hur." He also played in "The House of a Thousand Candles," with E. H. Holland, in "A Knight for a Day," "Coming Through the Rye," and many other well known plays, besides acting for some time in stock.

HARRIS PRODUCING "FOR SALE, A BABY."

Perry N. Vekroff, who recently produced the film version of "School Bells" for the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company, has commenced the production of "For Sale, a Baby," from the famous Harris song by that title at the Kinemacolor studios at Whitestone. Arthur Donaldson is playing the leading role of Jacob Cohen. He is supported by Florence Hackett, Jack Johnston and Somia Masselle.

"For Sale, a Baby," will be five reels in length. The story deals with a baby who is found and brought up in humble surroundings by poor foster parents. The entrance of a young millionaire in disguise, when the baby is grown, who falls in love with the girl, and the subsequent disclosure of her true identity make a most charming and heart touching drama.

This is the third of the pictures produced from scenarios written by Charles K. Harris, after famous songs of his own composition.

V-L-S-E MANAGERS AS EDITORS.

Taking their cue from the helpfulness to them of the home office's much talked-of house organ, "The Big Four Family," two of the branch managers of the V-L-S-E have donned the editorial mantle with a considerable degree of success. These are Tom North, manager of the Seattle branch, who is issuing every week a breezy, bracing newspaperlet, called "V-L-S-E Pals," and E. R. Pearson, in charge of the Kansas City office, who made his bow as a journalist this month with a publication called "The Big Four Clansman." Mr. Pearson issues the "Clansman" monthly, while "Pals" comes out every Saturday. As a matter of fact, Mr. North found that the interest among exhibitors in the paper was so marked that after the first four issues he was forced to enlarge its size from 6 by 9 inches to 10½ by 14.

GUNNING-TICKARDT.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Helen Renick Tickardt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Tickardt of Circleville, Ohio, to Fred C. Gunning of New York. The ceremony was performed at Circleville on Thursday, September 13.

Edmund Breese For Metro

EDMUND BREESE, the eminent dramatic actor, whose popularity has been growing ever since he began "roughing it" in the adventurous characters he has portrayed in the Popular Plays and Players of Metro picturizations of Robert W. Service's stirring poems, beginning with "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," has scored again in the adaptation of "The Song of the Wage Slave," now scheduled for release in the Metro program. The picture teems with thrilling episodes and shows Mr. Breese at his best.

Edmund Breese.

In "The Song of the Wage Slave" Mr. Breese is called upon to exemplify many occupations that are absolutely hazardous in their undertaking. His adventures carry him down into the mines, where he swings a pick with "the best of 'em"; next he is a lumberjack, superintending the dynamiting of a log jam; again he is a prospector flirting with death on the ragged edge of a dangerous cliff.

Breese is thoroughly at home in these heroic parts, his characterization of them being an artistic triumph. His sturdy nature and robust physique stand him in good stead, for few actors could possibly withstand the hardships, or accomplish the feats he does, in the picturization of the Service poems. The fine highlights and shadows of emotion are faithfully portrayed by this capable actor, who possesses the rare gifts essential for an adequate presentation of the chief character in Service's powerful poem.

"The Song of the Wage Slave" is the second of the Popular Plays and Players Metro series of Service poems picturized, and Mr. Breese was never seen to better advantage. He is supported by a strong cast, and many of the pictures,, made with "the great outdoors" for a background, are wonderful features in themselves.

Virginia Foltz Returns To Profession

DASHING Virginia Foltz, one of the stage idols of a few seasons ago, daughter of Mrs. Clara Shortridge Foltz, the Los Angeles attorney, and now a prominent figure in the Los Angeles smart set, has been coaxed out of her retirement by the lure of the films and has joined Pallas Pictures. She makes her first appearance in "The Gentleman from Indiana" in support of Dustin Farnum.

Virginia Foltz.

Virginia Foltz, prior to her marriage two years ago to a well known realty man of California, was known from coast to coast for her Pepita in "Mme. Sherry," a part she played for three straight seasons. Prior to that she toured South America at the head of "The Merry Widow."

The return of Virginia Foltz in the cast of "The Gentleman from Indiana" suggests the superior personnel which moving pictures are able to attract through offering women the opportunity to lead both a domestic and a professional life.

Her advent into the moving picture colony occasioned much surprise among her many friends in Los Angeles.

Louise Bates Now "Falstaff Girl"

THERE is wailing and gnashing of teeth along Broadway, in the vicinity of the white lights, also several managers are cursing at moving pictures for their inroads on the ranks of talent—for Louise Emerald Bates has forsaken Broadway and gone forty-five minutes thence, to Thanhouser's at New Rochelle. Miss Bates has accepted an engagement to become Edwin Thanhouser's "Falstaff Girl," in which Riley Chamberlin, Arthur Cunningham, Claude Cooper and Frances Keyes are now cavorting.

Louise Bates.

Louise Bates has for the past few years been one of the most magnetic figures in musical comedy. She was the prima donna in "The Passing Show" and played the lead with Julian Eltinge in "The Fascinating Widow." She is a blonde beauty with one of those spontaneous personalities that looks as if it is going to break out any second. She is blessed with the kind of a figure that Ziegfeld catches audiences with, and a smile that continually plays tag all over her facial features. Blanche Ring's famous smile is surpassed by fifty per cent. of lusciousness.

By featuring her in Falstaff comedies Mr. Thanhouser will set a precedent, for Miss Bates is peculiarly fitted, naturally and by training, to introduce a style of work as yet unknown in pictures.

Adele Farrington

MISS ADELE FARRINGTON has been engaged especially for the lead in "This Is the Life," the third of the famous "Buck Parvin" series from the pen of Charles E. Van Loan now in production at the Santa Barbara studio of the American Film Company, Inc. Miss Farrington essays the role of Mrs. Addie Gribble, a lay person afflicted with an unconquerable ambition to shine as a picture star. The author has woven into the story a cascade of gems from his storehouse of fun, and Director William Bertram has made an accurate and effective transition.

Adele Farrington.

As Mrs. Gribble Miss Farrington insists that she be permitted to perform all sorts of remarkable stunts, that her rise to stardom may be the more quickly accomplished. And the director lets her have her own way with the result that "This Is the Life" is filled with thrill after thrill. She is lowered from the roof of a burning building and left suspended in midair, while flames and smoke encompass her, and then forced to endure the ordeal of a good drenching from a hose in the hands of the local fire fighters.

Also she drops from the branches of a tree into a deep and slimy pool of stagnant water. Miss Farrington has the support of Art Acord, as Buck Parvin. The fourth of the Van Loan series is now being adapted by William Pigott and will be called "Film Tempo."

J. Frank Glendon

ONE of the latest additions to the ranks of motion picture leading men is J. Frank Glendon, who has been for a number of years a shining light upon the operatic, dramatic and vaudeville stage. He is a native of Shoteau, Montana, where his father was a Methodist minister. Shoteau is 55 miles from the nearest railroad and Mr. Glendon says that he remembers well in the days of his boyhood seeing his father start off to the church with his Bible under one arm and his rifle under the other.

J. Frank Glendon.

Until the age of twenty he lived the life of a Western boy, which includes a good deal of time spent on horseback, throwing a lasso and shooting with a rifle.

From the red school house at Shoteau he went to finish his education at Wesleyan University in Helena, Montana. He studied vocal music at the college and became a local celebrity. He left town suddenly one day with the Roscian Opera Company, who needed a singer of basso roles very much. Thus started his stage career which has extended for a period of ten years. He continued singing in opera for several years until the opera business began to wane. He then took to playing parts in dramatic productions and stock companies. As the pictures continued to get in their work on the stage drama he found refuge in vaudeville. In 1914 he burned his bridges behind him and plunged into the silent drama at Philadelphia, through the kindness of a Mr. Lubin, who resides in that city. His first feature engagement was to play the leading part in "The Salamander" for the B. S. Moss Company. He is at present playing the lead opposite Emmy Whalen at the B. A. Rolfe studios.

BERNHARDT'S LAST YEAR ON THE SCREEN.

The Universal has just received a cablegram from its London headquarters that the negatives of "Jean Dore," the Sarah Bernhardt production filmed in Europe, are on the way here, which is interesting, in view of the fact that the actress' personal tour has been twice postponed and may even be wholly abandoned.

Here we have once more a striking illustration of the amazing development of the motion picture art which has enabled the great Frenchwoman to take just the precaution which will permit the millions of playgoers all over the world to pay her homage even if she never in the flesh faces the public again. The rumors that Madame Bernhardt was having trouble with her artificial leg need hardly be denied when it is stated, the cables proclaim, that never in all her career has she entered into the spirit of an undertaking with more zest and less apparent fatigue than in the picturization of "Jean Dore."

The extraordinary feature of this achievement is that not only will Bernhardt be seen in many cities and countries simultaneously, but for the first time in the history of stage or screen a new play by a Parisian author of great renown will be seen on the screen before it is produced here as a spoken play.

DR. BOSEKE ON THE JOB.

Dr. E. J. Boseke, who spent about two months in New York City, during which time the Associated Film Sales Corporation was formed, has returned to his home in Santa Barbara, California, and has taken up his duties at the Santa Barbara motion picture studios. He wires that his companies are hard at work on some new ideas in the way of two-reel dramas to be released on the Associated program.

Norbert Lusk

NORBERT LUSK, magazine writer and photoplaywright, formerly with Lubin and World Film, has been engaged by Universal for a long period. Mr. Lusk will contribute original stories from time to time, but his work will be chiefly confined to feature adaptations, the first of which, a version of the legendary German classic "Undine," has been completed.

Work of arranging for the screen a series, not serial, of twelve three-reel stories, each episode distinct in itself, is now being carried on. The well known English novelists, C. N. and A. M. Williamson, authors of "The Lightning Conductor," "The Car of Destiny," and other best sellers, are under contract to write this series, entitled "The Journal of Lord John," the release date of each installment and its appearance in The Ladies' World being simultaneous. The authors are now in this country and Mr. Lusk is preparing the scripts of the detective romance in collaboration with them. William Garwood will be starred as Lord John, and is now in Universal City engaged on the initial chapter, with prominent players in his support.

Norbert Lusk.

Current Vitagraph and Kalem releases, "A Pillar of Flame," and "The Curious Case of Meredith Stanhope," are also from Mr. Lusk's typewriter. His success in fitting Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby with congenial roles in "The Double Life," has encouraged Mr. Lusk to begin work on a story for them in which Miss Theby will be cast for a character entirely new to the screen.

"PENNINGTON'S CHOICE" FINISHED.

The Quality Pictures Corporation has finished the production of "Pennington's Choice," a five-reel story of the Canadian Northwest, in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne play the leading roles. The story is one of intense interest, with many thrilling dramatic situations that are unusual. Many of the scenes photographed in this picture were taken at Bear Valley, Cal., where the rugged rocks and nature's beauty spots have given to the picture beautiful backgrounds. Several scenes were taken in Mt. Shasta, California, which is nearly a thousand miles from the Quality Pictures Corporation studio in Hollywood.

MONROE ISEN, NEW YORK BRANCH MANAGER OF ASSOCIATED.

The Associated Film Sales Corporation has been fortunate in securing the services of Monroe Isen as branch manager of their New York exchange. Mr. Isen is a well-known exchange man, having been with the Universal's Twenty-third street branch for several years, where he made many friends of the leading exhibitors of New York. He was also assistant manager of the Kriterion Film Service when that concern was releasing. His new offices are at 110 West Fortieth street, where he is welcoming his many friends among the exhibitors.

BRADLEY WRITES A BOOK.

Willard Bradley, "Mayor" of Greenwich Village, America's Latin Quarter, who is well known in the realm of motion pictures, by virtue of having been one of the original producers, has written a book.

It is a treatise on the art of the scenario entitled "The Photo-Dramatist." It is profusely illustrated with scenes from a few of the motographic masterpieces, and will contain a few pointers to the prospective photoplaywright from the pen of D. W. Griffith. It will appear about October 16.

Ohio State League Call

Meeting to Be Held at Columbus to Protest Action of Censors.

Columbus, Ohio, October 1, 1915.

Chalmers Publishing Company,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: I have received letters and telegrams from exhibitors all over the state of Ohio, requesting me to call a special meeting for the purpose of protesting against the action of the Censor Board in rejecting "Hypocrites" and "The Birth of a Nation."

Other matters of special importance to Ohio exhibitors will come up for discussion.

Kindly announce in the columns of the World that all members of Ohio State Branch No. 1, M. P. E. L. of America, and all other exhibitors of motion pictures, meet in Columbus on Tuesday, October 19, at the Chittenden Hotel at 10 a. m. Both a morning and afternoon session will be held.

Yours truly,
MAX STEARN, President.

GEORGE KLEINE OPENS NEW OFFICE IN CINCINNATI.

A new Kleine office, to handle the features of the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, has been opened in Cincinnati, to care for the ever-increasing volume of business from that territory. The office will be in charge of H. A. Bugie, promoted out of the New York office, and will be located at 138-140 West Seventh street.

MYRTLE STEDMAN ELECTED MEMBER BOARD OF TRADE.

Myrtle Stedman, the popular star of The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, has received the distinction of being the first woman elected to become a member of the newly organized Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, which is composed of prominent people and firms in the various branches of the industry.

Lillian Niederaur

LILLIAN NIEDERAUR is a native of Boston, where she received her schooling and grew up from a child to womanhood. At the age of eighteen Miss Niederaur was much in demand at local amateur entertainments and was very popular with the society people whom she entertained at the receptions. It was at one of these local affairs that Manager Dennison of the Malley-Dennison Stock Company, then playing at the Savoy theater, Boston, saw and observed her dramatic ability. This meeting resulted in a trial engagement for Miss Niederaur at the Savoy theater, and her clever portrayal of the character she had been cast for was so pronounced she was immediately placed on the regular payroll of the theater, after which she played many important roles, remaining with the Malley-Dennison Stock Company several seasons continuously. Leaving Boston, she joined a number of traveling road shows, all artistically successful but some of them financially disastrous; but it gave Miss Niederaur much practical experience in theatricals. Later, Miss Niederaur arrived in New York, but her past reputation as an accomplished ingenue and character woman had preceded her and she was quickly engaged by A. G. Delamater to play a difficult role in "Graustark." The following season Miss Niederaur engaged with the Cohan & Harris forces to play an important role in "Nearly Married." During the early part of the current season Miss Niederaur was leading woman with the Hamilton Players of New York City and at the same time played the leads for the Sterling Camera & Film Company in its film productions, making her first appearance in the five-part New York detective story, "The Game of Three," as Mazie King, the adventuress. Miss Niederaur is a very beautiful woman and an accomplished actress.

Lillian Niederaur.

Noted Author Writes For Equitable

Richard Le Gallienne Succumbs to Motion Pictures and Contributes a Scenario.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE has, at last, succumbed to the jingle of the screen dollars. He has just completed a sensational five act scenario for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation entitled "The Chain Invisible," which he has constructed with a foreword of more or less interest to the producing company and the public at large.

"The Chain Invisible," says Le Gallienne, "is founded on the proposition that a healthy, normal man and woman, each entirely dissimilar from the other in birth, breeding, education, tastes, temperament and disposition, must inevitably fall in love with each other, provided they are constantly thrown into each other's society and have absolutely no opportunity for conversation or intimacy with any other human being.

"This theory is advanced on the belief that such falling in love is merely the inexorable working of nature—that two people so living are bound together by an invisible chain which merely stretches if they chance to be separated afterwards. But the chain never breaks."

In order to get the parts into right hands it was decided to have twenty copies of the scenario written and one given to each of the noted players associated with Equitable, and then have the players themselves vote as to who should play the important roles.

Among the players who will be asked to vote are Robert Edeson, Kathryn Osterman, Lenore Ulrich, Florence Reed, Clara Whipple, Lily Cahill, Robert T. Haines, Margarita Fischer, Edwin Arden, Brandon Tynan, Alexandra Carlisle, Gail Kane, Katharine Kaelred, Charles J. Ross, Hilda Spong, Molly McIntyre, Helen Ware, and Thomas A. Wise. The men will have two votes each, and the women one, which will even the matter of counts.

Richard Le Gallienne has been one of the foremost fictionists since 1887. Since 1912 big motion picture interests have been endeavoring to inveigle him into creating characters and scenes available for the screen, and which would be in keeping with his high standing as an author and literary critic. All their blandishments were resisted, however, until the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation invited him to see how its pictures were presented and join the ranks of its writers, backing up the invitation by a financial consideration which carried a great deal of weight. "The Chain Invisible" was the result.

VOGUE FILMS, INC., NEW MUTUAL COMEDY.

Announcement is made of a brand new comedy producing company, Vogue Films, Inc., which will have its first release on the Mutual program in November. The advent of this new company is without undue noise or preliminary trumpeting, having completed its organization without a hint of the plan reaching the trade. Studios have been obtained in Los Angeles, and work is already in progress, although actual turning of the crank on the first picture will not take place until next week.

There will be no announcement as to comedians until later, except that they will be of the artistically eccentric kind, set in stories that have understandable plots. The resultant comedy situations will be legitimate ones, a departure from the often seen "laughs for laughs' sake" construction.

The managing director of the new organization is admittedly one of the master producers of the country, and equally well known abroad. He will devote his entire time to Vogue Films, an assurance that the exceptional quality marking his work will be given to the forthcoming comedy releases. The entire financing of the company was done in the West.

ADDITION TO SELIG CHICAGO PLANT.

A new addition to the Selig Polyscope Company's plant in Chicago has just been completed for the purpose of housing the laboratories and technical departments. The new addition, built of steel, brick and stone, is three stories high, and new machinery installed in this addition aggregates in cost many thousands of dollars. The new addition includes the negative department, assembling department, developing department, printing department, perforating department, drying rooms, machine shop and film inspection department. There is also a job printing office in the new addition.

The film editorial department, with modernly-equipped projecting rooms, is also located in the new addition, as are the editorial rooms of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial. The great vaults, which contain new films, negatives and other equipment, are also found in the new addition to the Selig plant. The new building was recently occupied and is in active operation.

Edwin Arden in World Film

IN EDWIN ARDEN the World Film Corporation has secured the services of one of the soundest and best-known actors in the United States who has contributed to the stage a long list of fine and manly impersonations which have created for him a wide public.

He graduated with Keene and Booth and made some of his earliest successes with W. H. Crane, Maude Adams, Kyrle Bellew, Eleanor Robson and Madame Simone. One of his most recent parts was that of George D'Alroz in "Caste"; he played in "Raffles," "Diplomacy," "The Thief" and many other famous successes.

Experience in stock, appearances in "Romeo and Juliet," "Julius Caesar" and many other great productions confirmed Mr. Arden's knowledge of the requirements of high-class stage work, which has stood him in good stead in the few pictures that have so far revealed his screen efforts to the motion picture theatergoing public.

Mr. Arden screens exceedingly well, has an agreeable personality, and, possessing a vigorous, refined and impressive style of acting will surely please the patrons of World Film. The name of the first photoplay in which Mr. Arden will appear under the World Film banner will be duly announced.

Edwin Arden.

NEW KALEM PLANT AT LOS ANGELES.

The announcement that Kalem Company is to build a big new plant at Los Angeles is in line with the general policy of consolidation and improvement of production facilities among the older producing companies. Kalem has just finished a complete modern studio at Cliffside, N. J., as headquarters for its Eastern productions, and the new California plant will effect the consolidation of all its operations on the Pacific Coast, where it has heretofore maintained three separate studios. It is now offering for sale the newest and best of its three old locations at Hollywood.

Both the New York and Hollywood studios, which the company has outgrown, are well equipped, efficient, up-to-date plants, and will undoubtedly be snapped up by producers who are looking for bargains in ready-made studios.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

Still on the Map.

MISS FLORENCE L. CURRIER, who helped to put Barton, Vermont, on the map, sends us a few comments that are worth while. She says:

The music page in the Moving Picture World has been so infrequent of late that I had almost suspected you had given up in despair; but you mustn't. There is a greater need for it all the time with the three to six-part stories now so much in vogue, and which require the most adroit handling or they are badly marred by their musical accompaniments.

Opinions to the contrary, I still believe in the big organ for cities and large towns and the lone piano for the hamlets and medium sized towns where they cannot afford an organ. Were I a manager or proprietor of any picture house I would save every extra dollar for a good pipe-organ rather than use a cheap orchestra. (The reader will note Miss Currier says "good pipe-organ" as compared with "cheap orchestra." In this we can all heartily agree with her. She continues):

One player will always handle the pictures better than several, and I am glad to find Mr. E. S. Rogers agreeing with me.

A Mr. Nickle, whose article appears in the Moving Picture World issue of July 3d, is right. If we picture players are placed where we can see the screen without being ourselves seen by the audience, every one of us will produce better musical settings for the pictures. (I can also concur gladly in this. The audience should not be detracted by the musician nor the musician by the audience. It works both ways.—C. E. S.) Miss C. says further:

I have never offered special programs for any particular picture, because if I am to be of any assistance to those who play in picture houses, it will be they who play in the smaller up-country theaters, and with releases of over 100 per week such programs could be of little value to the people I try to help. (Except to give them a working idea of the kind of music appropriaet to certain pictures and how placed.—C. E. S.)

Remember, too, it is very hard for we pianists to find the large quantities of music we must have, and few can get special stuff just when needed. It is strange that some good musical magazine doesn't have a special department devoted exclusively to picture music. There must be over 20,000 of us playing every night in picture houses, and they are neglecting an opportunity to increase circulation and be of benefit to us.

Kalem is on the right track when in producing "Midnight at Maxims" they also furnish the musical score. I was afraid of this picture until I learned this fact. Perhaps I won't confine myself to the score in its entirety, but it will certainly offer the cues and the general theme.

This is what the up-country pianists may probably do with other programs of special pictures. Then again, perhaps you may find the Kalem score perfectly adaptable to your needs. Whichever way you look at it, music programs for special pictures can be very helpful at times, providing they are carefully and thoughtfully arranged. They will at least suggest the nature of the music required and where to play it. As to its interpretation—well, that is up to the pianist or orchestra leader anyway, no matter who chooses the music.

Musical Magazines.

The above correspondent advances the idea that some good musical magazine should include a department for picture music. Well, I don't know. Maybe it would be all right—for the picture musician who cannot afford a great outlay for music; what would there be in it for the magazine? Increased circulation, yes—principally among those who buy little or nothing. But if it ever looks like a paying proposition somebody will try it. Meanwhile our present magazines, though not pretending to cater to picture musicians, contain much that is useful. Any pianist in possession of a few years' back numbers of the "Etude," for example, has a store of good characteristic music, every number of which can be used at some time in picture playing.

Exchanging Music.

Why cannot someone establish a bureau of exchange through which pianists and others could exchange music with one another? Of course, if one wants to keep all the music he owns this would not appeal to him; he is accumulating a library. But they who feel they must change music every night and cannot afford the expense, might find it profitable to exchange with others in the same position. This has been suggested before, but to me it seems a good idea, so I am suggesting it again.

Going Down?

Our old friend H. R. Seeman, who used to send us such excellent orchestral programs from New Orleans, has this to say about his home town:

So much is being published regarding music for the picture in the columns of the Moving Picture World, and it is gratifying to know that there seems to exist in the Northern and Eastern States a special interest by both manager and leader to make the music what it should be in a picture theater.

It is discouraging to know that so few of the leaders and picture players in the South (New Orleans especially) have taken the opportunity afforded through your department to make their music what it should be to the picture. These conditions are largely brought about by the absolute indifference shown by the class of managers and owners who are content with anything so long as there is a noise continuously. Consequently, today in this city of nearly 400,000 inhabitants there is not one orchestra employed in a picture theater.

I hope soon to see in this locality a feature house with an orchestra playing the pictures minutely. Surely there is a field for such. Today our largest picture theaters are offering less inducement to their patrons than the small picture houses in their immediate neighborhood.

Too much cannot be said regarding orchestra leader playing his picture properly. He can only consider himself assured when he will devote proper time, study and effort in making his music a part of the picture.

I have only given portions of Mr. Seeman's letter—those parts referring to conditions in New Orleans. The balance of the communication was mostly good advice to leaders. Judging from what Mr. Seeman has shown us in the past, I do not believe present conditions are due to past performances of leaders—at least, not in Mr. S.'s case. Do you remember how they put on "As You Like It" at the Lafayette theater in New Orleans and Mr. Seeman's share in it? Mr. Abe Seligman was the manager at that time, and he spared no pains in putting his pictures on in the best possible manner—including musical accompaniments. What's the matter? Has Mr. Seligman changed his mind or his job; or didn't the town sufficiently appreciate the right kind of picture shows?

Mr. Seeman compares his locality with northern and eastern states. The most of them are better off in respect to picture music than his town, but he mustn't overlook the Pacific states and other western places. Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles and a number of cities out there have got a lot of us backed off the map.

"The Melting Pot."

Mr. Harry I. Garson, managing director of the Broadway-Strand Theater Company, Detroit, Michigan, kindly sends the musical setting which he arranged for "The Melting Pot," which attracted much comment when that feature was shown at the Broadway-Strand theater:

1—When Walker Whitesides appears as Violinist, play March from Bacchus "Sylvia Ballet" (Delibes) until "David's Music Brings Dreams of America."

2—Play eight bars Intermezzo "Cavaliera Rusticana." Then segue:

3—"Romance in F minor" (Tschaikowsky) until Vera in her father's arms; then segue:

4—"Chanson Triste" (Tschaikowsky) until title: "As Governor of Kishineff, Ravendal, is Ordered to Kill the Jews." Then segue:

5—"Russian Hymn"—until title: "Upon a Mission of Mercy, Vera," etc.

6—"Hearts Ease" (Moret).

7—"Russian Hymn" until Easter procession. Segue:

8—"Christ Is Risen" (Sullivan) until bell rings.

9.—"Peer Gynt Suite." ("In the Halls of the Mountain King.") Play during massacre about seven minutes after David is shot by Ravendal and takes doll from dead sister. Then:

10—"Kol Nidri" once and segue.

11—"Visions" (Tschaikowsky) until title: "All Through the Night the Passion of Hate, etc."

12—Selection, "La Boheme" (Puccini) about nine minutes; when child on boat throws American flag to David, segue:

13—"Somewhere a Voice is Calling Me" (Tate) until dance hall scene.

14—Play fast waltz for Apache Dance; then:

15—"La Cinquantaine" (Gabriel-Marie) until title: "The Bond of Music."

16—Play eight measures and repeat "Kuiawiak" (Wienawski), segue:

17—"The Perfect Song" (from "Birth of a Nation"), Breil, until David in garret. Segue:

18—"Nur Wer Die Schusucht Keunt" (Tschaikowsky), play until David meets Vera's father; then segue:

19—"Elegie" (Massanet) until David throws revolver on table.

20—Play three minutes from finale of "Egmont Overture" (Beethoven), then segue.

22—"Star Spangled Banner" to close.

N. B.—At title: "The Night of the Concert" when orchestra scene is on screen, have orchestra imitate tuning up.

No. 20—Have leader time overture from the end so as to finish overture with orchestra in picture.

"Lady Audley's Secret."

Carrie Hetherington, who has contributed to our department many times in the past, submits her musical setting to this Fox feature. Here it is:

Start with "Fleeting Thoughts Waltz" (Garagusi).
After days of courtship, "Spring Song" (by Tewksbury).
Following day, "Dearest Waltz" (by Browne).
Remembering mother was insane, "Intermezzo" (by Mosckowski).
Weeks later, "Melody in D" (by Haasz).
Months later, "Scenes that are Brightest" (by Wallace).
Applies for job, "La Parisienne" (by Richards).
Delirious, "Loreley" (by Seeling).
Lucy's first visit, "Love Dreams" (by Blanke).
Later, "Wedding March" (Mendelssohn.
Homeward bound, "Quaker Girl Waltz" (by Monckton).
Lucy sees article in paper, "Semiramide potpourri."
On board ship, "Caro mio ben" (by Giordani).

THEATER ADVERTISING IN SEATTLE.

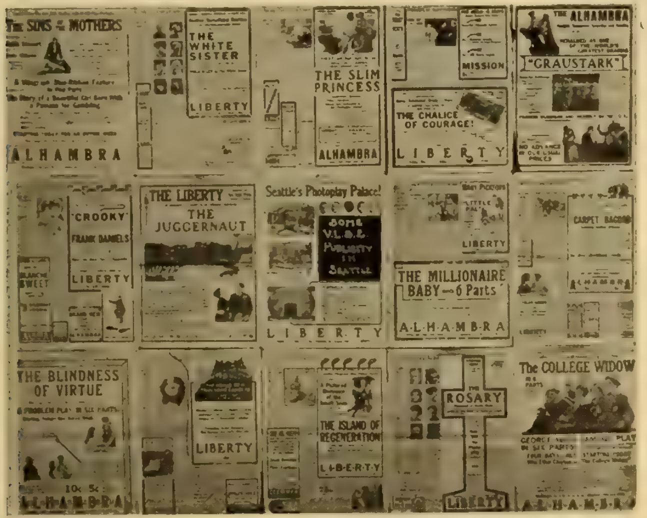
The accompanying illustration is a reproduction of a ten-foot-wide poster, compiled by Tom North, manager of the Seattle office of the V-L-S-E, showing three days' advertising placed by exhibitors of that city to advertise Big Four features, in addition to one hundred twenty-four-sheet stands.

Three theaters in Seattle alone, it is understood, spend $60,000 a year in newspaper advertising, as a result of which that city with a population of 300,000 people sells approximately 300,000 tickets for feature photoplays every week at prices ranging from ten to forty cents.

These theaters, as will be noted from the illustration, use quarter pages, half pages and full pages, with the result that from a few small, inconspicuous theaters that alone existed two years ago there have grown some of the finest moving picture theaters in the country.



Reproduction of a Poster, Ten Feet Wide, Compiled from Three Days' Advertising of V-L-S-E Features in Seattle.

Moving picture statistics show that these theaters do four times the business per capita of the other cities of the United States.

ASSOCIATED COMPANIES TO LOS ANGELES.

The Associated Film Sales Corporation is preparing to send two comedy companies to Los Angeles, California, and they will be located at the D. L. Burke studios, where additions and alterations are now being made. These two comedy companies will work at the Deer Brand studios independently, all winter, which will give the Associated program four additional comedies a week.

MUNICIPAL ADVERTISING THROUGH MOVING PICTURES.

By Frank C. Perkins.

The accompanying illustration shows the moving picture man taking pictures of the parade and sports held on July 5, 1915, at Redlands, California. This camera was bought by the Chamber of Commerce two years ago and many films have been taken, among them one of interesting and historic points in and around Redlands; one of the orange industry from seed to consumer; another of the "road building bee," at which 200 prominent citizens, including bankers, doctors, merchants and millionaires spent one day widening and improving a road into our mountains, and a film was also taken of the Fourth of July celebration in 1913, and also of the celebration July 5, 1915.

Taking Pictures for Redlands, Cal., Board of Trade.

It may be stated that the camera man is a local photographer who has had experience in taking moving pictures. He takes the work on contract, guaranteeing 1,000 feet of perfect film, and a committee from this organization works with him, planning the details and general film. The film is shown in one of the local moving picture shows. The Chamber of Commerce takes the house for one or two nights, paying the proprietor his house expense. He is always willing to give us the house for the amount of advertising he receives. Then the film is shown together with the regular program of pictures and the receipts, above the house expenses, go to the Chamber of Commerce for publicity purposes.

South African Letter.

Kroonstad, O. F. S., South Africa.

UNDER the title of the African Film Productions, Limited, a new company has been formed for producing films locally on a hitherto undreamt-of scale. The producer, who has been engaged after negotiations extending over many months, is Mr. Lorimer, who leaves New York on the 25th of September. The company is prepared to consider plots and scenarios, and likewise applications from those who are anxious to join the staff as film actors. All such applications must be made by letter and addressed to the manager of the African Film Productions, Limited, P. O. Box 2787, Johannesburg, Transvaal, South Africa. Scenarios must be typewritten and should bear the full name and address of the sender. They will be read by competent judges, but no decision will be made until December 1, next. Each scenario submitted should be South African in character and atmosphere.

Rumors and Indications of a New Exchange.

Dame Rumor has been busy lately spreading the story of a new company about to be formed. The African Theaters Trust admits nothing. I will, however, state that a new company is about to be formed, if all goes well; but at present I cannot divulge more details. The Theaters Trust has fully ninety-eight per cent. controlling interest in all bioscope theaters scattered over South Africa; so, unless this United Film Supply Company has a large capital, it is liable to become non est in a few months.

Catering to the South African Fan.

The African Theaters Trust has begun producing a new weekly magazine, entitled "Stage and Cinema." The press notices and side line talk is, to my mind, fair. No doubt, improvements will come as the paper continues to be published, but a heap of good things to give joy to the South African fan—and he is slowly but surely increasing—could be included at very little extra cost. It's at present a policy of wait and see.

"The Woman Who Lied"

Four-Reel Universal Offering Featuring Mary Fuller, Supported by a Competent Cast.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN THE opening scenes of this number Mary Fuller appears as a theatrical star, receiving congratulations on her performance, just completed. Numerous admirers crowd the dressing room. One of them objects to another's gift of flowers. The flame of jealousy is instantly lighted and a murder takes place. An innocent man steps into the scene and the actress, by a deliberate lie, fixes the crime upon him.

Scene from "The Woman Who Lied" (Victor).

The presentation of this murder scene is undoubtedly the strongest feature of this offering. It is enacted with a verve that makes the following situations seem a little slow and conventional. Toward the latter part of the story a second crisis is reached, in which the hero is vindicated and the guilty man brought to punishment. Paul Panzer and Milton Sills have the leading male parts and Edna Hunter appears as the girl who marries the murderer by mistake.

Following the murder in the dressing room the hero is sent to prison for life. Helen weds Gordon, the real murderer. The actress, in a fit of jealousy, tells the wife of Gordon's guilt. The two women become friends, through the influence of the child, and go West to start life anew. Gordon traces his wife and decides to follow her. Jack has already escaped prison and is in the West. The escape from prison was not a convincing scene; this and several other portions of the second and third reel are handled in a slightly mechanical way.

Jack meets the actress, who has been forced to sing in a dance hall. She takes him to Helen, whom he formerly loved. Gordon appears and this precipitates the crisis. Gordon is shot by the sheriff. The actress brings a touch of pathos into the closing scenes as she bends over the dead body of man for whom she lied.

"In the Palace of the King"

F. Marion Crawford's Novel Finely Adapted for Moving Pictures and Ably Directed by Fred E. Wright, for Essanay.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AT THE very outset I am impelled to state that "In the Palace of the King" outranks any former Essanay production in magnificent settings, in the splendor of costumes and in the compelling grip of the story. It would be a great pleasure to be able to include the acting in the list, but that, while it could well be done on behalf of several able characterizations, cannot be done as a whole.

The period of the story is from 1540 to 1560, in the time of Philip the Second of Spain. Most of the action takes place in the Royal Palace, in Madrid, a fact that would daunt the most fearless of able directors; for it involves a sea of difficulties and troubles in the matter of exactness in architecture, furniture, uniforms, costumes and a long list of other details, all of which demand strict historic truth. Director Wright has succeeded admirably in creating the true atmosphere throughout. He was given carte blanche in the matter of expenditure, and the many fine sets in the production make an excellent and creditable showing.

In the first and second reels the spectator is given a view of the courtyard of the palace, where the return of Don John of Austria, half brother of Philip the Second, and his army, after the defeat of the Moors at Granada, is shown. And, by the way, these soldiers cannot be dubbed as "tin"; several troops of cavalry of the first regiment, I. N. G., and several companies of infantry, I. N. G., having been secured for the occasion. The uniforms and equipment are strictly of the period. Van Horn, the well-known costumer of Philadelphia, the most adept in his line in the country, furnished all the costumes and the uniforms.

The throne room in the palace is a magnificent interior, and the ball given in it is a scene of kaleidoscopic beauty. Here we view the flower of the Spanish Court dancing the old Spanish minuet, a combination of our own waltz, reel and more stately minuet. Several hundred couples are on the floor at the same moment.

The grand corridor of the palace is another fine interior, with its imposing columns of marble and its rich Moorish architecture. Special attention is invited to the King's dining room, in the fourth reel and to the vision there of the spider and his web, which comes to Adonis, the court jester. The grand staircase in the palace is another fine setting.

All these sets were made at the Essanay plant from original drawing of the Palace of the Alhambra, Madrid.

I nearly omitted to refer to the natural and artistic beauty of the group in the wedding scene, at the close of this fine photodrama. It has all the grace and charm of a posed picture, without its apparent stillness of attitude.

There can be nothing but praise for the acting of E. J. Ratcliffe, as Philip II, and Ernest Maupain, as Mendoza, commander of the Kings guard. Mr. Ratcliffe never once forgets that he is a King or that this especial King is filled with fear that Don John may win his crowd. The fine old soldier, Mendoza, could not by any means have fallen into abler hands than those of Mr. Maupain. The nice shade of character that reveals Mendoza's paternal love for his daughter, in the scene where he has bent her to the ground by a flood of wrath, is most artistically shown. Miss Arleen Hackett was unfortunately cast when she was assigned the role of Dolores de Mendoza. She is much too old for the part of this young and beautiful maiden of Spain, whose virgin love has been given to Don John, the conqueror of the Moors. As the opposite of Richard C. Travers, who appears as Don John, Miss Hackett had the effect of suppressing his ardor as a lover, so that he was placed at a great disadvantage. In the scene where Dolores forces the King to issue an order for the immediate release of her father, Miss Hackett shows fine histrionic talent.

Lewis Edgard is always a prominent figure in the development of the story, in the role of court jester. As Inez de Mendoza, the blind sister of Dolores, Miss Nell Craig never forgets the affliction of her prototype. Her eyes are wide open all through the scenes, and one fails to catch sight of a single wink of the eyelashes. Indeed, Director Wright told me that Miss Craig suffered severely from inflamed eye balls for several days after the photoplay was finished. Special commendation is due Miss Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth, and Thomas Commerford for the talented impersonation of the Princess of Eboli, Don Antonio Perez, the King's secretary, and the Prime Minister of Spain, respectively.

The release date is October 11, through V-L-S-E Inc.

"The Master of the House"

An Equitable Five-Part Drama Presenting Julius Steger in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE story in this five-part picture is quite simple and a bit old fashioned. Many of the same elements have done service frequently in sentimental, heart-interest melodramas. A man, tiring of his faithful wife, responds to the attractivness of a young girl, elopes with her and lives to regret the day, for the girl is selfish and expensive. The errant husband is glad enough to return to the family that he deserted. There are tears and apologies and once more he becomes the master of the house.

There is nothing new or mentally stimulating in a drama of this description, but it does afford opportunity for the style of acting in which Julius Steger is proficient. His characterization of Frederick Hoffman, the faithless husband, is appealing enough to make the picture worth while, even if it is not particularly strong in other respects. Mr. Steger has a large following among vaudeville patrons and these, no doubt, will be moved by his emotional performance, especially in the last reel where he meets each member of his family, in turn, and gives a suitable display of affection and repentance for past misdeeds.

Scene from "The Master of the House" (Equitable).

Margot Williams is attractive in the role of the governess who enters the home of the Hoffmans and immediately captivates both father and son. There are several pretty locations and engaging scenes in the first reel, which brings the family affairs of the Hoffmans to a crisis. The master of the house insists that the governess shall not be discharged and presently we see them riding off together in an automobile, bound for New York. Then, for about two reels, we follow Hoffman on his disillusionizing career. With his new wife, for the first tie has been legally broken, he lives at fashionable hotels, squanders his fortune on a yacht and costly cars and leads a miserable existence in the bargain. He is ill and broken and a quite pitiable object when he returns to his first love. In the matter of settings the picture is well supplied and the acting of the players in support of Mr. Steger is adequate.

"The Apaches of Paris"

Four-Reel "Broadway Favorites" Picture—Tense, Sensational Melodrama That Will Hold 'Em—New Vein for Kalem.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT IS probable that some will be surprised at this offering, "The Apaches of Paris," after the Kalem trade mark. It is a four-reel picture and has a few wildly gripping human situations that make one carry home the wonder. Kalem doesn't often deal in the bass-drum way with the men and women of its pictures—every thump hitting you on the breast as the drum passes. Kalem thrills often lift you up out of your seat; but these thrills hammer you down into it. In realism, it suggest Zola; but it is not disgusting, although one death scene was kept on much too long. It is the kind of picture that pays in a show; for it tells one of those actor-and-director-proof stories, although its ending is sentimental and untruthful..

The directing is not strong; yet only in one or two places does it weaken the effect noticeably. Except in one role, played with marked sincerity and power by Edna Hibbard, there is very little real acting in it. The director (Robert Ellis) has this to his credit that he kept bad acting out of it.

Scene from "The Apaches of Paris" (Kalem).

One of the offering's features is a dance by Joseph Smith and Laura Hamilton, of a kind not often seen, and will be commented on by spectators on account of its grace and startling character. Marion Whitney plays an American girl in Paris, seduced by a roue (Robert Ellis) in a most melodramatic way. Arthur Houseman plays her American lover and Edna Hibbard plays her younger sister, who comes to Paris all innocently after the tragedy and soon stabs herself to escape from the villain; Paula Sherman, as another of his victims, does commendable work. The author is Howard Irving Young. The one really fine bit of acting is done, as we have said, by Miss Hibbard. She will—if she works hard—be a head-liner soon for, fortunately, she will not depend on beauty to please—she is not without prettiness—but will cultivate her talent. It is yet to be seen how she can handle subtle situations and whether she has insight into character.

"Emmy of Stork's Nest

A Columbia-Metro Production in Which Mary Miles Minter Gives a Charming Performance.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

MARY MILES MINTER is growing up. She has graduated from straight child parts into characters that permit her to play a child and a young woman, all in the same picture, and she does it exceedingly well. Audiences will like the youthful star of this five-part adaptation of J. Breckenridge Ellis5s novel; they will at once think how pretty she is; how sweet and natural and more likely than not they will compare her to Mary Pickford. Miss Minter is certainly one of the most promising of the young players that have come t the front in pictures during the past year. Her blond beauty is just the type for the screen; she possesses a winsome personality and is rapidly gaining in experience as an actress.

"Emmy of Stork's Nest" is not a remarkable photoplay; but it is made interesting by reason of the excellent portrayals of rural characters, and the many beautiful locations, perfectly photographed, are a delight to the eye. The story centers around Emmy, introduced as an untutored girl of the mountains. It presents a number of lifelike types, such as Bije, the blustering bully of the community; Jim Whitlicks, the half-witted youth, who is beaten and kicked around the farm, and Crishy, the ill-treated wife of Si Stork. All of these people are accurately drawn and one may overlook the conventional aspects of the plot in appreciating the sincerity that went into the presentation of the characters.

Practically all of the scenes are picturesque and every now and then we find the most thrilling sort of photoplay action, expertly handled by the director, William Nigh. A rough and tumble fight that has every appearance of being genuine is followed by a struggle for life in the swift rapids of a river. For several minutes horses and men are tossed about in the water and as a fitting conclusion the two most contemptible characters in the story are carried over the falls. There is real pathos in Crishy's remark to 'Bije, "Well, I guess we is free now." Charles Prince, Martin Faust, Mr. Brandage and William Cowper give particularly able performances.

"The Price"

Helen Ware Appears in Strong Adaptation of Stage Drama—Released by Equitable.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE adaptation of "The Price," in which Helen Ware appeared on the stage several years ago, has been handled with rare skill by Joseph A. Golden, who wrote the scenario for this five-part production and directed an excellent cast. There is no questioning the emotional force of the scenes showing the artist urging his love for the girl who has become his secretary; of those presenting the misery of the woman when she believes that her husband's love has been won by another and of the passages in which the revengeful widow of the dead artist separates husband and wife. The photoplay is clearly developed to make the most of the dramatic climaxes and it is sincerely acted.

As a stage play, "The Price" was calculated to furnish Miss Ware with a character of emotional appeal. Without offering a theme of particular moment, the piece was theatrically effective, largely because of the sympathetic performance of Miss Ware. On the stage it was the actress rather than the author's character that won the regard of an audience and the same holds true in the picture. If one were to analyze the girl, as she is called in the cast, her behavior would not appear especially laudable. As the secretary of an artist, unfortunately married to a slovenly woman without artistic appreciation, she wins the love of her employer, quite innocently, of course, and then becomes the wife of a successful physician. The shock of being told that the girl prefers another man is too much for the artist, suffering from heart disease, and he dies. His widow, on learning of the affair, determines to be avenged.

Scene from "The Price" (Equitable).

Employed as a housekeeper in the doctor's home, the woman, enlarging upon the evidence in an old diary and making the young wife believe that her husband has fallen in love with a pretty girl they have adopted, succeeds in wrecking the home temporarily. There is a reconciliation in time for a happy ending. Walmuth Merkyl, James Cooley and Blanche Douglas give telling performances. The picture presents many rich settings.

"Blue Grass"

An Equitable Production Presenting Thomas Wise in the Likable Role of a Southern Colonel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOR a character such as Colonel Taylor, in this five-part version of Paul Armstrong's play, it would be difficult to find a more convincing actor than Thomas Wise. He fairly radiates wholesome good humor. On the screen as on the stage, his smile is quite irresistible and his facial expressions are varied and well judged. Those who enjoyed this actor's performance in "A Gentleman From Mississippi" will find him equally entertaining in this sympathetic adaptation of a play that lends itself very well to the needs of the screen. The frequent opportunities for picturesque settings are in the main realized, and by way of excitement an audience is treated to a genuinely thrilling horse race.

Scene from "Blue Grass" (Equitable).

The whole story, in fact, revolves around Colonel Taylor's love for thoroughbreds and the races on which fortunes are staked. All of the characters are in one way or another concerned in the success of Blue Grass. There is the Colonel's pretty daughter, Virginia; his son, Morgan, who reveals his good qualities after an unfortunate experience with the bookmakers; Kelly, the unscrupulous gambler, determined to beat the Colonel's entry by fair means or foul, and Wilfred Warren, the manly young hero of the play, who proves himself a valuable ally of the Taylor family and in the end wins the hand of the daughter.

With these characters as the central figures in his plot, the author constructed a first-rate scenario, which works up to an interesting climax. The love element in the story is slight, but sufficient for a photoplay of this nature. In suggesting the atmosphere of a southern estate and depicting the manners of an aristocratic family of the old school, the director was successful. The picture profits by several scenes of natural comedy and by the capable acting of those in support of Mr. Wise, including Clara Whipple, George Soule Spencer, Ray Tuckerman and Frank Beamish.

"The Fatal Card"

John Mason in Five-Part Famous Players Subject Gives Strong Characterization—Hazel Dawn and David Powell in Support.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players, in conjunction with the Charles Frohman Company, released on September 30, "The Fatal Card." The subject is in five parts. John Mason is the star, in fact as well as in name. He is finely supported by Hazel Dawn and David Powell. Mr. Mason's personality stands out in the opening close-up—as you look into the face of the man who is described and also garbed as a frontier town gambler, instinctively you feel an interest in him—and the interest holds to the end of the play. In the beginning we see that Marrable, known as Forrester, is a highwayman as well as a gambler, whose departure from town the vigilance committee has already indirectly suggested. Marrable is saved from a lynching party by Austen, the employer of the man assaulted by the gambler and his mates. It is when he returns east to his daughter that he determines to straighten out the crooked streak and to return to the ways of peace—by resuming his old occupation of inventing high explosives. How he lacks the will power to straighten that streak, how he falls again into temptation when his old companions seek him out, and how he goes to his death in saving the life of the man who in the west had saved his, make a story that at times stirs and always holds.

Hazel Dawn is the daughter. Miss Dawn does not have a great part, but by her charm and winsomeness contributes materially to the completeness of the picture. David Powell as Austen, the mine owner of the west who returns home, to fall in love with his new neighbor, Margaret Marrable, and later to be accused of the murder of his father, gives a splendid performance, marked by good acting sense throughout. Russell Bassett as the crusty elder Austen, and William J. Ferguson as the murderer who lacked the nerve to face the situation his own act had precipitated, also deserve mention.

"The Fatal Card," which is from the pens of C. Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stephenson, is produced by James Kirkwood. The story is clearly told and the picture is well made. There are strong situations—some of them are of the arrest of Forrester in the barroom, with the stolen gold in his pocket; the interrupted lynching; the steps leading up to the unintentional killing of Austen in the office building; the meeting of the murderers in the summer house and their confrontation by young Austen; and the timely revelation of the latter's identity to Marrable. Through it all is visible the working of Conscience. There are lighter scenes, too, of marked pictorial beauty; one of these is the canoe trip in the fading light, of the two most interesting lovers.

"Jim West—Gambler"

A Three-Reel Lubin Drama of Strong Lights and Shades, Produced by the Western Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN MAKING the hero of this three-reel drama gambler, who reforms and becomes a minister of the gospel, Wilbert Melville, the author, leads up to telling situations. Frank Morey, a young man in whom the minister is greatly interested, has inherited a love of gambling from his father. To recover his losses at the table, Frank takes money from the bank of which he is cashier, and loses that also. The minister, who has followed him to the gambling-room, in a vain attempt to prevent Frank from playing, adopts the only means in his power to save the boy from disgrace. Summoning his old skill to his aid, he sits down at the table and beats the gamblers at their own game. The money West wins he hands over to Frank. The gamblers recognize him and he is denounced before his congregation and turned from his church. This leads to a reconciliation with his wife—who left him when he was Jim West—Gambler; and, as Morey is engaged to his daughter, the minister feels that he has acted for the best.

Scene from "Jim West, Gambler" (Lubin).

The dramatic value of such a story is beyond question. The efforts of the producer have resulted in a very satisfactory screening of the three reels of material. Melvin Mayo plays Jim West with the authority and repose of a past-master of the histrionic art, both phases of the character being equally well sustained. Excellent impersonations are given by the supporting company, which includes L. C. Shumway, Robert Gray, Dorothy Barrett, Helen Eddy and Edythe Sterling.

"Tillie's Tomato Surprise"

A Banquet of Fun and Laughs With the Elephantine Comedienne as the Host.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

"TILLIE'S TOMATO SURPRISE" is a surprise and the capital S is justified. It is a hilarious surprise; it is indeed a whole succession of surprises and it is always the surprise that begins and ends with a laugh. Not much of a plot is required for the great Marie Dressler to disport herself to the uproar of her audience, but here we have a good, workable plot, thoroughly funny and holding us in suspense as to the final outcome. I could never have guessed the ultimate fate of the ten thousand dollar bills that were stuffed into this most amusing of all tomato pin-cushions.

"Tillie's Tomato Surprise" is a litany of laughs. Laughter in this cleverly screened farce is both continuous and contagious. Those who have never seen Marie Dressler in full blast have a rare treat in store for them, those who have seen her will be ready to go miles to witness this latest outburst because Marie is at her best. She is a sort of reckless elephant with dare-devil instincts constantly foiled by her size and weight.

Her love affair with a Scotch aviator is funny enough in itself with its fearful surprises. The aviator develops a tendency to drop through roofs into the midst of social festivities of which Tillie is the central figure. Tillie's sudden entrance into society, the informal use of her big strong elbows, her painful ignorance of even the rudiments of etiquette contribute to the storm of merriment. The director deserves to be praised for his originality and his resourcefulness. There isn't even the trace of a slow moment in this filmed farce. It all put me in mind of my last ride on a scenic railway at Coney Island; it was glorious while it lasted and you were sorry it was over.

Scene from "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" (Lubin).

In her own class as a boisterous comedienne, Miss Dressler is as far as I know without a peer anywhere. Her style of acting owes less to dialogue or song than that of any other comedienne and is therefore peculiarly adapted for the screen. The titles were all good and always came at the psychological moment, invariably renewing and accentuating the fun on the screen. "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" will make countless thousands laugh. In all the evolutionary and revolutionary movements of the film market, the demand for good comedy has been the same, i. e., strong and undiminished. Here is a precious bit of supply for which I predict an unmitigated success.

"John Glayde's Honour"

First Gold Rooster Play Contributed by the Frohman Amusement Company Adds Another Point of Merit to the Program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE play of Alfred Sutro of which the Frohman Amusement Company production is an adaptation, is too well known to require any special comment as to its merits as a play, or its qualifications for screen adaptation, having enjoyed a long run on the speaking stage both in England and America.

C. Aubrey Smith plays the role of John Glayde, with a supporting cast consisting of Mary Lawton, Richard Hatteras, Charley Butler, Ida Waterman and Ben Hendricks, all of whom do excellent work.

The production as it appears on the theater screen will be welcomed because it is the story of a strong masculine character, encompassing considerable breadth of perspective. Its people do thoroughly human things, and the paths where their rational and less rational moments lead them are threaded through attractive scenes.

The purely critical observer will, however, find a few technical errors, such as a preponderance of subtitles and inserts, an unnecessary and ineffective close-up here and there, and failure to account for the lapse of time necessary for the removal of characters from one place to another, which naturally causes some confusion with regard to locations, etc. For instance, we are not always quite clear as to whether a scene is taking place in Mrs. Glayde's villa, Mr. Glayde's apartment at the hotel in Paris, or in the studio of Artist Lerode, because the characters frequently appear to step from one into the other.

Scene from "John Glayde's Honour" (Frohman).

The dramatic action of the production is good. The story of the man whose sense of honor demanded that he foster the interests of the stockholders of his company to the exclusion of all pleasure or any sense of social or domestic duty toward the woman he had made his wife, and the foolish wife whose pique threw her into the arms of another man, is forcefully told, and cannot fail to be enjoyed in its screened version.

"Zaza," A Subject of Power

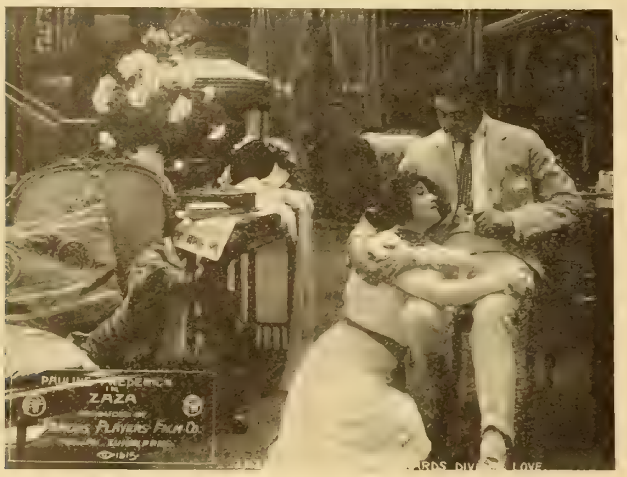
Pauline Frederick Outdoes Her Previous Screen Self in This Moving Drama.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

SMALL wonder Pauline Frederick was deeply concerned for several days following the fire which destroyed the Famous Players studio in Twenty-sixth street. The possibility that the flames might have obliterated the negatives which recorded her interpretation of "Zaza" easily justified the distress. She was reported to have said that into the making of that picture she had put her soul. Unquestionably she did. Her portrayal of Zaza even more than did her work in "The Eternal City," shows the quality of the woman, her all-around emotional power. In "Zaza" we see revealed the soul of the unconventional female—whether of France or anywhere else. To Zaza love is supreme—marriage an incident. The idea of a legal union comes to her only when her thoughts are turned in that direction by the approaching marriage of a friend.



Scene from "Zaza" (Famous Players).

Zaza in the eyes of many men will be considered if not impeccable at least blameless. Unlike her famous dramatic contemporaries, Marguerite Gautier and Fanny Legrand, her affairs of the heart are limited to one man; there was no predecessor and there can be no successor. That the one man, as is discovered in due course, is married, constitutes the tragedy of the story. It is this discovery that furnishes the groundwork for the pathos that marks the latter half of the play.

Miss Frederick shows us a Zaza who is as intense in her hate, in her desire for revenge, as she is demonstrative in her love; a hate that is stilled in the presence of the man who has deceived her and now scorns her even as it was when confronted by his child when she had gone to Dufrene's home to denounce its head to his wife. Zaza dominates—in the awakening, in the tenderness of the love passages, playful or serious; in the stormy scenes following the revelation of Dufrene's duplicity, in the tearless but none the less great sorrow in which she sees him go out of her life.

Julian L'Estrange as Dufrene must be just what Berton and Simon had in mind when they wrote the story. His is a fine performance. Others that stand out are Maude Granger as Aunt Rosa, Charles Butler as the doddering Duc de Brissac and Mark Smith as Cascart.

On the production size "Zaza" is in the Famous Players' best style. Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford direct.

"Old Heidelberg"

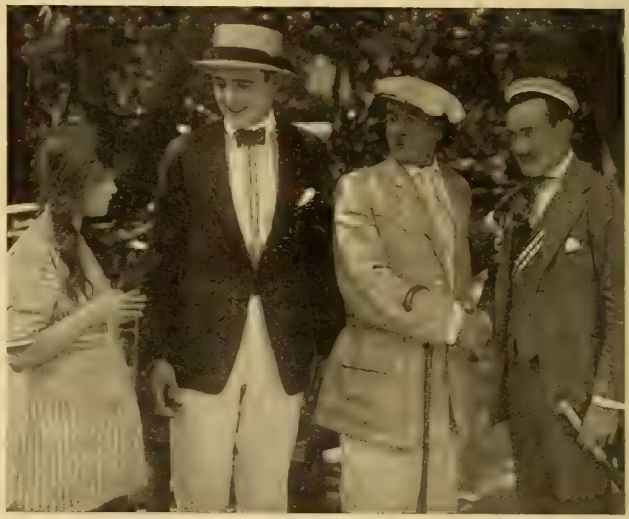
A Multiple Reel Romance by John Emerson Supervised by David Griffith.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FROM the time that "Prisoner of Zenda" cleared the atmosphere of theatrical rubbish, romance-drama has been popular, especially that imitative type which invests a simple and sweet old story with the picturesque environment of court life in some faraway Balkan Principality. "Old Heidelberg" does not presume—it does not boast of a single original scene, nor does it pretend to any more definite locality that Rutania—where anything may happen—yet it holds and pleases to the end. It is only the love story of Prince Charming and a demure little girl he first meets in childhood and later while absorbing democratic ideas at the University of Heidelberg. The delight of the story lies entirely in what might well be termed its delicate "fragrance," its dainty characterization and in its quiet suggestion that war is the brutal game of Kings.



Scene from "Old Heidelberg" (Triangle).

The manly simplicity of Karl, hereditary Prince of Rutania, as interpreted by Wallace Reid, and the flawless impersonation by Dorothy Gish of a tender and true-hearted little love-bird reach warm sympathy at times, especially among those whose tears well up in response to true pathos. The humility and resignation of the tiny inn-keeper's daughter when compelled to part with her adored lover that he may wed one of his own station, the suppression of her agony, counts by itself and far more that the story is so admirably typed and handled. The reference to war is a side issue, a tiny democratic dig in the ribs of feudal royalty, but it helps in warming the audience.

Kathryn Osterman Makes Hit.

Kathryn Osterman's work in "The Bludgeon" was so satisfying to the directors of Equitable that she has been signed to appear in four other productions during the forthcoming year. Webster Cullison was responsible for the direction of "The Bludgeon."

"Sin"

Theda Bara Is Starred in Five-Part Fox Picture Produced by Herbert Brenon.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

DESPITE the startling title of this Fox drama—surely a most alluring title for advertising purposes—"Sin" is less sensuously frank than several earlier pictures in which Theda Bara has, to put it mildly, depicted women of strong emotional temperament. This time the film cutter seems to have interrupted a number of promising love passages and left more to the imagination of the audience than has been his custom in the past, which is as it should be. As it stands, there is nothing in "Sin" to give offense, unless one recoils from a couple of unnecessary close-ups of blood oozing from wounds. Scenes of this description are in rather bad taste.

Director Brenon has produced a story of Italian people, introducing his characters in their native country and later bringing them to New York, the headquarters of the secret society directed by the Italian girl's lover. The man she has jilted follows her to America and to prove that his adoration knows no bounds, steals the jewels of the Madonna and gives them to the woman he loves. Much is made of the consequences of the sacrilege; the wrath of the priests and the congregation of the church from which the jewels were taken; the girl's terror and subsequent insanity when she believes her soul to be irredeemably damned, and the suicide of the man who has committed an unforgivable sin. After the somewhat slow movement in the opening reels the tense dramatic action of these scenes is welcome. Director Brenon has made good use of excited street mobs and has succeeded in suggesting the spirit of religious frenzy.

The company seen in support of Miss Bara, including William Shay and other experienced players, is in all respects equal to the demands of an unusual and quite artistic picture.

"Montana" Blount's Incrimination

Associated Film Sales Corporation Presents Rattlesnake Thrill in Two-Reel Empire Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"MONTANA" BLOUNT was one of those western men who believe in their own power of gaining what they most desire. And so it was unusually hard for this sturdy cow puncher to swallow the bitter pill of his disappointment when he found that the girl he loved, and had even gone so far as to buy an engagement ring for, loved another. It was also the desire of "Montana's" heart to wallop the intruder, until his manliness was appealed to in some way or other. The disappointed one decided that nothing is gained by holding malice, and straightway shook right heartily the hand of his lucky rival.

On this situation rests the interesting production of "'Montana' Blount's Incrimination," which later develops into a drama of considerable moment, wherein the cowboy to save his rival from death by the bite of a rattlesnake shoots the head off the snake, but afterward finds that the snake has bitten the man, and rushes off to his cabin for an antidote. In the meantime some Indians give aid to the wounded man. A complication arises from the fact that "Montana" has run off and left the injured man alone. And in the belief that Blount has shot the other man, a posse starts out in search of him. The affair is cleared up successfully in the end, and the fine qualities of Blount's character are laid bare to his suspicious associates.

The situation of the rattlesnake bite being taken for a bullet wound is somewhat improbable. There is much of an interesting nature in the production, however, in spite of this. Especially in the earlier stages of the picture a richness of western atmosphere is noticeable. Very fair photography also characterizes the production, which generally summed up, would please the average audience.

"The Family Cupboard"

Brady-World Film Adaptation of Stage Drama Makes a Strong Five-Part Photoplay.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"THE FAMILY CUPBOARD," adapted from a play of the same name which not long ago enjoyed a successful New York run, should be one of the most generally popular of recent World Film dramatic attractions. The story is continually interesting. It is clearly and forcibly told and extremely well acted, with Holbrook Blinn in the role of Charles Nelson; Frances Nelson cast as the chorus girl, and John Hines in the character of her companion, Dick LeRoy. William A. Brady showed excellent judgment when he selected this drama of New York life for presentation on the screen.

The picture gives a quite frank revelation of the contents of a certain family cupboard, the like of which, no doubt, may be found in a number of homes in the immediate neighborhood of Fifth avenue. Nelson has made a place for himself in the world of big business and he supports his family in suitable luxury. He pays the bills without a murmur, but finding little companionship at home, falls a rather easy victim to the wiles of a designing chorus girl. When Nelson sees fit to drop the girl she promises to "get him," and with this end in view sets a trap for Nelson's son, Kenneth. Being a young man of limited experience and a trusting nature, Kenneth accepts Kitty as a girl possessing all the essential virtues, and even after the assertions of his father to the contrary, he is loath to change his mind. The awakening is a bit rude, but in the end it is effective, and it may be presumed that both father and son are through with chorus girls of the Kitty Claire type.

As developed in the picture, the story has cumulative power. The scenes build up to a logical conflict between Nelson and the chorus girl; then between father and son, and the characterizations provided by Mr. Blinn and Miss Nelson have a genuineness that adds greatly to the strength of the production. In appearance and manner Miss Nelson is ideal for the role of Kitty, whereas minor figures are edequately presented. Mention should be made of the sub-titles, which frequently emphasize points or ironic humor.

"Guarding Old Glory" at Strand.

F. O. Nielsen's big patriotic picture, "Guarding Old Glory," is in its second week at the Strand Theatre, where it has been accorded a rousing reception at every show by enthusiastic audiences, who do not hesitate to vociferously applaud its many wonderful scenes.

Managing Director B. A. Rolfe himself is more than enthusiastic over the picture, as the following letter to W. H. Rudolph, Mr. Nielsen's eastern representative testifies:

"Mr. W. H. Rudolph,
608 Candler Building,
New York City.

"My dear Mr. Rudolph: Permit me to compliment you upon the patriotic subject, "Guarding Old Glory." It is doing very well indeed for us, and I take pleasure in apprising you of the same. I remain, sincerely yours,

"B. A. ROLFE,
"Managing Director."

"Guarding Old Glory" is being featured at the Strand as a picture showing this country's unpreparedness in the event of war, and is shown in installments each week. This is the second week, with three more weeks to run.

Clara Whipple in Canadian War Picture.

Miss Clara Whipple, the pretty little leading lady of the Equitable Company, holds the distinction of being the only American motion picture actress to appear in a regular, honest-to-goodness drama with the Canadian troops who have left for England.

Before joining the Equitable this summer Miss Whipple was in Toronto. The company she was connected with staged a thrilling war drama, in which Miss Whipple played the role of the idol of the troops. In reality she became the idol of the departing soldiers, and her picture or name outside a theater in a city in which soldiers were training packed the house.

She has just returned from Block Island, R. I., where she has been working in "The Fisher Girl."

New Furniture Reaches Universal City.

The property rooms of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City have just been stocked with a large supply of new furniture, $10,000 worth having been ordered from factories in Grand Rapids, Mich.; Sheboygan, Wis., and Chicago. This furniture consists of bedroom, parlor and dining room sets and library equipment.

The addition of so many new companies at the Pacific Coast studio of the Big U organization taxed the property rooms to such an extent that the many directors have met with difficulty in securing the prompt use of furniture necessary for their numerous sets. Hence the acquisition of all this new furniture. It has proved so satisfactory that an additional order for five thousand dollars' worth has been given.

"THE BRAVE DESERVE THE FAIR" (Selig).

"The Brave Deserve the Fair" is a Selig Special in two reels, featuring Tom Mix, released Monday, October 18th. The plot was written and produced by the dashing cowboy actor, who is ably supported in the action by a cast of versatile Western players. Tom and Leo, wandering the hills, become lost. Jim Brown, a cattleman, has poisoned the water holes to kill off wild horses that are eating the range grass. The parents of Vicky Johnson, traveling in a prarie schooner, drink at a water hole, where the danger sign had blown away, and lose their lives.

Scene from "The Brave Deserve the Fair" (Selig).

Leo and Tom wander about in the hills and spy one of the poisoned water holes. Tom crawls to it and dips up water in his tin cup and prepares to dring. Vicky in the distance tried to warn him, but to no avail. She picks up her father's rifle and shoots the tin cup from Tom's hand. Of course, there is an appealing love story interwoven in a succession of exciting incidents.

"Pals In Blue" with Tom Mix is a most popular production and it is predicted that this Selig Western Special in two reels, jammed full of reckless riding, gun play, and intense interest, will prove a worthy successor.

ALTERNATING CURRENT AT WATERBURY, CONN.

The electric current furnished to the moving picture houses in the main part of town at Waterbury, Conn., is being changed from direct to alternating current and for good results in projection this necessitates the motion picture houses installing motor generators. J. L. Fernandez, of Waterbury, is enlarging his theater and has just placed an order with J. H. Hallberg, of New York, for 150 extra chairs and a complete A. C. to D. C. equipment.

Mr. Hallberg also reports that he is furnishing a Simplex moving picture machine, latest model, together with Hallberg Standard A. C. economizer to J. M. Hampton, Bayonne, N. J. Mr. Hampton is enlarging his Globe theater at this address and has also placed with Mr. Hallberg his order for the additional chairs required.

"BIZZY IZZY."

"Izzy" Bernstein had an idle day at the Equitable's Flushing studio last week, when three companies were "playing out" in the mountains and at the seashore. Just to keep himself out of mischief he rushed along a lot of work on the outdoor stage, which was rapidly approaching completion; kept a gang of men busy on the new laboratory, of which the fireproof walls are up; superintended the photographing of a list of subtitles, taking an active part in the work and illustrating just how he wanted it done; ran off a couple of reels of a new feature to show some professional visitors what a big thing it was going to be; interviewed a lot of actors and actresses who sought places in casts yet to be made up; answered something like a hundred telephone calls; arranged for a lot of work for the following day, and then sat down for a minute and complained that there was nothing to do. It takes a good deal to satisfy some people.

UNIQUE TRIBUTE TO PARAMOUNT.

An indication as to the co-operation between the Paramount Pictures Corporation, its Exchanges and its Exhibitors is evidenced in a letter received by Wm. E. Smith of the Philadelphia Paramount Exchange from Stanley V. Mastbaum of the Stanley Company, one of the largest motion picture theaters in the East.

"In behalf of the Board of Directors of the Stanley Theater Company, who operate the Stanley Theater, Philadelphia, I wish to send to you their thanks for the kind consideration you have given this theater since the exhibition of the first release of the Paramount Programme. The Stanley Theater has used this service exclusively and uninterruptedly since the beginning.

"I would ask that you give the necessary instructions that our weekly price of pictures used at the above theater, obtained from your Exchange, be increased twenty (20%) per cent., beginning Oct. 1st, 1915.

"You may think this letter a little unusual but it is done for the purpose of bearing a portion of the burdens of the producers of these fine pictures and to extend our share of help to them so that they will be able to do greater things for the Paramount Programme.

"From present indications and your published list of future releases, I have no doubt the Board of Directors of the Stanley Theater will be able to write you very shortly another letter containing the same welcome news about additional increase in price of your service."

(Signed) STANLEY V. MASTBAUM,
The Directors of the Stanley Company.

"STANLEY'S CLOSE CALL" (Centaur).

The second of the Centaur Feature series, by Director Frank Montgomery, being made under general heading of "Stanley's Adventures in Africa," is called "Stanley's Close Call," and will be released on the Mutual program Thursday, October 14. Each episode of the series, which is in two reels, is in itself a complete story and picturizes an adventure of H. M. Stanley, an American explorer, who has been sent by a metropolitan daily to locate a hidden city in Africa.

The settings are laid in the African jungles and the story, besides being fundamentally diverse to other picture series, is treated along new lines. It affords plenty of opportunity for the use of the Bostock animals which are the featured members of the cast. In "Stanley's Close Call" an unusual number of the Bostock animals are requisitioned. There are tigers, lions, elephants, leopards, pumas, ostriches and other animals galore, and some exceptional scenes are made with them and Captain Bonavita as the principal characters.

Scene from "Stanley's Close Call" (Centaur).

Besides Captain Bonativa and the Bostock animals the cast includes Roy Watson, Edward Roberts, J. McKernon, Court Tietze, Mona Darkfeather, Marie Manley and Anna DeLisle.

An episode of the "Stanley" series is released every two weeks as a Centaur feature, the release for the intervening week being supplied by another company under the direction of Carl LeViness.

BLANCHE RING IN NEXT MOROSCO RELEASE.

For its next release the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces Blanche Ring, the celebrated comedienne, in "The Yankee Girl," a film adaptation of her great comedy triumph of several seasons ago. In selecting this play as the initial motion picture vehicle for the well-known stage favorite, Oliver Morosco has foreseen the wonderful possibilities afforded in this subject in the way of beautiful scenic and photographic offerings, this in addition to the acknowledged adaptabality to Miss Ring's particular ability.

Beautiful marine scenes taken at the world famous Catalina Islands, the hacienda scenes taken at the Fernandez Sanchez ranch house, a landmark 150 years old half way between Los Angeles and San Gabriel and one of the historic taverns of the Mission days, together with many other pretty scenic displays afford a most picturesque background. The story is a comedy drama of a copper feud in the tropics, of the light breezy American variety, and one that will entertain young and old alike.

Scene from "The Yankee Girl" (Morosco).

Supporting the star is an exceptional cast including Forrest Stanley, the former Burbank theater star, who plays opposite Miss Ring; Herbert Standing, the veteran English actor and master of make-up; Howard Davies, Harry Fisher, Jr., Robert Dunbar, Joe Ray, Bonita Darling, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Syd de Grey. Each character has been filled by an artist particularly adapted to it and a more appropriate selection of players would have been a difficult task. "The Yankee Girl" will be released on the Paramount Program, October 25th. A special musical program will be arranged for this release by George W. Beynon, Inc., which will include many of the song hits which Miss Ring has made famous such as "Rings On My Fingers," "Bedelia," "Yip-I-Addy-I-A," and others of equal renown. In one scene where Miss Ring appears at the piano she played "I'm On My Way to Dublin Bay," and this popular air will be offered in the musical score for this particular scene.

STRONG CAST IN "SCHOOL BELLS."

Robert Fischer, the actor who is at present making a distinct sensation in his interpretation of the role of the Belgian innkeeper in Roi Cooper Megrue's latest play, "Under Fire," plays one of the leading roles, that of a German chemist, in Charles K. Harris' picture, "School Bells," which has just been produced by Perry N. Vekroff at the Kinemacolor studio.

The cast of the feature picture is distinctly unusual all the way through. The leading adult role is played by Arthur Donaldson, who will be remembered as the star of "The Prince of Pilsen," and who is at present producing "The Salamander" as a motion picture, from the book of Owen Johnston. He plays the role also, of a German chemist, whose formula for a great discovery is stolen away. Beulah Poynter, who plays the role of Mrs. Wagner, the wife of the wronged inventor, is a well known stock woman.

The children appearing in the performance are also very unusual. Frank Longacre, who plays the role of Hans Wagner, had the honor of appearing with Phyllis Neilson Terry and Madame Nazimova last season. Ethelmary Oakland played with Madge Lessing in "Fads and Fancies," and also appeared in the former motion picture drama from the pen of Charles K. Harris, "Always in the Way." Nicholas Long, Jr., is attracting attention on the vaudeville stage, where he appears in a sketch as a little girl.

"School Bells," Mr. Harris predicts, will be a "Birth of a Nation" among children's films. Over 65,000 feet of film was exposed in making this five-reel picture, which is at present being cut. It will be released through the World Film in September.

"THE BLOT ON THE SHIELD" (American).

A deep regard for the family name and a tragedy narrowly averted by a trick of fate, combined with a love between a young man and a young woman, form the theme of "The Blot on the Shield," a two-reel "Flying A" drama directed by Reeves Eason, which is to be released on the Mutual program Monday, October 18.

This is an exceptionally strong vehicle for the wonderfully appealing girlishness and charm of Vivian Rich's acting, and shows her ability to splendid advantage. The character William Copeland offers Walter Spencer unusual dramatic opportunities, all of which he turns to good account. The story is clean and wholesome, the plot well handled, and the photography unsurpassed. All in all it is a compelling film story.

"A TEST OF COURAGE" (Kalem).

When Kalem announced a few weeks ago that Miss Helen Gibson had been engaged to enact the central role in the "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series" exhibitors and photoplay patrons wondered as to whether future episodes of this series would contain the same sensational action which characterized preceding episodes.

That there will be no let-up in thrills in the railroad stories in which "Kalem's new Helen" is featured; that in fact forthcoming episodes will exceed in thrills those released during the first year of the series' run, was emphatically declared by one of the Kalem officials the other day.

"You cannot state too strongly the fact that Kalem company was correctly quoted in your publication a few weeks ago, when in a story telling of certain changes in the 'Hazards of Helen' company, we told of our plans to make the series better than ever," said this official. "The acquisition of Miss Gibson was one of the steps in this direction, and her work in the episodes scheduled for release during the latter part of October will convince even the most skeptical exhibitors and photoplay 'fans' that 'Kalem's new Helen' is beyond all question the bravest girl in motion pictures to-day.

Scene from "A Test of Courage" (Kalem).

"With the very first picture in which she appears," continued the speaker, "all doubts as to her courage will be dispelled. This is 'A Test of Courage,' and it will be released on Saturday, October 16. It is exactly what the title implies, so far as Miss Gibson was concerned, and she acquitted herself splendidly."

"THE SPIDER" (Essanay).

This is a subtle problem play with a strong moral. It sounds a note of warning to working girls who long for the gay and beautiful things of life, showing them the many pitfalls that lurk in their paths. The photography is worked out so as to show the character of the villain of the piece, the face of the lecherous old man fading into that of a devil and reappearing. The plot involves the love of a poor and unsophisticated country girl for the beautiful things of life. She works in the city for small wages. A young man from her own town is in love with her and takes her nightly to dine in a cheap restaurant. But she longs for the things that wealth can buy and when a rich old bachelor invites her to dine with him she falls unsuspectingly into his trap. But her sweetheart knows the character of the man and follows the two to the bachelor's apartments, where the girl already has learned her lesson. He arrives in time to save the girl, and she, her eyes opened at last, accepts his love. John Lorenz, as the spider, and Ruth Stonehouse as the country girl, are exceptionally strong in their parts. The play was written by James Francis Dwyer, the well known magazine writer.

Scene from "The Spider" (Essanay).

"WHEN APPEARANCES DECEIVE" (Kalem).

On Friday, October 29, Kalem Company will issue "When Appearances Deceive," the first episode of the much-heralded series of single-reel dramas, featuring dainty Marguerite Courtot, "The Ventures of Marguerite."

Although the first episode was originally scheduled to be issued on October 22, it was found that this could not be done without seriously imperiling the quality of the feature. Determined to make "The Ventures of Marguerite" of supreme quality, the release date of "When Appearances Deceive" was postponed one week.

Scene from "When Appearances Deceive" (Kalem).

Some of the stage settings, notably the one showing a room in the rendezvous of the band of kidnappers, are remarkable for their magnificence. It has been said that the cost of this first episode is equal to that of many two and even three-reel features.

The story commences with the very first scene and the heroine's ventures engage the attention from the start. Some unusual scenes are contained in the production. One which is sure to arouse interest all over the country is that which shows Broadway's "Gay White Way" at the height of its night life.

"THE EVER LIVING ISLES" (Reliance).

Francis Powers, who wrote and produced "The Ever Living Isles" for the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation, has done real service for visualized history. There are those who believe that history should be taught into the public schools by means of motion pictures. Persons of this belief would have historical incidents treated before the camera dramatically with costuming true to historical detail and highly efficient acting. "The Ever Living Isles" presents a series of highly dramatic and exceptional pictures of life in New England in the witchcraft days.

Carlos, a Spanish sea trader, who is almost a pirate, and Prudence, a demure though typical Puritan maiden, are the central figures. Carlos lands on the New England coast. He and Prudence are mutually attracted. Prudence has a slight malady which he cures through his knowledge of herbs, but the community accuses him of witchcraft. He is ordered to leave the colony under pain of being hanged.

Prudence goes to a lofty cliff overlooking the sea. She sees Carlos sailing away to his principality, The Ever Living Isles, on his ship. She swoons and falls into the sea. Carlos at once rescues her. At first he is strongly inclined to take her with him to The Ever Living Isles, but she prevails upon him to return to the colony. The town authorities at once seize him. They are about to execute their sentence of death when a proclamation arrives from the English King forbidding punishment for the fanciful offense, witchcraft.

Carlos is freed at once. He claims the hand of Florence.

Scene from "The Ever Living Isles" (Reliance).

Eugene Pallette, who recently rejoined the Reliance forces, is Carlos; Bessie Boskirk is Prudence. Other principals are James Cosgrove, Harold Goodwin, the juvenile player; Charles Mack, Harry Moody and Mrs. Hanforth.

"The Ever Living Isles," with its splendid treatment of the Colonial period and the typical fallacy of witchcraft, will make an agreeable variety for the exhibitor, most of whose offerings just now are modern photoplays.

SELIG RELEASE DATE CHANGES.

A change in the release dates of the Selig pictureplay program has been announced. "Landing the Hose Reel," the first in the Chronicles of Bloom Center series, originally announced for release on Thursday, October 14th, has been transferred to Thursday, October 21st. There will be no release on Thursday, October 14 with the exception of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial.

On Monday, October 25th, the second comedy in The Chronicles of Bloom Center will be released under the title "Shoo-fly." This comedy had to do with a fly-swatting crusade in Bloom Center. Prizes are to be given those who swat the most flies and the Commercial Traveler steps in and takes all the coveted prizes in a most unusual manner.

Constable Plum, Percy Pinkham, Selina Tubbs, Chubby Green, Phil Pickel, Margaret Tate and all the other characters who scored such a hit in the initial release, "Landing the Hose Reel," appear in the second of the Chronicles of Bloom Center series, "Shoo-fly."

Following the initial release, "Landing the Hose Reel," a three-part Selig Diamond Special, the following eleven comedies will each consist of two parts and will be released on Mondays, starting with Monday, October 25th. Each of the Chronicles are complete as to plot and action, although all the characters disport themselves in the complete series.

VITAGRAPH FINISHING "GREEN STOCKINGS."

Another Blue Ribbon Feature will be added to the Vitagraph Company's multiple reel successes upon the completion of the five-part film version of A. E. W. Mason's comedy, "Green Stockings." Director Wilfrid North has been at work the past month on its production and is now finishing the last few scenes. A notable feature of this comedy is the wonderful cast that has been giving life to the various characters and action to the scenes. The most important members of an all-star cast include Lillian Walker as Celia Faraday, Stanley Dark as Col. Smith, Louise Beaudet as Aunt Ida, Charles Brown as Tarver, Adele de Garde as Phyllis, Frank Currier as Faraday, and John T. Kelly, Charles Wellesley and Denton Vane. The screen version which was picturized from the original manuscript, by Eugene Mullin, follows the play closely, the comedy element being retained through the pantomimic talent of the players. The story hinges on the custom, in a section of rural England, that the eldest daughter wear a pair of green stockings at the wedding of her younger sister. The action in "Green Stockings" is laid in England and Northeast Africa, and Director North has reproduced scenes that for correctness of detail and scenic background are truly wonderful. "Green Stockings" will be one of the season's most important comedy releases and comes up to the high standard set by the Vitagraph Company for all of their feature pictures.

"TAKING A CHANCE" (Cub Comedy).

A satire on a traveling troupe playing "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and on theatrical life such as is experienced by a small one-night stand company forms the basis for the Cub Comedy release of Friday, October 15. It is called "Taking a Chance."

Those who understand the ways of a small traveling theatrical organization will find in this picture a faithful portrayal of such a company's trials and tribulations. Handled in the satirical manner that it is, "Taking a Chance" is sure to bring forth plenty of laughs not only from the unitiated, but also from those to whom the workings of a show is a dark mystery.

Scene from "Taking a Chance" (Cub).

George Ovey is featured in the cast which includes George George, Louis Fitzroy, Jefferson Osborne, Arthur Mund, Goldie Colwell, Janet Sully and others.

"AN AFFAIR OF THREE NATIONS" (Pathe).

Pathe has for release on October 22 the first of the new Arnold Daly pictures adapted from the "Ashton-Kirk" novels of John T. McIntyre. "An Affair of Three Nations" is the title, and it is in five reels of mystery and thrill. Mr. Daly himself plays the part of "Ashton-Kirk, Investigator," and he is ably supported by Sheldon Lewis, of "The Exploits of Elaine" fame; Louise Rutter, Doris Mitchell, Charles Laite, Martin Sabine and William Harrigan.

The cast is remarkably well balanced and the story holds the interest from start to finish. The atmosphere of mystery and suspense is very well sustained and the production is a sumptuous one. Altogether "An Affair of Three Nations" may be well termed a picture of unusual merit.

Scene from "An Affair of Three Nations" (Pathe).

"BRUTE FORCE" (Biograph).

Following closely behind two remarkable productions, "The Battle of Elderbush Gulch" and "Oil and Water," this two-reel Biograph re-issue has much to live up to in order to maintain the standard set by its predecessors. And the standard is not impaired by any means, because "Brute Force" is a two-reel production that is well worth re-issuing. The thread of this story is picked up at the close of "Man's Genesis," a previous one-reel Biograph re-issue in which Weakhands invented the stone hammer. For a while Weakhands' tribe, with the aid of the stone hammer, are able to resist the attacks of Monkeywalks' low cave men, but they, too, have learned the secret of this wonderful weapon, and after equipping themselves with stone hammers fashioned after Monkeywalks' idea, they again set forth to conquer the women of Weakhands' tribe. This time they are successful. Weakhands and his men are facing annihilation when Weakhands makes another invention. While sitting moodily he flicks the string of a whip. The idea of the bow and arrow is evolved. The weapon does terrible execution among Monkeywalks' men; the women of Weakhands' tribe are rescued and Weakhands is again proclaimed a hero.

The atmosphere of this production is remarkable in that the settings lend the desired color of the prehistoric period. The photography is the usual Biograph standard and the work of the notable cast headed by Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, under the direction of D. W. Griffith, is of the calibre one would expect of him.

Scene from "Brute Force" (Biograph).

In "Brute Force" Biograph has re-issued a two-reel production that is dramatic and at the same time spectacular. It is released on the General program Friday, October 22.

"'TWO SPOT' JOE" (Mustang).

Exhibitors literally "sat up and took notice" when they saw the two-reel "Mustang" picture, "Two Spot Joe" at an advance showing. This is a film story enacted by an all-star Western cast under the direction of Donald MacDonald, a man of the West.

The story starts in the East where Tom Carroll (Jack Richardson) and his wife Jennie (Anna Little) are discouraged. The husband goes West to make his fortune, where he squanders what money he has and falls into evil ways.

E. Forrest Taylor, in the title role, depicts the true man of the West—the man of the generous heart and honest respect of women.

Scene from "Two Spot Joe" (Mustang).

Louise Lester, the well-known character woman, gives her part, the dance hall girl, its just coloration.

Taken, all in all, this story draws wonderful lines of comparison between strong and weak men and carries its moral lesson well into the minds of its witnesses.

Anna Little, as the deserted wife, gives an eloquent portrayal of a true woman's misdirected faith with all its pathetic appeal. This film is to be released on the Mutual program, Saturday, October 15th.

SECOND JAMAICA FEATURE RELEASED.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, have just released the second of the Tom Terriss feature photoplays made in Jamaica, West Indies, some months ago, soon after the organization of the Terriss Company to distribute exclusively through the well known service agency. The second picture bears the title of "The Flame of Passion" and has been made in five parts. Like its predecessor, "The Pearl of the Antilles," "The Flame" presents Mr. Terriss both as leading man and director. Additional interest is given it by the fact that in "The Flame" Elaine Terriss appears in the role of a "vampire" woman, a characterization in which she has excelled on the legitimate stage for years.

Scene from "The Flame of Passion" (Picture Playhouse).

Prints of both "The Pearl of the Antilles" and "The Flame of Passion" are in the hands of the several branch offices of the Picture Playhouse Film Company throughout the country, and early reports are to the effect that exhibitors everywhere are displaying unusual interest in the new productions.

GAUMONT EXCHANGING PUBLICITY.

Here is another scheme whereby the Mutual Film Corporation is establishing newspaper co-operation as a boost to its publicity. This time it is in connection with the Gaumont Company's weekly split-reel animated cartoon release "Keeping Up with The Joneses." "Keeping Up with The Joneses" as a newspaper cartoon has appeared in dailies all over the country for a long time. The pictures of the ludicrous happenings to the Jones family, drawn by "Pop," are syndicated by the Associated Newspapers.

The Mutual has arranged with many of the papers carrying the "Jones" cartoons in cities where the animated pictures are to be shown to reciprocate in the matter of publicity. A trailer attached to the cartoon comic bears the names of the newspapers in which "Keeping Up with The Joneses" may be seen. In return the newspapers mentioned are giving space in their columns to the "Jones" family in motion, printing the names of theaters in which they may be seen and giving the funny pictures general reading publicity.

"THAT LASS O' LOWRIES" (Universal).

There are some excellent scenes in the big Universal production, "That Lass o' Lowries," the picture which has just been completed by Robert Leonard, with Helen Ware in the leading role, and when it is released the public is going to see some fine "sets."

Helen Ware could not have found a vehicle more adapted for her peculiar and attractive dramatic ability, and the piece, which will mark her screen debut, offers excellent opportunities for this famous star.

The picture deals with life in the Welsh mining district and is a dramatic story of the life of a girl who is unfortunate in having a father who is a hard worker, hard drinker and hard fighter, and is familiarly known among the women of the pit as "That Lass o' Lowries."

The scenes supposed to represent streets in a Welsh village have been most correctly reproduced by Director Leonard, and he deserves commendation for his great attention to the details in this production, which promises to outdo everything he has done heretofore. Some of these scenes were reproduced from actual photographs which were enlarged and sent over from Wales, where a representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had them taken especially for the guidance of this production.

MLLE. VALKYRIEN IN "THE VALKYRIEN."

Mlle. Valkyrien, known in private life as the Baroness Dewitz, has been shown the unusual honor of having a feature play written around her and named after her by the Thanhouser people. The youthful baroness, who has achieved international fame as the most beautiful girl of her native country, Denmark, is now at work at the New Rochelle studio creating the stellar role in this unique production, which will be a "Than-o-Play" feature in three parts, the plot of which will be announced later. This is the third stellar lead which Mlle. Valkyrien has created during the last three months. She started in "Youth," a Vitagraph Broadway Star feature, in which she interpreted the personification of Youth. This was followed by her portrayal of Diana in the mythological series of "Diana at the Bath," which will soon be featured by the Pluragraph Company. Her present, and third, stellar role, is entitled "The Valkyrien" and is ideally suited to her unique and classic personality.

SELIG MAKES "GREATER LOVE."

"Greater Love" is the name of a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, soon to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company. Miss Bessie Eyton will enact the role of a Japanese girl. Although Miss Eyton has played hundreds of different character roles on the screen she never played the part of a Japanese girl. In this play Miss Eyton has opportunities to attain emotional heights which she keenly appreciates.

KERRIGAN AGAIN IN WESTERN ROLES.

The many friends of J. Warren Kerrigan will be glad to see him playing those western parts for which he became famous and in which he has few who can equal him. He has been up in the mountains of Lower California taking a series of western dramas, every one of which will not fail in its attempt to please his many admirers.

In the accompanying picture he is seen on his favorite horse, Nell, in the drama, "Payment Received," which will soon be released by the Universal. It is said this is one of the best western pictures in which he has ever appeared.

Scene from "Payment Received" (Universal).

PORTLAND SHOWS "CARMEN."

E. L. Crawford opened the Casco theater, Portland, Maine, on Monday evening, October 4th, with the Carmen picture before a large and select audience. The theater has been fitted with a very elaborate stage setting for this production and this greatly enhances the pictures. Suitable music was rendered by a large orchestra and the production was staged and directed by the famous director of motion picture productions, S. L. Rothapfel of New York City. Mr. Crawford has installed for this production two of the latest model motion picture projection machines, Power's Cameragraph No. 6B. A special representative of the Nicholas Power Company of New York installed the machine and the projection of the Carmen pictures were conceded to be the best ever seen in Portland.

BEATRIZ MICHELENA STUDIES HYPNOTISM.

An indication of the lengths to which the more exacting actors and actresses are wont to go to insure absolutely correct detail in their impersonations, may be found in the fact that Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful "California" star, has recently become a student of hypnotism. The result of her investigation is intended to assist her in one of the big scenes of "The Unwritten Law," which is now being produced at the "California" studios.

The theme of hypnotic influence has long played a prominent part in both stage and screen productions, but usually in an overdrawn and overacted manner. It is to get away from this fanciful weaving of arms and bulging of eyes that Miss Michelena is now studying hypnotism as a scientific reality. She has for some days past been meeting in conferences with the heads of the Department of Psychology at the University of California and likewise the medical department of the Affiliated Colleges in San Francisco.

A noticeable feature of Miss Michelena's art has always been the care with which she has avoided false and melodramatic effects in her scenes.

THRILLING STUNT AWES BEHOLDERS.

Irving Cummings, the hero in "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American photoplay, has won new laurels as a daredevil of the first magnitude. He has done stunts in automobiles for previous chapters of the big pictures that were believed impossible, fallen from racing horses, battled for his picture life in raging waters and dared all other mundane terrors. In a forthcoming chapter of the McCardell novel Mr. Cummings, as John Powell, makes a sensational escape in an aeroplane, rising high above the hills near San Diego and circling through the air at a dangerous angle.

Of course where there is a hero there must of necessity be a villain. In this instance it is Blair Stanley, the character to which William Russell has offered a marvelous portrayal. Mr. Cummings handles the aeroplane with the ease and abandon of a skilled aviator, although he took only a three-weeks' term at the student camp of the Curtiss Aviation School on Angel Island.

"A MODEL FRAME-UP" ON STATES RIGHTS BASIS.

The Momus Producing Company secures the rights to three reel feature produced by the Magneto Film Corporation. When Frank B. Coigne produced "A Model Frame Up" for the Magneto Film Corporation at the Momus Studio in Edgewater, N. J., J. C. Davis, Jr., who owns and operates the studio, went to watch the directing of the picture. He was so favorably impressed with it that he immediately started negotiations to secure the rights to the picture. These came to a successful conclusion last week and the film will be released to States Rights buyers on Thursday, October 14th.

The picture is in three reels and is a good clean comedy that will not give offense to any one and at the same time furnishes plenty of fun from start to finish. An attractive line of paper is being prepared for this feature and every help will be given the exhibitor.

BAUSCH & LOMB AT EXPOSITION.

The record made by the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. at the Panama-Pacific Exposition is one that is probably unequaled by any of the other exhibitors at San Francisco. The awards granted aggregate four grand prix, or highest possible awards, one medal of honor and one gold medal. The award in each case was the highest prize granted. There is good reason to believe that no one company in any other department of the great exposition received such high honors as did Bausch & Lomb. In fact the company's representative at the fair writes that the other exhibitors, regardless of their product or how they were grouped, only received one grand prix and in most cases only a gold medal.

The four classes in which Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. received the grand prix are optical instruments, balopticons, engineering instruments and range finders. The first division, called optical instruments, is comprised of seven classes and covers the company's ophthalmic lenses, microscopes, parabolic and Mangin mirrors, field glasses, microtomes and magnifiers.

A medal of honor was awarded Bausch & Lomb photomicrographic apparatus. Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss photographic lenses received the gold medal.

TERRISS PRODUCTION BOOKING WELL.

Tom Terriss has disproved the old biblical saw, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country." Terriss evidently is not without honor, even in his own country, England, for he has received a cablegram from London saying that $4,000 of bookings had been taken for his first American feature, "The Pursuing Shadow" and asking him to hurry prints of "Flame of Passion," "The Pearl of the Antilles" and "A Woman of the World" with those of whatever other pictures he might be engaged on.

COMPLETING "ON THE TRAIL."

Edith Storey, Evart Overton, Ned Finley and Jay Dwiggins have just returned from Oyster Bay, where they have been taking scenes in "On the Trail," a Vitagraph feature being produced under the direction of George D. Baker. They will continue work in this picture in the studio, completing the final scenes which are interiors.

MINA CUNARD IN "ORDERS IS ORDERS."

The many friends and admirers of Grace Cunard will be pleased to hear that she almost entirely recovered from the effects of the operation she recently underwent at Universal City, and it is very probable that she will return to her company in a week or so for the completion of "The Broken Coin" serial.

Grace Cunard and Her Sister Nina.

During her illness her sister, Mina, took her place. Francis Ford took the company to San Francisco, where a one-reel comedy was made, entitled "Orders Is Orders," and in which Mina Cunard is featured. Herewith is a photograph of Grace and her sister.

Mutual Taking on New Players

Personnel of the Companies Contributing to the Program Reorganized Two Months Ago.

NO less than sixty players, each of whom has won success either on the stage or in motion picture work, have been secured for the Mutual program since the reorganization began some two months ago. Some idea of the players and the companies they are under contract with may be gleaned from the following list:

David Horsley productions: Crane Wilbur, Captain Jack Bonavita, George Ovey, Margaret Gibson, Leona Hutton, Ella Oswald, Joseph Von Meter, Donald O'Brien, John E Brennan, Louise Fitzroy, Janet Sully, Goldie Colwell, Gordon MacGregor, Jefferson Osborne, Ray Lincoln and several others to be announced in the near future.

THE NEWMAN UNIT FRAME.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, with factories at 717 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, O., 108 West Lake street, Chicago, Ill., and 101 Fourth avenue, New York, N. Y., are equipping a good many theaters with a new style unit frame for the corners of theater lobbies. These frames are exceedingly neat and attractive, as will be seen by the accompanying illustration. The unit frames are made with two one-sheet poster compartments in front and a three-sheet poster compartment on the lobby side, with each compartment having a brass door opening on hinges with lock provided. A brass base board at the bottom makes a neat finish to the frames, and when there is a slope in the lobby this base board is properly shaped to fit the slope. Above the three-sheet poster compartment a gold letter glass sign is permanently affixed, having the name of the theater.

As will be noticed on the illustration, the brass framing of the doors is made of new improved corrugated or ribbed brass moulding, which is a new style of moulding put out by this company, which not only is different and more attractive than the ordinary plain brass moulding, but is much more durable. These frames can also be made in plain brass moulding and can be constructed with three-sheet and six-sheet poster frames, or with smaller frames to suit. As can be seen on the illustration the front face of the column does not necessarily have to be as wide as the frame, as there is no objection to the frames projecting into the lobby as much as 12 inches or more.

The object of frames of this kind to fit on corners is to make the display neat and compact, and thus enabling the passerby to see at a glance just what the program is. Besides, it eliminates the necessity of keeping easels in the lobby where the lobbies are small. The Newman Company have recently equipped a number of theaters with these unit frames.

Pell Mitchell, who has charge of the Mutual Weekly, is receiving congratulations for his quick work in getting on the job at the Seventh avenue subway cave-in. Even before the city officials had arrived, Mr. Mitchell was present with his camera men, recording history as it was being made. The film was finished, and shown in three sections at the Strand theatre the evening of the accident less than ten hours later.

"The Eternal City" Takes England by Storm

Hall Caine Sees Famous Players Adaptation of His Great Masterpiece and Cables Congratulations.

HALL CAINE was perhaps the most interested spectator in the throng that crowded the Marble Arch Pavilion in London within the fortnight, when the long-heralded screen adaptation of his "Eternal City," which was made by the Famous Players Film Company with Pauline Frederick as the star, was presented to the British public for the first time. At the close of the performance, which was warmly received, Mr. Caine cabled the feature producers congratulating them upon their unsurpassed production.

"Personally, I think it is a wonderful production," declared Mr. Caine to the London representatives of the company. "It follows my story with an exactness that is remarkable. The pictures of 'The Eternal City' convey just the idea and infuse just the atmosphere that I strove to impart to the book. I am delighed with the film and I only hope that those who see it in the picture theaters will derive as much pleasure from seeing it on the screen as I myself did."

The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly said in part: "We congratulate the Famous Players Film Company upon the complete and signal success of their effort in every way, for the production stands out as one of the best that has been submitted for public approval."

The Bioscope, another eminent British trade authority, has this to say concerning "The Eternal City": "That the Famous Players Company should have had the courage and enterprise to conceive and consummate so ambitious a scheme is characteristic of their well-known policy of sparing neither money nor effort in perfecting their films—a policy which they laid down at the beginning of their brilliant career and which, unlike so many others, they have adhered to unwaveringly ever since."

Notes of the Trade.

A Power's Cameragraph No. 6B motion picture projecting machine was used at the National Exposition of Chemical Industries during the week of September 20 at the Grand Central Palace, New York, to project the motion pictures depicting the many different phases of the chemical industries throughout the world.

In "Unto Those Who Sin," a three reel Selig Diamond Special being filmed at the west coast studios of the Selig Polyscope company under the direction of Robert Daly, Fritzi Brunette wears a dozen or more beautiful imported gowns. The character which she portrays is that of a heartless woman of the world who gives up all for her own selfish pleasure. George Larkin has the leading male role.

Rena Rogers, formerly with Universal, makes her initial appearance with MinA comedies in their release of October 7, "The Honeymoon Roll." Her vivacious manner and cute personality make her very valuable in comedy pictures and it is said that her work in "The Honeymoon Roll" is most clever.

Reaves Eason has just started a new picture, "In Sheep's Clothing," a two reel drama in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburg appear together. It will be released shortly in the regular Mutual program.

Kalem is now producing a magnificent four-act production of "The Black Crook," the famous extravaganza which created theatrical history years ago. A large number of chorus girls have been engaged specially for this feature and are now being rehearsed by Julian Alfred. This is said to be the first time in the history of the film industry that chorus numbers have been conceived and rehearsed by professionals expressly for the screen.

Director Archer MacMakin, of the Beauty (Mutual) company, has just finished an amusing comedy, "The Woman's Votes," in which John Steppling plays a leading role. Mr. MacMakin is now engaged in the production of "Her Adopted Father," a good comedy in which Frank Borzage plays the lead.

Petite Helene Reason, who, despite her seventeen years, is conceded one of the most brilliant young players in motion picture work, is the star of "The Terror of Twin Mountains," a stirring western drama in two reels, produced by the American Film Company, Inc., for release in the regular Mutual program, September 27.

Director James Douglass of the American (Mutual) has just finished "Mammy's Rose," a one reel comedy of Dixieland, full of humor, pathos and vivid camera effects. In this picture appear Frank Borzage as "Frank," Neva Gerber as "Beth," Lucille Ward as "Mammy" and William Carroll as "Mammy's" husband. Their interpretation of the parts is particularly effective.

Princess Mona Darkfeather is another of the recent additions to David Horsley's players at his studios in Los Angeles. She has joined the company putting on the Centaur Features, in which the Bostock animals are the featured players, and which is directed by her husband, Frank Montgomery.

The Sterling Camera and Film company, of 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City, on account of increase in business have removed from suite 813 to suites 809 and 810 on the same floor and in the same building, 145 West Forty-fifth street.

Three more episodes are left, before Director W. D. Taylor of the American company will complete the great serial, "The Diamond from the Sky."

Clad in a heavy suit of armor, Bud Duncan came within an ace of drowning, following a leap into the river while taking part in "The Knights and the Knave," a new Kalem comedy.

"The Vengeance of Rannah," a story of the punishment of an unfaithful wife and her lover, by James Oliver Curwood, is being filmed in the Selig Jungle-Zoo studios at Los Angeles, Cal. The setting of the picture is an East India military garrison and the leading players are Thomas Santschi, Marion Warner, Lafayette McKee and Leo Pierson.

Robert Ellis, who directed Kalem's four-act drama, "The Apaches of Paris," has just recovered from an attack of appendicitis. Mr. Ellis is now at work on a new Kalem feature. "The Appaches of Paris" features Joseph Smith and Laura Hamilton in the famous specialty, "The Dance of the Apaches."

"Little Mary" Miles Minter, the Columbia-Metro star, who has the stellar role in "Emmy, of Stork's Nest," a five part feature photoplay now being completed for the Metro program, is posing for a color poster that Hamilton King, the well known painter of pretty girls, is making of her in the Central Park Studios, No. 27 West Sixty-seventh street. Mr. King, whose pretty girls are well known, prevailed upon Miss Minter to pose for the picture because of the winsome, childish loveliness, which has captivated the hearts of so many audiences of the stage and screen.

The Associated Film Sales Corporation has secured the services of Mr. Rotberg as their general office man. He is now busy starting a system for the home office and will later take a trip through the country to co-operate with the exchangemen in reviewing and perfecting any lack of system that may be necessary.

George Sidney, of "Busy Izzy" fame, is shortly to appear as a Mutual star. George was recently engaged by the Gaumont company as the featured player in the two reel all star comedies to be produced by them for the Mutual.

Antonio Moreno and Naomi Childers are at Lake Placid, New York, with Vitagraph Director Harry Handworth, working in "Gone to the Dogs" and "Anselo Lee," both Feature Pictures.

Clarence M. Hill, who has been connected with the World Film company on the Coast for the past year, has joined the ranks of the Seattle Pathe organization and will represent this company in western Washington. Out of eleven theaters Mr. Hill has booked nine with Gold Rooster plays and he says that he is going back and get the other two.

Muriel Ostriche, Clara Whipple, George Soule Spencer and ten other principals of Equitable left for Cape Cod this week to stage several scenes in "The Fisher Girl" which will characterize Miss Ostriche's first appearance on the Equitable program.

Maurice Tourneur, the eminent French director of motion pictures, has accepted a scenario for the filmization of "A Parisian Romance" with George Beban of "Sign of the Rose" fame, as the star and will begin work on its production at once. He is author and producer of the screen version of "Trilby," now playing at the Forty-fourth Street theater.

Charles Bartlett, or plain "Charlie," as he is better known, has been given the direction of the company headed by Winifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen and will make one and two reel American features.

Advices from Jamaica, British West Indies, received by William Fox, inform him that work has been begun on the million-dollar Annette Kellermann picture, directed by Herbert Brenon. While Miss Kellermann will be the central figure of the picture, William E. Shay will figure prominently in her support.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are busily engaged on the production of "A Case of Eugenics," which will be released by the Vitagraph company as one of the regular "Sidney Drew Day" comedies.

Marjorie Ellison, whose work in leading and heavy roles has gained her a widespread following in Edison films, leaves that company after an engagement covering more than two years. She will leave New York the latter part of this month, going direct to Los Angeles where she will join one of the larger producing companies.

Lenore Ulrich, late star of "The Bird of Paradise," will be seen in "The Better Woman" soon, on the Equitable program. "The Better Woman" was produced by Triumph, producing for the Equitable program.

Lillian Walker, Stanley Dark, Louise Beaudet and Arline Pretty are at work on the well-known comedy, "Green Stockings," which is being produced for the Vitagraph company under the direction of Wilfrid North.

Sidney B. Lust of the United Film Service, 903 E street, N. W., Washington, D. C., has secured the exhibition rights on the K. & R. Film company's six reel feature, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," for the District of Columbia, Maryland and Delaware.

The latest match to be made in the Balboa studio is that of Edwin J. Brady and Lillian West, who recently slipped away to Santa Ana unbeknown to their co-workers and joined hands for life.

Harry Morey and L. Rogers Lytton are actively engaged in enacting the principals in the Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature, "The Woman in the Box," now being produced under the direction of Harry Davenport.

A forthcoming production by the Gaumont company is now in the hands of William F. Haddock, feature director. The picture will be in three reels and is to be released on the Mutual program under the title of "The Heritage of Hate."

* * *

British Columbia Picture Men Beginning to Feel That League for Mutual Help Is Not Up to the Mark—An Election Is at Hand and There Is Plenty for It to Do, Especially on Censorship Question.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE almost total lack of a get-together spirit among the Vancouver film men has lately been the cause of considerable unfavorable comment by those who realize the advantages to be gained by intelligent cooperation. "The exhibitors here," said a prominent moving picture man last week, "are on speaking terms with one another, but that is about as far as it goes. This province is burdened with the most insane censorship on the continent, but instead of uniting in a perpetual campaign for our undoubted rights, most of us distrust and disparage our competitors; the British Columbia Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association languishes and all but dies, while the censor runs around in blood-red spectacles shouting 'Off with his head!' With a provincial election due in the very near future, the exhibitors as a body should inaugurate a whirlwind campaign through uncensored channels to influence public opinion, and to bring to the notice of the people the narrow, confiscatory regulations to which the local film interests are subjected. The public can have no idea of what we are up against. Since our slides are censored, as well as our films, we cannot appeal through this medium, but there is nothing to prevent the manager or other person at each theater, giving at each performance an interesting three-minute talk, crammed with facts, and presenting in a forceful way the difficulties under which we are doing business. We will never get what we want unless we make a fight for it."

PATRIOTIC FILM MEN.

No class of merchants in Canada has been more generous in contributing to the various funds connected with the war than the proprietors and managers of moving picture theaters. In countless instances, houses have been given without charge for the holding of some charitable entertainment. Among the latest instances to come to notice are the following:

The Cedar Cottage theater, near Vancouver, was given free by the management for a concert, the proceeds from which were used to purchase materials for Red Cross hospital garments.

When the first installment of the "Exploits of Elaine" was shown at the Star, Greenwood, B. C., 25 per cent of the receipts were given to the Red Cross.

A patriotic concert was combined with the regular picture show at the Auditorium theater at Dawson, Yukon Territory, and the proceeds apportioned among several war funds.

At the South Side Bijou theater, in Winnipeg, a program consisting of pictures, and songs by local people, were given for the benefit of the Legion of Frontiersmen, enlisted for the war.

At Penticton, B. C., local ladies presented a sketch in connection with the pictures at the Empire theater, and the management donated the proceeds to the Red Cross.

Musical selections, and three reels of European war pictures were given at the Empress theater, Grand Forks, B. C., in aid of the Wounded Soldiers' Fund.

Manager Rice of Pantages theater, Victoria, B. C., gave the house free for a Patriotic Fund concert consisting of pictures and musical selections.

STATUS OF SUNDAY SHOWS.

For conducting on Sunday a theatrical performance at which a definite admission price was charged, three officers of the Hebrew Free School in Winnipeg were convicted of a technical violation of the Lord's Day Act, and allowed to go with a reprimand. The play, "Joseph and His Brethren," was given at the Grand theater for the benefit of the school library, and the complaint was made by License Inspector A. E. Morris, who was refused admittance until he had paid the regular admission fee. The judge's summing up of the case sheds considerable light on the status of Sunday performances. "The collection in such cases," said Magistrate MacDonald, "should be taken after the entertainment or during it, and nothing should be said to patrons who do not contribute."

EMPIRE AT BRANDON, MANITOBA.

At Brandon, Manitoba, the Empire, called by Exhibitor Grieve, Brandon's Popular Family Theater, caters to a population of 14,500 and seats 300 persons. The admission is ten and fifteen cents for five reels of General Film Service. Exhibitor Grieve looks back to the time when they could get the same admission for three reels and twenty-five cents on feature nights. He lays the change to poor business methods of the opposition houses.

The Empire.

A YOUNG EXCHANGE MANAGER.

Andrew P. Keegan, whose likeness appears below, can undoubtedly qualify as one of the youngest exchange managers in Canada, having been born in Montreal in 1889. After two years with the Kleine Optical Company in Montreal and in St. John, N. B., and a somewhat shorter period with the General Film Company in the former city, Mr. Keegan became associated with Pathe's Famous Feature Film Syndicate of Quebec. He was later selected as the first branch manager for this company, and opened an office in St. John, from which he handled the Maritime Provinces with marked success. When the syndicate recently took over the business of the Pathe Film Syndicate, Ltd., in Western Canada, and thus became distributors of this brand throughout the Dominion, Mr. Keegan was transferred to the Vancouver office, handling British Columbia and part of Alberta under the new name of the company—Specialty Film Import Limited. Since his arrival here Mr. Keegan has increased the Pathe bookings to a considerable extent, and is looking forward to a successful season.

A. P. Keegan.

VANCOUVER BREVITIES.

J. M. Cummings, Mutual's special representative for Canada, with headquarters at Montreal, and A. F. Cummings, his assistant, stationed at Winnipeg, have resigned to join the Triangle Film Corporation. No successors have been announced at this writing.

The Royal theater at New Westminster, B. C., has just installed a four-piece orchestra.

Four reels of pictures of the Russian army in action, taken by Donald C. Thompson, opened Sept. 13 for their first showing in Canada, at the Industrial Bureau in Winnipeg, at 25 cents. Fifty per cent. of the receipts is to be given to the Red Cross and Patriotic Funds.

D. Bray, manager of the Edison theater at Bellingham, Wash., visited New Westminster, B. C., on Labor Day.

Out of 521 reels inspected by the Winnipeg city censor during Aug. 31, one-half were condemned, and 268 cuts were made from 116 other reels.

The Lyric at Calgary, which ran pictures during the summer, has opened under new management, with the Bostonian Opera Company, which has just returned from Yukon and Alaska.

M. Meyerfield, Jr., of the Orpheum Circuit, was in Vancouver recently, looking over his local interests.

It is hard for some exhibitors to see the part that advertising plays in success. If they are making money publcty seems all rght, but when they aren't the rub comes. It pays.

Manager Walter Creamer of the D. A. A. A. theater, Dawson, Yukon Territory, has received a cable from his son, with the Canadian Cycle corps in England, stating that he is about to leave for the front in France.

The Russian war films, which opened at the Industrial Bureau, Winnipeg, Manitoba, shut down after one night on account of poor light. Further showing of the pictures was postponed until a mercury arc rectifier could be secured.

The Domion Film exchange, of which E. R. Fauser is manager, is now established in new quarters in the Leigh Spencer building, in the center of the Vancouver theater district ,and preparations are being made for a busy season with the World Film product. An English weekly is being imported by this exchange, and with new titles is being put out as the "Dominion Topical Review." The Pathe exchange is also in this building.

The Maple Leaf, one of the National Amusement Company's houses in Vancouver, was closed on Sept. 18, and alterations were begun which will considerably enhance the attractiveness of this theater.

W. P. Dewees, of the Rex theater, Vancouver, in connection with his importation of the V-L-S-E features from Seattle, has taken out an exchange license, and is thus able to book the pictures into the Globe for second run. As Mr. Dewees pointed out, it is cheaper to pay $300 for an exchange license, and a censor fee of $1 per reel, than to pay $5 for the first reel of a subject and $2 per thousand feet for any additional reels, which is the charge when no exchange license is held.

A NEW EXCHANGE IN BOSTON.

Kriterion Company of New England, with Barnard Corbett at Helm.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new exchange of the Kriterion Company of New England has been opened at 197 and 205 Pleasant street, under the management of Bernard H. Corbett, who is also president of the corporation.

Mr. Corbett needs no introduction to the New England exhibitors. For a number of years, he was associated with the Thomas A. Edison Company, Inc., of Orange, N. J., and later with the interprise Optical Company of Chicago, makers of Motiograph machines, and as sales manager for the General Film Company. Thoroughly familiar with every branch of the moving picture industry, with him at the helm, the success of Boston's infant exchange should be assured. For some time Mr. Corbett has been the proprietor of the Corbett theater equipment company.

Fourteen theaters have already signed contracts for the Kriterion Service. These include the Palace, Premier and South End theaters, Boston, which are operated by the Automatic vaudeville company.

The new exchange will carry a complete line of Simplex, Power's, Edison, Baird, Standard, Motiograph and Veriscope machines and will also deal in supplies and accessories of every description.

The building which is occupied by the company is thoroughly fireproof and is located in the heart of Boston's film district. The exhibition room, which will seat 150 persons and which has a pitched floor, is without a doubt the best in the city. Advance exhibitions of the new releases will be given every Wednesday and Mr. Corbett extends a cordial invitation to all exhibitors to attend. Mr. Thomas H. Mullen is the treasurer of the new corporation.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF "TRILBY."

A private screening of the Equitable feature, "Trilby," was given during the past week in the Modern theater, Boston. Many New England exhibitors were in the audience and were loud in their praises of the work of Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye. The arrangements for this exhibition were made by Manager Stanley W. Hand of the World Film corporation and General Manager J. Lourie of the Modern theater. Manager Hand reports that the outlook for Equitable features is exceptionally bright in this territory and that several exhibitors have contracted for these pictures.

Exhibitors — Exchangemen — Programs and Personals.

Harry Hirsch, who directs the destinies of the serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," in the New England territory, spent several days of the past week in New York City. He reports that picture fans are very enthusiastic over the film.

Herman Rifkin, manager of the Eastern Film Company, which handles the Alliance program in New England, has returned from a week's trip to Chicago.

Clarence W. Bunn, who has been connected with the Boston office of the World Film, has been promoted to manager of the Washington, D. C., branch of that concern

Manager Samuel Moscow of the Boston office of the United Film Service of New England is elated over the reception that is being given to the new feature which he is handling. This feature is the picturization of Dickens' novel, "Oliver Twist." The film is booked solid until the middle of November. The Brookline Friendly Society, which runs the only picture shows in Brookline, has contracted for the feature to be run on two dates.

Stanley Sumner has undertaken the management of the new Harvard theater in North Cambridge, Mass. He was formerly connected with the Scenic Temple, Cambridge, but for the past year has been acting as general manager for several theater properties in New England and is the proprietor of the Premier theater at Newburyport, Mass.

General Manager Harry Wasserman of the Eagle theater, Roxbury; Victoria theater, Lawrence, and the Orpheum theater, Haverhill, has contracted with Manager Samuel Bernfield of the New England Pathe exchange for the use of the Gold Rooster features.

The Plaza theater, Salem, opened its season last week with "Les Miserables" as the feature attraction. This feature is handled by Sam Grant, who is also directing the destinies of "The Fall of Przemysl," which closed a two weeks' engagement at Tremont Temple, Boston, last Saturday night. During its stay at the Boston playhouse, it played to capacity houses and received considerable favorable comment in the Boston newspapers.

PORTLAND LOCAL COMBINATION ENDS.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Portland theatrical situation has taken an interesting new turn of late, according to the Argus, which says that this development is the dissolution of the partnership of Green & Abrams with the B. F. Keith corporation. As is known by the public, this combination represented, besides the Keith theatre, the Portland and the Strand, these three places of amusement having been run in harmonious agreement for the past season or two.

Mr. Hiram Abrams was the man connected with his concern who had to assume the burden of looking after the Portland interests. Since this local business deal was brought about, Mr. Abrams' other enterprises have been coming by leaps and bounds, especially his Paramount patronage, and it had become necessary for him to devote all of his attention in that direction.

Recently an agreement annulling the local combination was reached, and hereafter the Keith and the other theaters will be run independent of each other so far as actual partnership is concerned.

HARD WORK FOR ROADMEN THESE DAYS.

A Bangor exchange man remarks that the good old times in the moving picture business in Maine, when almost any kind of a picture would be snapped up by the exhibitor, when exchanges and road men were few in this state, are past. Now, exchanges are multiplying these days, and road men are so numerous that it is not at all uncommon to meet five or six in Bangor on walking down the street—and Bangor is a city of only 25,000 population. The exhibitors are offered the choice of all sorts of attractions, and, as a result of this keen competition, the exchange men and the road men find that the hardest kind of hard work is essential to success.

BAROLET OF WORLD FILM.

You can't help liking "Charlie" Barolet, who has just been appointed exchange manager for the United Film Company, with headquarters at 507-509 Eastern Trust Building, State street, Bangor, Maine. Everyone who meets this film man is convinced five minutes after introduction that he he has made a new friend, and a good one.

Charles H. Barolet comes from Providence. In 1910 he established the Auburn theater at Auburn, R. I. In 1912 he took a position in the office of the Mutual Film Company. On February 1, 1913, Mr. Murphy went to the World Film Company and Mr. Barolet joined him, and he again joined Mr. Murphy when that gentleman became connected with Warner's Features, now the United Film.

"Charlie" Barolet.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" CLOSES.

"The Birth of a Nation" has concluded its engagement at the B. F. Keith theater in Portland, after having surpassed all records for aggregate attendance for the week for any kind of entertainment ever given in Portland hall or theater. The house practically was sold out at all performances, both matinee and evening. It is probable that all records for box office receipts was also broken at the Keith theater.

JOSEPH M'CONVILLE PROMOTED

Joseph A. McConville, long identified with newspaper work in Portland, where he has a host of friends, and who severed his connection with the Express-Advertiser and Sunday Telegram about two years ago to accept a position as publicity manager for the Famous Players Film company of New England, with headquarters at Boston, has been promoted to the office of assistant manager for the same company, and in his new capacity will care for the wants of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

For a time after completing his duties with the Express-Advertiser Mr. McConville was manager of the New Portland theater, but later on was transferred to the Boston office of the Famous Players Film Company by Hiram Abrams, president, and since going there has, in addition to his duties of publicity manager, held many other important positions.

Exhibitors' Notes—Programs—Personals.

Manager Reeves of the Strand theater, Portland, has been receiving congratulations on his new orchestra, which is a distinct addition to this fine theater. It is composed of splendid musicians—men who have played with some of the best known musical organizations in the country—and assisting them is the only concert organ to be found in any theater in this part of New England.

Deagan's musical electrical bells were played in Portland for the first time last week, having been installed as a permanent feature in the Empire theater in connection with the Empire symphony four orchestra.

Exchange Manager Charles M. Stern, of the Universal company at Bangor, is much devoted to his prize pets, which are two of the handsomest bull dogs in the state of Maine.

Proprietor William Means of the Gem, Machias, was a visitor to Bangor during the past week, and reports excellent business.

Other exhibitors visiting in Bangor recently were William Dolliver, of Bar Harbor, and C. E. Lindall, of Tenants Harbor.

G. W. Crockett, of Sandy Point, has taken on Universal service, and reports big business, with "Damon and Pythias" and "The Broken Coin."

NEW PHILLIPSBURG THEATER.

The Chambers Street theatre, Phillipsburg, Pa., the first moving picture house on the hill section, recently opened to the public. The theatre is of brick construction and has dimensions of ninety by thirty feet, and has a seating capacity of 500 persons. It is controlled by a stock company of Phillipsburg citizens.

BIG AMUSEMENT COMPANY STARTS.

A charter was recently granted under the laws of the State of Delaware to the Chesapeake Haven Amusement company, to conduct places of amusement at Chesapeake Haven, Md., and elsewhere. The concern has been incorporated with a capital stock of $300,000, the principal incorporators being John L. Hessey, Earleville, Md., Dr. C. A. Kane and M. Van Booskirk, of Philadelphia, Pa.

New Pennsylvania Theaters—Business Notes—Personals.

The Empire Palace, 2844 Frankford avenue, has recently closed its door to the public. W. Watts, proprietor of the theatre, stated that business conditions were such that it was practically impossible to remain open any longer.

Lewis Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, announces the sale of some equipment to the Electric Theatre Supply Company, included among which were several new Simplex machines.

H. M. Reis, formerly of the Southern theatre, Broad and Reed streets, has recently leased the Tulpehocken theatre, at Germantown. Mr. Reis is an experienced exhibitor and is preparing to make a success of his latest venture. It is sure that he will offer the best of pictures to his patrons.

Bids are being received for the erection of a moving picture theatre in Eddystone, Pa., for John M. Kennedy, Jr., 1001 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. The building is to be of brick construction and will be one story in height. Plans were drawn by H. H. Kline, architect, corner of 6th and Mifflin streets, this city.

Harry Savage, manager of the World theater, Atlantic City, N. J., declares that he has been receiving his share of the business at that place and that he expects to accomplish great results during the winter months. He was a recent visitor to Philadelphia, and while here purchased two latest model Power No. 6B machines.

H. Sheerer, manager of the P. O. S. of A. moving picture theater, Berwick, Pa., was a recent visitor to the city of Brotherly Love and paid a visit to the various supply houses. Before leaving he was persuaded to purchase a new 6A machine.

Irritating Censorship

Pennsylvania Exhibitors and Picture Patrons Disgusted by Irrational and Unwarranted Cutting of Films by State Board of Censors—"The Fatal Card" Latest Picture Maltreated—Protest Bears Fruit.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

A VIGOROUS protest was recently made by several local film theater owners following the censoring of the Paramount film entitled "The Fatal Card," by the State Board of Censors, who insisted upon the elimination of twenty scenes. The moving picture people not only made a vigorous protest, but also threatened to carry the matter to the Common Pleas Court, so that a judicial ruling might be made concerning the censoring of the film. The protest bore fruit with the result that eighteen of the scenes stricken from the picture were allowed to be restored. In fact, the restoration is complete with the exception of a vision of the electric chair and a scene where a drug is administered.

"The Fatal Card," featured by John Mason and Hazel Dawn, was recently shown at the Stanley theatre, 16th and Market streets, as it had been cut by the board of censors. It aroused a storm of protest from the patrons of the theatre and another picture was immediately substituted to be displayed the following day. However, when word of the restoration of the censored scenes was received by the management, it was decided to again show the film and the manner in which the picture was received by a critical audience proved that the censors exceeded their authority when they attempted to ruin the film.

Many of the leading exhibitors in this locality are completely disgusted with the manner in which films are being subjected to a so-called censoring, by a group of wholly incompetent officials.

BUY CHAMBERSBURG HOUSE.

The Star theatre, Chambersburg, Pa., was recently sold by Calvin B. Little to Messrs. William G. Caldwell and Stewart Boggs, for a consideration said to be $8,000. Mr. Boggs is a son of W. H. Boggs, the well known Western Union telegraph superintendent at Harrisburg, and has been working as a telegraph operator on a Philadelphia newspaper for some time past. Mr. Caldwell hails from Venice, California, and has known Mr. Little for many years.

C. C. HILDINGER BUILDING NEW TRENTON, N. J., THEATER.

Efforts to have the City Commission of Trenton, N. J., rescind favorable action on the application to license a moving picture theatre at North Hermitage and West End avenues recently proved to be of no avail, though counsel for about forty remonstrants owning property in the vicinity of the theatre site appeared before the City Commission to protest against the proposed theatre. Charles C. Hildinger will operate the new house. There remained nothing for the commission to do but to dismiss the demurrer.

The theatre will be erected upon a part of the famous Atterbury tract and will be of brick construction and will have a seating capacity of about 700 persons. Including the cost of the land, it is claimed that the theatre will represent a total expenditure of about $25,000 or $30,000. Building operations have already been started and it is expected to have the theatre ready for occupancy on Thanksgiving Day.

THE ADELPHIA A FILM HOUSE.

Moving pictures have been the program at the Adelphia theatre, Broad and Cherry streets, Philadelphia. This theatre, one of the largest in the city, caters to a high class of patrons and nothing but the best of musical comedies and romance has ever graced its footlights. War pictures, exhibiting the German side of the great conflict, were shown and, judging by the way in which the theatre was packed at almost every hour of the day, there are many German admirers in this vicinity.

EXCEPTIONAL NEW ANIMAL PICTURES.

At the Commercial Museum, Philadelphia, a special exhibition of new educational films of animals, birds, reptiles and insects will be given for the benefit of teachers. Invitations have been sent out by the directors and trustees of the museum to all the public school teachers of Philadelphia. The films are said to include the most successful motion pictures of animals in their native haunts.

UNDER SHERIFF'S HAMMER.

Several of the local moving picture theatres were recently sold at a sheriff sale and it is noted with pleasure that the Apollo, 52 and Styles streets, brought $28,000 above the mortgage price of $40,000. The Armingo, Armingo and Mifflin streets, realized $100 above the mortgage price of $15,000, and the Central, 414 Market street, and the Lincoln theatre, 5th and Christian streets, were listed as no bids.

STARKMAN IN OLD POSITION.

Mr. D. Starkman has resumed his former position as salesman for the Electric Feature Film Company, 1235 Vine street, and has resumed operations in that direction. Mr. Starkman is known as a live wire throughout the trade and should prove to be a great help at the home of the Electric film house.

CASINO BEING ENLARGED.

The Casino, 1320 Point Breeze avenue, has closed for alterations, the theatre undergoing a complete remodeling and enlargement. It is declared that the theatre will have a seating capacity of 500 as compared with a former capacity of 350. Mr. Resnick is manager of this establishment and is certainly to be congratulated upon the manner in which he has built up the patronage of the theatre.

INTENSIVE FISH CULTURE.

Members of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 307, recently took a fishing trip to the wilds of Bustleton. Among those who angled in the deep were George Hamilton, operator at the Forrest; Ray Andrews, Mr. Hirshfield, of the Motion Picture Supply Company; Lew Krouse, B. Scott and Bill Williams. The lone fish which was captured was sent to a neighboring photographer to be enlarged.

ANNOYING THEATER THIEVES.

Local moving picture exhibitors are greatly incensed at the manner in which thieves have recently been operating in their theatres unmolested by the police. It appears to be the hobby of these scoundrels to enter a moving picture theatre and carefully pack up the projecting machine and then make a noiseless exit. Among the theatres who recently suffered at the hands of these midnight marauders are the Bell theatre, 5th and Cambria streets, where 2 6A machines were stolen, and the Mirror theatre, 5th and Reed streets. Some action should be taken in the matter and an offer should be posted rewarding anyone giving information which would lead to the arrest of the culprits.

Virginia Picture Trade

Optimistic Report on Theater Conditions in State by World Film Man—Finds a Tendency Toward an Advance in Prices of Admission—Exhibitors Are Redecorating and Improving—Less Vaudeville and Better Films.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE motion picture business in general in the state of Virginia is improving, according to Alan J. Bachrach, who is covering this territory for the World Film corporation. "I find that the general tendency in this state is toward an advance in the price of admission," he declared to the correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, "and I have found that a great many of the exhibitors are charging 15 and even 20 cents for the regular feature releases. Outside of a few of the larger cities, the 5-cent theater is a thing of the past, and even in these places there are less each month. General conditions are much improved in Virginia as compared to the past summer, and everywhere I have been I have found the exhibitors are redecorating and otherwise improving their houses in anticipation of a good fall and winter season. They are also booking better pictures and a majority of the small houses have absolutely discontinued booking vaudeville and road shows as they seem to find that they can do far better with moving picture exhibitions."

NEW NORFOLK THEATERS.

Bids were last week opened in the office of Neff & Thompson, architects, in Norfolk, for the making of alterations to the store property occupied by Fereby Jones Company at 251 Granby Street, converting it into a motion picture theater. There are already four moving picture theaters on Granby street. Another house is in the course of construction on the site of the old Knight residence by the Arcadian Realty Company, while plans are being prepared for still another house to be erected on the site of the Nash homestead directly across the street.

PATERNALISM AT STRASBURG.

The latest thing in freak municipal ordinances affecting the moving picture industry is that said to have been enacted by the town council of Strasburg, Va., which prohibits children attending motion picture theater exhibitions during the school season except on Friday evenings and Saturdays. As a result of this the motion picture theater in that town has been forced to suspend operations except on Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays.

THEATER COMBINE IN BRISTOL.

L. Morse, who for some time has been manager of the Columbia theater, in Bristol, has secured control of all of the houses in that place and has closed the Fairyland. There still remains four houses in operation in Bristol and this is more than ample to take care of the business to be had there. Mr. Morse has made the Columbia exclusively a feature house, the others using a program service.

NEW HOUSE AT MARION.

Marion, Va., is soon to have a new motion picture theater, named after the town itself, and built and operated by the man who now has the Marion Hotel, J. J. Coyner. The house will have a seating capacity of 275 in the auditorium while the balcony is designed to accommodate about 60 additional people. It will be modern and up-to-date in every particular. Side exits are being provided in addition to the entrance doors at the front. There will be a separate entrance and exit for the balcony. The plans call for an excellent system of ventilation with vents and large exhaust fans properly arranged and a special flue from the operating room. The chairs are to be large and comfortable and the interior is being decorated in a very artistic manner. The front is also to be elaborately decorated and illuminated with electric lights.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS IN GALAX.

The women's auxiliary school league in Galax, through their leader, Mrs. Lida Crabill, has arranged for the use of the theater, operated there by Ben Bolling, for one night each week when a special feature of a suitable instructive and entertaining nature will be shown. The ladies charge an admission fee of 10 cents. This is quite a small town and often the price of the picture is considerably above the box office receipts. On such occasions these public-spirited women contribute whatever funds are necessary to make up the difference. Mr. Bolling is allowing them the use of this house for a very nominal sum, figuring that customers are being made for him and in the belief that in this way be is fostering a desire for motion pictures. He does not feel that he is in any way competing against himself and his receipts on the other evenings are very satisfactory.

HEINS BUYS ROANOKE'S PARAMOUNT THEATER.

E. Heins has secured control of the Paramount theater, in Roanoke. As he already operates the American, he has the two largest picture houses in the city, both of which will exhibit features exclusively. There are two other houses in this city, which run a program service, as well as a legitimate theater. This latter, the Academy, last week showed "The Birth of a Nation" at New York seating prices with no little success.

TOWN OF 300 HAS THEATER.

S. K. Hardwick has the distinction of operating a motion picture theater in one of the smallest places in this state—Glade Spring, a town having a population of about three hundred people. There is no electric lighting in Glade Spring and Mr. Hardwick has had to install a private plant at the theater. He has named this house the "Dixie." Shows are run on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, while twice a month he treats his patrons to good features. While "business is fine" with Mr. Hardwick, he does not contemplate retiring on the proceeds, while on the other hand, he is of no little benefit to the town itself, furnishing, as he does, a very good entertainment for the people.

SMITH-HUGHES BILL ENDORSED.

District of Columbia Chapter of Missionary Union Asks Country to Support Federal Censor Bill.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ENDORSEMENT was given of the Smith-Hughes motion picture censorship bill by the members of the Woman's Interdenominational Missionary Union of the District of Columbia at its first fall meeting held here on Friday last. Mrs. W. F. Crafts, chairman of the committee on legislation, urged that all citizens of the country support this measure which was favorably reported in the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress. All present pledged themselves to work for its passage.

GIRL BORN TO THE SMILEYS.

The entire city was last week gaily decorated with flags and bunting in honor, according to a majority of the citizens of the National Capital, of the veterans. Others, however, insist that the decorations were in honor of little Miss Smiley whose arrival was announced by George W. Smiley, of the Exhibitors' Cooperative Booking Agency, on Thursday. Mr. Smiley is decidedly neutral in the dispute and is receiving the congratulations of his many friends in this territory.

GUY BARRETT VISITS CAPITAL.

Guy Barrett, who was formerly connected with Crandall's theater, in this city, now managing the Belvidere theater, in Lynchburg, Va., visited Washington last week to renew old acquaintances and to arrange for additional service for his house. Mr. Barrett reports that the Belvidere has recently been greatly enlarged and 150 seats added. This gives him a seating capacity of 450. A mirror screen has also been installed, together with a Wurlitzer orchestral organ.

TOM MOORE BUYS LAND.

A deed was placed on record here last week transferring the premises at 418-420 Eighth street, northwest, occupied by a three-story stable, to Fayette T. Moore, better known as Tom Moore, lessee of the Garden and Strand theaters, on Ninth street. The property has a frontage of about fifty-two feet and a depth of about one hundred feet. The consideration is said to have approximated $40,000. The property abuts that of the Garden theater. Mr. Moore states that for the present he plans to hold the property as an investment, but that he may eventually utilize it for theater purposes.

PARKWAY THEATER OFFICERS.

Baltimore Amusement Company's Stockholders Elect.

At a meeting of the preferred stockholders of the Parkway Theater company, which was held last week in the theater at North avenue, near Charles street, Baltimore, the following officers were selected: Henry W. Webb, president; William J. Donnelly, vice-president, and William H. Martin, secretary-treasurer. The following were selected to serve on the board of directors: Douglas H. Gordon, Jacob W. Hook, W. W. Lanahan, George Weems Williams, William J. Donelly, William H. Benesch, George R. Webb, Henry W. Webb, J. Edward Richardson, Louis E. Lambert and W. P. Constable.

Bernard Debkin, Jr., who was recently selected to manage the New Parkway theater, is in New York arranging details for the early opening of that house. The work of decorating the theater is practically completed. It is to be devoted to high-class photoplays and a ten-piece orchestra will be one of its features.

CAPITAL CITY JOTTINGS.

Through the efforts of Dr. Frank Gibson, chairman, and Sidney B. Lust, operator of a local film exchange, and a member of the G. A. R. entertainment committee, it was possible for the old veterans and their friends to witness a complimentary exhibition of "The Battle of Gettysburg." The use of the Cosmos theater was donated for the purpose, while the Mutual Film company brought the production from New York especially for the benefit of the old soldiers. The theater, which is quite a large one, was filled to its capacity at the three shows, the old soldiers braving the rain to see the films.

It has been announced that the Columbia theater will continue to present throughout the coming winter motion pictures on the Paramount program. This theater was recently taken over by Marcus Loew, of New York, and he is said to be contemplating its upbuilding as a model photoplay house. The interior and exterior are to be remodeled and a new Japanese garden stage setting, with electric lighting effects, is to be provided. Admission prices will continue at from ten to twenty-five cents.

T. J. Nicholson, of the United States Court of Claims, opened the Elite theater,, on Fourteenth street, on Monday.

William N. Gains, who for the past several years has operated Peerless Park, has assumed the management of the Eastern theater, at 515 Eighth street, southeast.

William N. Gains, who for the past several years has operated Peerless Park, has assumed the management of the Eastern theater, at 525 Eighth street, Southeast.

Sam Denbow, Jr., of New York, and George Denbow, of Philadelphia, both of whom are connected with the Fox Film corporation, were visitors at the local office of that concern last week.

The Pickwick theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, one of the houses in the Brylawski syndicate, is being converted into store property and will soon be occupied by a local firm of shoe dealers.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., PIANOLAS ARE NOT BARRED.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Asheville, N. C., city commissioners have granted permission to S. A. Lynch to operate self-playing pianos in front of his two motion picture theaters in Asheville. This action followed a trial period of two weeks during which he was allowed to operate the pianos for ten minutes in each hour, no two ten-minute periods to be consecutive, with the promise of a continuance of the privilege providing no complaint was made by the business people within hearing distance of the instruments.

The city commissioners early in August passed an ordinance regulating the use of pianolas and other musical instruments, the ordinance reading as follows: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to play a pianola, auto-piano, or other self-playing instrument at any point nearer than fifty feet from the sidewalk within the legally designated fire limits of the city between the hours of 8 a. m. and 8 p. m."

HENRY FRIEDMAN, WORLD FILM MAN, BACK ON ROAD.

Henry E. Friedman is the man who cannot sit still, who turned down a perfectly good managerial position with the World Film Corporation to take out on the road its features and the Equitable program, and submitting to the tortures of nights spent in sleepers and in places which are hotels in name and by courtesy only.

The strain of confinement within four walls of an office had been too much for Friend Henry and it had begun to show on his ruddy complexion when he hollered for relief and road work.

Henry E. Friedman started out in life in his father's factory in Passaic, or it may have been Hoboken or Fort Lee, any way near some of the big studios. His chance came to him when his friend, Leon Bamberger, was sent from New York to Washington to assume charge of the branch office of the World Film, and he was made an assistant and given North Carolina as his especial territory.

Henry Friedman.

The first day out he made friends with a score of exhibitors, the second day he bought for himself a regulation black felt Tar Heel hat, and shortly thereafter he set about co-operating with his newly-made friends in the organizing of the exhibitors' league of that State. He made good, and accordingly he was ordered to Washington to become manager, vice Leon Bamberger, who had gone to New York to accept a particularly nice position with the V-L-S-E.

The new job looked good to him, and it was, until office atmosphere began to pall on him and he yearned for the road and his friends in the Tar Heel country. The glitter of "manager" soon wore off and he urged the home office to let him off. He's happy again, for they heard his prayer, and he's back on the road sending in all sorts of nice contracts, for Henry E. Friedman has again come into his own.

PATHE CONTEMPLATES OFFICE AT CHARLOTTE, VA.

It is stated that the Pathe Company are seriously contemplating the establishment of a branch office in Charlotte to take care of its customers in this state, Tennessee and other nearby territory, and that a representative of the company spent some time in this city looking over the field. Charlotte has come into prominence as a distributing center for the larger companies and among those now utilizing it as such are the Mutual, Universal and Greater New York film companies. It is believed that the offices of this company in Charlotte will probably be on the third floor of the Piedmont theater building.

SUPERBA AT RALEIGH OPENS.

Raleigh's new motion picture theater, the Superba, built and operated by R. G. Allen, was opened last week. This is a very attractive house and its fittings and furnishings are of the very best. Both the exterior and interior are handsome in appearance and it is apparent that no expense has been spared. The house has a seating capacity of about five hundred. The front is brilliantly lighted by nearly one thousand electric lamps. A large number of these are contained in the immense sign which projects over the sidewalk and which represents a fiery dragon. This sign is very unique in its design. The green and golden wings of the monster are a constant sheen of light and at quick intervals the animal sends out its fiery tongue. A high grade of photoplay productions will be exhibited at this house. It will be equipped with an orchestra.

IMPROVEMENTS IN NEW CASTLE PICTURE THEATER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

WORK is already under way on extensive improvements to the Nixon theater on East Washington street, New Castle, Pa., and this well known theater is going to be one of the finest in the city.

The old balcony and stage will be torn out. A new fireproof booth will be erected. An entirely new lighting and ventilating system will be installed.

Manager Marty Gibbons also says there will be a beautiful new front. The entire house will be newly decorated. Manager Gibbons is also making arrangements to secure some feature films and intends to present the finest programs to be obtained.

MRS. CROSS (BELLE GOLD) RECOVERING FROM APPENDICITIS.

Mrs. Al. W. Cross, wife of the manager of the Hudson Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, was operated on for appendicitis in New York last week and word has been received here from Mr. Cross that the operation was successful and that Mrs. Cross is getting along very nicely.

M. H. BERMAN GOES TO METRO.

M. H. Berman, road man for the Pittsburgh office of the World Film Corporation, has resigned that position and has accepted a position as special representative of the Pittsburgh Metro offices. Mr. Berman is from New Castle, Pa., and is well known in Western Pennsylvania and Ohio. Although he has only been in the film business for the past four months he has made good from the very start.

NEW POLICY AT THE MINERVA.

Manager P. J. Demas, of the Minerva theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, considers himself lucky in that he has secured the Paramount Service for his house, to begin October 4. A six-piece orchestra will be installed and other improvements will be made in keeping with the high standard of pictures to be shown. This house is one of the prettiest on Fifth avenue, and the projection is all that could be desired. The capacity is 650, but plans are already made whereby it will be increased to 1,000 when the lease expires on the rear of an adjoining storeroom.

CHANGES AT THE GREATER NEW YORK OFFICES.

The Greater New York Film Rental Company has already outgrown its first location, moved down stairs to 121 Fourth avenue, first floor, next to George Kleine's office. The new office affords over twice as much floor space, in addition to the large basement. Ellis Cohen, who has been in this city for the past six weeks, opening the Smoky City offices, left last week to resume his duties in the home office in New York. J. J. Spandau will continue as manager of the Pittsburgh office.

SMOKY CITY NOTES.

Exchange Notes—New Theaters—Features.

The Hudson Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh. Al. W. Cross, manager, will handle "York State Folks."

Otto Kurtz, booker at the General Film Company's office, at Pittsburgh for the past eight years, is now with the Mutual Film in a similar capacity.

Joseph S. Skirboll, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Metro picture service, at 212 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, was away last week on a three days' business trip.

Mayer Silverman, manager of the Liberty Film Renting Company at 105 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, announces that there is a lively demand for the series of seven Griffith subjects which he recently secured. Among the theaters which have already contracted for the entire list are the following: Belmar, Homewood, Bellevue, Bellevue; Kathlyn, Sharpsburg; Schenley, Oakland; Victoria, Centre avenue, Pittsburgh; Vitagraph, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh.

W. P. Allen, a well-known Pittsburgh film man, who has been with Pathe, at Minneapolis, Minn., for the past year, is back in the Smoky City again, and will likely become identified with one of the local film companies soon.

C. B. Pascoe, of the Opera House, in Somerset, Pa., recently made 2,000 feet of film of the Farmers Day celebration, and also a one-reel film of the soldiers' reunion at Berlin, Pa. He first ran the pictures in his own house, but is now renting them to other theaters in Somerset. The developing and printing, which was done by the Talbott Film Company, of Elkins, W. Va., is said to be exceptionally good.

D. C. France, manager of the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, at 125 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, returned last week from an auto tour which covered nearly 1,100 miles. He left Saturday, September 11, and visited Columbus, Cincinnati, Rushville and Indiana. On his return he came by the way of Toledo and Cleveland, stopping at West Middletown, Pa., the home of his parents. Mrs. France accompanied her husband on the trip.

Sydney Lenchner, of the Pittsburgh office of the Metro Pictures Service, at 212 Fourth avenue, recently returned from his vacation and has left on a two weeks' trip to West Virginia.

The Liberty Film Renting Company, at 105 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, recently sold two Power's 6A machines to Friedberg & Adler for their new theater in Cleveland.

"Nation" Film Barred

Ohio State Board of Censors Rejects "The Birth of a Nation"—Reasons for Putting the Ban on Film as Given Out by Censors—No Use to Appeal from the Censors to the State Industrial Board.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," the biggest and most costly picture production ever presented, which was booked to show at the Opera House, Cleveland, for fifteen consecutive weeks next spring and summer at two-dollar prices, wont be displayed in this state. The board of censors at Columbus rejected the film—to the disgust of Ohio's populace, press and picture fandom.

The censors assigned two reasons for rejection—it might arouse prejudice against the colored race and it might arouse prejudice between North and South. The board claims to have received numerous letters from colored people protesting against the showing in this state. However, the entire world—except Ohio—retains the uncensored right to view this immense picture creation. The state industrial board, which has jurisdiction over the censors, has already refused to rescind bans placed on films by the state censors so an appeal from the latter's decision is considered useless.

VIRGIL TERRELL ON CENSORS.

State Representative Virgil J. Terrell, member of the Ohio legislature, has announced that he stands with the foes of moving picture censorship and said he thought the state board should be abolished. In the general assembly Mr. Terrell opposed the Besaw bill and recently declared censorship had no more right to exist than censorship of the press or pulpit. He said it was his opinion that courts should determine when exhibitors are violating the laws and that an appointed authority should not have the right to fix regulations for film houses.

BECHT LEASES NEW CLEVELAND THEATER.

Louis Becht, owner of the Mall theater in downtown Cleveland, has leased the new picture house under construction as a part of the new Windermere block in East Cleveland. He negotiated the lease through the office of the W. W. Daviess Co., real estate brokers, from Jacob Babin, owner of the new building. It is understood Mr. Becht will pay a lease rental of approximately $6,000 a year and his term is for ten years. The Windermere theater will seat 1,200. It will be ready for opening about November 1.

THE BALL PARK THEATER.

Aaron Silberberg, owner of the Ball Park theater, under construction in Lexington avenue, Cleveland, opposite League Park, announces that playhouse is rapidly nearing completion. It was first proposed to call the new house the Indian theater, after the Cleveland American League team, but the owners decided to change. The building will be faced with granite, the first picture theater of this type in Cleveland.

LYCEUM OPENS WITH "TRILBY."

Having changed the name of the Grand, East 9th street and Bolivar road, Cleveland, to Lyceum, and redecorated the house throughout the Metropolitan Amusement company observed formal opening October 2. The Lyceum is under the management of George Hausheer and Max Faetkenheur, with the house in the direct charge of George Ryder. Mr. Ryder has, since establishment of the Reel theater, been in charge of that house and built its business up to envious proportions. His assistant, John E. Sliney, will remain manager of the Reel, assisted by John Mullholland, formerly connected with the Empire. The Lyceum's first offering was "Trilby."

FIRST RUNS AT CAMERAPHONE.

"First run pictures" is the slogan of the Cameraphone, one of Cleveland's popular downtown theaters. "I firmly believe first run houses downtown stimulate business for those in outlying districts," said Manager McGowan recently. "They create interest in the pictures generally and this cannot help being beneficial to the neighborhood theaters."

TWO VAUDEVILLE HOUSES TO SHOW ONLY FILMS.

Cleveland now has but eight theaters of the so-called "legitimate" character. Two vaudeville houses inaugurate a policy of pictures only, this week, namely, the Liberty, at Superior and East 105th streets, and the Gordon Square, on Detroit avenue. Both are owned and operated by the same management and have been splitting a bill of vaudeville and pictures.

F. O. NEILSON OPENS OHIO BRANCH.

F. O. Neilson has established branch offices in Ohio at 712 Columbia building, Cleveland, with A. J. Mentz, road man, in charge. State rights for "Guarding Old Glory" were sold to Paul Henry, Grand theater, Crestline, O.

INTERESTING OHIO NOTES.

Exhibitors and Exchange Men—Changes —Reopenings.

Mose Koppelman has resigned from the V-L-S-E branch in Cleveland to take charge of the Fox branch poster department and Miss Isabelle Lyons, also connected with the V-L-S-E, is in the Fox inspection department. Louie Petiker has left the World branch to be assistant shipper for the Fox exchange and Harry Brown, formerly of the Standard exchange, is now booker.

Fred P. Dwyer, salesman for the Columbus Theater Equipment Co., is having an unusually successful season on the road. Recently he sold new Motiographs to the Midget theater, Dayton and the Gem theater, Troy, O.

Sam Bullock's hearing on charges of violating the censorship laws has been set for October 12. His counsel, Ernest Schwartz and B. J. Sawyer, will demand a jury trial. They contend the right of free speech is the issue. Chairman Williams of the censor board had Bullock arrested for showing in his two theaters a film of Fred J. Herrington making an address to a picnic crowd, in which Herrington declared: "Censorship was conceived in iniquity, born in sin and is dying in disgrace."

Walter W. Evans, Jr., road representative of the Simplex projector, is in Ohio calling upon the supply houses. He states that from his observations all over the country the past few months, exhibitors will have a banner season this fall and winter.

Manager Morris has arranged complete booking of features for the Home theater, Cleveland.

Lemotto Smith is the picture magnate of Alliance, O. He has the New Columbia and the Ideal, the former with feature and the latter regular program service.

H. E. Gresham is the new owner of the Pearl theater, Cleveland, having bought this house from Otto Tschumper.

The Schroeder Art Flower Manufacturing Co., Cleveland, has just decorated the Alhambra and Strand, Detroit, with winter floral effects.

New seats will be installed in the Strand theater, Portsmouth, in consequence of an arrangement made by Manager Welch.

The Sebring Opera House has been reopened as the Strand under the management of the Smith Amusement Company.

The Strand, Erie building, Cleveland, will be opened about October 15 by Friedberg & Adler, lessees and owners of the Alhambra, Pittsburgh.

J. H. Duncan, formerly proprietor of the Rex theater, Oberlin, O., is the new manager of the V-L-S-E branch in Detroit. Several months ago he joined the sales force of the Cleveland branch and now is promoted.

J. M. Fritz, manager of the Lyric, Urbana, O., is making arrangements for the remodeling and enlarging of this theater.

Harry Stemm recently was appointed manager of the Quimby theater, Zanesville.

A. Horwitz, Toledo exhibitor, now has three theaters, the Orpheum, Crown and Strand Arcade. In the latter he presents features.

Barberton, O., now has four pictures houses, the Rondo, Pastime, Gem and Family. The Gem, owned by William Ettor and managed by W. L. Hamilton is the newest house. Harry Levine runs the Pastime, while the Rondo is operated by J. L. Nice.

W. R. Ross is doing the road work for the Amer-Ross Co., Columbus feature exchange. He is very successfully covering the southern part of the state.

C. J. Donlin, of Dayton, recently purchased a Power's machine to equip his Olympic theater.

Claude Marcus, of Cleveland, has become associated with the Kleine-Edison forces, on the road out of Pittsburgh.

The Jewel theater, Cleveland, has added two hundred seats to the rear of the house.

The Screen Club, of Cleveland, an organization of amateur actors will produce a film play for the benefit of a working girl's home.

PASTIME, JERSEY CITY, SEES CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG was greeted by a full house of her admirers at the Pastime Theatre, Fourth Street Transfer Station, Union Hill, on Saturday evening, when she appeared in person on the stage at the close of "Hearts in Exile," and smilingly acknowledged the enthusiastic greetings. Director Joseph Young, her husband, introduced her with a few apt words as to the cordial feeling existing between the moving picture actress and her host of friends.

He created a friendly feeling, which Mrs. Young's appearance and her naive little speech about the inside story of the making of "Hearts in Exile" served to deepen.

The famous star was charming, and no one was disappointed in the reality, after having fallen in love with the pictured face.

The residents of the Park section were out in force, and among the semi-professionals noted was Blanche Sweet's sister.

A MUTUAL LIVE WIRE.

Arthur F. Beck, the live wire manager of the Mutual's New York 23rd street branch, and of the sub-branches at Newark and Bridgeport, said this week when he visited the Newark office that after two months of systematizing and hard effort he had placed the business of the exchanges in clock-work order. Mr. Beck, as it is known among veteran picture men, is one of the most efficient organizers of the business. It was due to the fact that the string of western offices which he handled previously rendered such systematic service that he was asked to go to the Mutual. The recent expose of film "pirates" at the Newark exchange was the result of Mr. Beck's conscientious and thorough handling of business.

"We feel greatly pleased with the results which our efforts to render quick and efficient service are bringing in Newark and the other branches," said Mr. Beck. "Even our old friend, Sam Trigger, who knows the film business backwards and forwards, admits that the New York Mutual is showing the exhibitors some pleasantly new methods of dealings between the exchange and its patrons, and is expressing great confidence in the future of the Mutual. New York Mutual business has greatly increased the past two months."

NEW YORK NEWS LETTER.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo (229 Oxford avenue) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT is said that Charles L. Robinson and M. J. Hawkins may build a new theatre in Albany, N. Y.

Moving pictures of Governor Whitman viewing an Industrial Show parade in Buffalo were recently shown by Manager Franklin of the Lyric theater in that city.

A New York cabaret review was an added attraction recently at the Olympic theater, Buffalo.

Messrs. DeGraff, Cohen and Comerford are the lessees of the new Regent theater which will open shortly in Geneva, N. Y. They have appointed L. G. Brady as local manager. He formerly managed the Hippodrome theater in Scranton.

Moving pictures of German battlefields were featured by Manager Oishei of the Teck theater, Buffalo, last week.

Peter Karl has bought the interest of his partners in the Colonia theater, Utica, N. Y.

Moving pictures of Lightship 82 were recently taken in Buffalo, N. Y. This boat sank some time ago and its crew was lost. The lightship was afterwards raised.

An effort is being made to attract 100,000 summer residents to the Chautauqua lake section next summer. Moving pictures are strongly featured at this resort.

Manager Hansom has opened a new theater in Whitesboro, N. Y., the first moving picture house in that village. The theater seats 400.

A Troy report says that Hart's new moving picture theater was recently opened in Bennington, Vt.

John W. Powers has bought the Gem theater in Little Falls, N. Y.

The village board of Malone, N. Y., has refused to grant a moving picture license for more than six days a week.

Fire recently damaged the Bert opera house block in Medina, N. Y.

It is said that the Valatie Theater Company will build a moving picture theater in Valatie, N. Y.

John Sevotien of New York City has reopened the Lowerre moving picture theater in Yonkers, N. Y.

John F. McDonald has decided to close the International theater at Niagara Falls. At one time the International was one of the best paying propositions in that end of the state, but the advent of moving pictures and the popularity of vaudeville spelled its doom. After repeated attempts the management has been unable to popularize the house with any of the present day forms of amusement.

Ohio and Its Censors

In Cincinnati a Meeting of Local Picture Men Considers Censor Board's Action Regarding "The Birth of a Nation"—Second Meeting to Be Called Soon to Formulate, If the Occasion Warrents It, a Vigorous Protest.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A MEETING of local exhibitors was held last week for the purpose of considering the action of the State Board of Censors in refusing to authorize the exhibition in Ohio of "The Birth of a Nation." A number of Cincinnati film men also attended the meeting, the matter being obviously of even more importance to them than to the exhibitors. Carl H. Pierce, a special representative of Bosworth, Inc., addressed the gathering on behalf of the manufacturers, pointing out that if films of high value, costing producers large sums to get out, were continually rejected, it might eventually become necessary to pass up Ohio entirely. The loss of business, he stated, would be less important than the damage which is now done by the rejections, which necessarily affect the films rejected elsewhere.

A resolution was offered at the meeting by W. K. Howard, providing for a formal protest to the governor and the state board, but was not adopted, as several of the exhibitors preferred to wait until they could see the rejected film at a private exhibition before expressing themselves. Such an exhibition will be held in Cincinnati shortly, for the benefit of film men and exhibitors, and will doubtless be largely attended, as there has been much interest in "The Birth of a Nation," and it has not yet been seen in the city, even in an exchange office.

THEATER PROPERTY CONTROVERSY SETTLED.

The controversy over the control, in the future, of the property on which the Sun theater, now known as the Avenue theater, stands, at 122 West Fifth street, has been amicably settled by the parties at interest, including Huss Brothers on the one side and I. Frankel and Miss Droesch on the other. By the various leases acquired by the parties, reported some time ago, there appeared to be considerable doubt as to the continued existence not only of the Avenue, but of the Colonial, which adjoins it, under their present management. Under the settlement referred to, however, Mr. Frankel and Miss Droesch retire from all connection with the Avenue, as Huss Bros. prefer the house to be known, and the latter firm becomes the sole owner of the house and the lease.

In order to handle the property a new company, to be known as the American Theater company, has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $10,000, with Frank W. and John J. Huss, Edwin P. Bernardi, Thomas A. Reilly and J. Carlin as the incorporators. This company will control the Avenue, as well as any houses built or acquired in the future by the Huss Bros.

SHRADER REMODELING V-L-S-E OFFICE.

R. S. Shrader, manager of the Cincinnati office of the V-L-S-E, is busily engaged in supervising the work of remodeling the building at 129 West Seventh street, where the quarters of the "Big Four" will be located. Both floors of the building, which measures about 50 by 70 feet, will be occupied by the exchange, with its office, poster-room, and other departments, including an unusually large and complete projection-room for the convenience of exhibitors and others. Seating arrangements for about 200 persons will be provided.

P. B. Elliott, former manager of the World office in Boston, is traveling out of Cincinnati for the V-L-S-E, covering Southern Ohio, Southern Indiana, most of West Virginia and all of Kentucky, and he reports good business for the six-reel S. & A. production of "The Man Trail," and the Lubin comedy, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," featuring Marie Dressler, which bids fair to be another "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Mr. Shrader is devoting most of his time to work in and around Cincinnati for the present.

KLEINE EXCHANGE TO OPEN.

And still they come!—new film offices for Cincinnati. The latest addition to the long list, now about the largest in the country outside of the big producing centers, is the George Kleine, which has made arrangements for quarters for an exchange at 138 and 140 West Seventh street, at a rental of $1,200 a year. It was suggested by some at the time the V-L-S-E office was located at No. 129, on this block, that it was out of the beaten track for a film office, but the selection of quarters in the same block by another film concern indicates that business is likely to flow in that direction.

CINCINNATI ITEMS.

The Majestic Photoplay company, of Lima, O., has been incorporated by F. J. Zanone, Harry Michael, I. M. Zanone, Theodore Michael and Samuel Michael, with a capital stock of $10,000. The company will operate an up-to-date house, for which arrangements are now being made.

An interesting feature in a recent issue of the Pathe Weekly, which had its first run at B. F. Keith's theater in Cincinnati, included the annual apple show at Ironton, O., with full details of the work of picking, packing and handling the apples. Ironton exhibitors will run the film, and expect to draw large houses with it, as its local pull is naturally heavy.

Trial of Sabbath Cases

The Seven Chattanooga Picture Exhibitors Who Are Testing Sunday Blue Laws as Applied to Film Shows Appeared Before Judge Reynolds on September 24—Case Will Be Continued on October 2.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHEN the "nuisance cases" against the seven Chattanooga moving picture exhibitors were called for trial before Judge McReynolds on Friday morning, September 25, they were continued until October 2 on motion of the defense and were argued on that date without a jury, the only question involved being that of interpretation of the law involved. The exhibitors admit the facts as to operating on Sundays, but take the attitude that the law does not apply in their cases.

Senator W. H. Cummings represents all but two of the defendant theater operators, all of whom, it is expected, will rest their cases on the one argument in chief. Senator Cummings bases his contention that motion picture theaters may open for Sunday shows on several supreme court decisions covering cases of a similar nature and upon the Sunday closing law as defined by the Tennessee code. This prescribes that offenders carrying on their regular avocations on Sundays are answerable to the justices and, if guilty, are subject to fines of $3 and costs.

Senator Cummings insists that picture houses should not be ranked as nuisances in themselves and that operating on Sunday is not an indictable offense. It is generally expected that however the Circuit Court rules in the matter, the cases will be carried on to the State Supreme Court for final adjudication. The question is an exceedingly important one in Tennessee and the proceedings are being followed with close interest.

QUEEN AT KNOXVILLE TO GIVE SHORTER RUNS.

The Queen theater at Knoxville has inaugurated a new policy which provides for a four-time change of program each week instead of three changes which had been the rule. During the week the change was effective the program included such films as Mary Pickford in Esmeralda, the story written by Frances Hodgson Burnett, a Knoxville author; Gaby Deslys in "Her Triumph," "The Galloper," episodes of "Neal of the Navy," and the Lasky masterpiece, "Out of Darkness." The fourth change will be obtained by return showing of some popular subject on Wednesdays, while on Thursdays a Pathe film of the "Gold Rooster" brand will be provided. For the first two and the last two days of the week the program will be handled as formerly.

AT THE BIJOU AND THE GRAND.

Knoxville's Bijou theater is drawing well with well rounded programs, three changes weekly. A typical week's program included "The Song of Hate," "The House of a Thousand Candles," and "Her Great Match" as the features for each of the two day bills, with other fillers which made the bill interesting all the way through.

The Grand theater at Knoxville is doing well with Keith vaudeville, two changes weekly, the pictures shown at the conclusion of each program being changed daily.

CERTAINLY NOVEL PUBLICITY.

The four Quality Way motion picture theaters in Chattanooga are co-operating with the Chattanooga News, in combination with a local drug store soda department, and the city railway company in an interesting and novel bit of publicity. This consists in publication each day of the week of the names of a series of boys and girls, with their addresses and ages, on the anniversaries of their births. The children must be of school age and in attendance on the schools and, when each is named, that boy or girl goes to the office of the News and asks for his or her "Birthday Party Ticket." These tickets call for free admission to each of the four Quality Way theaters, the Crescent, the Colonial, the Alhambra and the Theato, besides for a refreshing drink or order of ice cream at the drug store named and a coupon good for car fare home. The publicity "stunt" has been running for some time and there are from twelve to twenty names of children published each day, the total number named to date running to about 6,000. The motion picture chain considers the plan a good advertisement and a maker of friends among the youngsters. The same is true of the drug store management, while many of the merchants of the city pad out their "kiddo" mailing lists from day to day by the names which appear.

KNOXVILLE GIRL IN "THE SPENDER."

The Queen theater management in Knoxville has announced with much fanfare of trumpets, etc., that the five-part Pathe "Gold Rooster" masterpiece, "The Spender," will be shown on October 13 and 14. In this film Miss Alma Martin, who is a Knoxville girl, is starring. At the same time, it is given out, the company has made arrangements to have Miss Martin present and to appear before Queen patrons on each day during which the picture will be shown. At these times she is booked to address the houses on the pleasure and disappointments of a picture actress.

ALCAZAR RAISES PRICE.

Manager Dowler Thinks High Cost of the Best Features Demands Increase.

Frank Dowler, manager of the Alcazar motion picture theater at Chattanooga, Tenn., has announced an increase in the general admission price of from 10 to 20 cents, effective later, and in support of the change gave out the following statement, which was given general publicity:

"In order to meet the demand for the higher and better order of pictures, producers are sparing no expense. Wonderful films are being made and at an expense that is startling to the uninitiated. . . . Add this to the cost of the very highest dramatic talent, stage stars of worldwide celebrity and some idea may be obtained of the high cost of the highest class feature pictures. We determined at the outset to give Alcazar patrons the very best product of the motion picture creators and have booked alreay the big features of more recent production. . . . Concerns cannot exist and accompany their existence with work of merit unless there is a reasonable profit. That, too, is what the Alcazar seeks, and to meet it we must merit it. To meet the increased expense incident to the big features explains the admission price we will charge. We are confident our service will justify our action with the public."

At the same time Mr. Dowler announced that the management of the Alcazar had contracted for some of the best of the late productions.

The announcement of the change in rates was followed by a statement that it was not to be effective immediately, and that it was to take effect at a later date, which would be named in due time. The "Peer Gynt" film and the Lasky film, "The Explorer," were among the pictures run during the last few days of September and the first of October under the ten-cent admission rate.

ST. LOUIS LICENSE FEES.

Proposed Schedule Worries Legitimate Theater Managers.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A BILL introduced in the Board of Aldermen, by Alderman Konetsky recently, proposing to increase license fees for theaters, raised much opposition from managers of straight dramatic houses, claiming that moving picture houses, with prices at ten and twenty cents fill up their seats every two hours during the afternoon and evening, and that the total daily receipts are greater than those of the higher priced theaters, which fill their seats but once a day.

The bill, as introduced, provides that the license of moving picture shows and others with an admission of ten and twenty cents, shall remain at $150 a year, the present license on all classes of theaters. The bill proposes to charge $600 a year ilcense for theaters charging an admission of $1.50 or more; $350 a year for theaters charging from 50 cents to $1.50, and $200 for those charging from 30 to 50 cents. The license fee in the Konetzky bill is placed on an admission basis, while in other forms of amusement the basis is the seating capacity. When informed of these inequalities, Alderman Konetsky said, "These things will have to be equalized."

CONGRESS THEATER OPENS.

The Congress theater, 4023 Olive street, formerly the Marguerite Clark, opened Saturday, October 2, as an all picture house running multiple reel features, at ten and twenty cents admission. The bill will be changed twice a week, and ten cent matinees will be given on Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday. The Congress has been altered and improvements added, including many additional electric lights, a new stage arrangement, an excellent orchestra, and a footman to look after automobiles. A two-minute intermission between films is allowed in order that patrons who wish may leave the house without disturbing the view of those remaining. Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, Greek Consul in St. Louis, is president of the Congress Amusement company.

KOPLAR BUYS MIKADO THEATER.

Harry Koplar, who reopened the King's theater, at Kings Highway and Delmar Boulevard, on September 18, has acquired controlling interest in the Mikado theater, in the 5900 block on Easton avenue. The Mikado has been under the operation of Scherrer Brothers, who own and operate another theater on Franklin avenue.

VAUDEVILLE ELEPHANT HURTS STAGE HAND.

A performing elephant at the Grand opera house, on Market street, near Broadway, seriously injured Charles Leroi, stage manager at the Grand, on Sunday, September 26, as he was passing in the alley back of the theater, where "Mary Ellen," the elephant, was waiting for her turn. Mary Ellen barred the way with her trunk, and when Leroi tried to pass she crushed him against the wall and gored him with her tusks. Leroi had to be taken to a hospital, and although his injuries are serious, it is said he will recover. Though a vaudeville house, the Grand shows moving pictures at every performance.

Moral: Exhibit your elephants on the screen.

AT THE PATHE EXCHANGE.

C. S. Edwards, manager of the Pathe Exchange, at 3210 Locust street, says that the week ending September 25 is the best one from a business standpoint that the office has ever had, and that the outlook for the coming season is exceedingly bright. City Salesman Gebhardt is a very enthusiastic "Neal of the Navy" booster, and is proudly showing a record, down in black and white, of fifty theaters in St. Louis that are running the serial. J. J. O'Neil, who has just come in from a trip that takes in such territory as Springfield, Ill.; Keokuk, Iowa, and Jefferson City, Columbia, Kirksville and Mexico, all Missouri towns, says things are looking up all over the route. He says the demand for features is growing all the time, and the appetite for serials is as strong as ever.

IT OUGHT TO BE TRIANGLE BUILDING.

Floyd Lewis, the Triangle Corporation manager, is getting his offices in the new Plaza Building fitted up in fine shape. The big steel safe is about completed, and the other furnishings almost all installed. The Triangle headquarters are going to be the most handsomely appointed suite of offices in the city, and will also be triangular from the shape of the building, formed by the Lindell cut-off, where Lindell Boulevard joins Olive street. Mr. Lewis says the name of the building should be changed to Triangle, and the suggestion is a good one. The owners could do no better than to adopt it; Triangle building would be far more distinctive than the name Plaza, which has been chosen.

J. W. COTTER TAKES BIG PROGRAM.

J. W. Cotter, manager of the Kriterion Exchange at 3217 Locust street, has contracted for the entire output of the Kriterion Corporation, amounting to 21 reels a week, for both the St. Louis and the Kansas City exchanges, and will manage the two places with the assistance of Roy Dickson.

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS FIGURE IN LOCAL COURTS.

Several actions at law are being threshed out in St. Louis courts this week. The Pageant Music Producers Company has sued Local No. 2 of the Musicians Mutual Benefit Association, and asks for an injunction restraining the union from interfering with the business of the Pageant theater, at 5861 Delmar Boulevard. This theater uses a mechanical orchestra, and employs union labor to run it, but on the opening day pickets from the musicians' union declared the theater unfair and distributed bills to that effect in front of the building.

Judge Kinsey denied the injunction asked for by the Epoch Producing Company and Thomas Dixon, Jr., of New York, to restrain the Cherokee theater and O. T. Crawford from producing a dramatic play entitled "The Birth of Our Nation." It is claimed the drama is an infringement on "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing a long engagement at the Olympic theater. Judge Kinsey said there is no similarity in the production warranting an injunction, and dissolved the restraining order issued on September 20. The attorney for "The Birth of a Nation" company raised the point that similarity of the names entitled his clients to an injunction, and the judge told the attorney to file an amended petition.

The Grand Duchess theater, formerly the Hippodrome, at 6th and Walnut streets, filed suit in the Circuit Court on September 22, to restrain members of Moving Picture Operators, Local No. 143, the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association, Local No. 2, and the St. Louis Brotherhood of Electrical Workers' Union, No. 1, from picketing the theater. Until two weeks ago the Duchess was picketed by two sets of pickets, one distributing bills saying the place was fair, another declaring the place unfair. A temporary injunction was granted restraining one set of pickets, and now an injunction is asked to restrain the other set.

Lexington Strand Ready

New Picture Theater Built by the Phoenix Amusement Company Is to Open—Seats 1,050 on Main Floor, 250 in Boxes and 150 in the Gallery—Men at Head of Company—Equipment and Cost.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., has announced that it will open, about October 12, the new Strand theater, which will take rank as first or among the first in that section. A seating capacity of 1,050 has been provided on the main floor and there is a balcony of 50 boxes, each seating from four to five persons, and a gallery with accommodations for 150. This theater has been completed at a cost of $60,000 and is equipped with a $5,500 organ, a forced ventilation system of the most approved type.

It is located on Main street, immediately opposite the Phoenix hotel, which is the leading hostelry of the city, and will show V-L-S-E, Pathe, Kleine and Edison features, with admission prices fixed at 10 and 20 cents. M. Switow, of Louisville, is president; J. H. Button, vice-president, and Louis Zahler, secretary-treasurer and general manager.

CONFUSION IN NAMES.

An interesting angle on similarity of names of various features is presented by the trouble which Lee S. Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson theater, has taken to emphasize the distinction between "The Regeneration" and the former film shown here, "The Island of Regeneration." There is such a multiplicity of motion picture titles that even the names of the big features are liable to confusion in the public mind. The Mary Anderson management was determined to have no such confusion when the Fox picturization of "My Mamie Rose" appeared. All the publicity made note of the fact that the films were different and this a new one. Special display advertisements were run stating that "'The Regeneration' is not 'The Island of Regeneration' or any other picture seen here before, but is the most wonderful photoplay of the season, with an all-star Fox cast and 1,000 real people of New York's famous Bowery," etc.

THE GAYETY OPENS.

With programs divided between vaudeville and three-reel feature films, the Gayety theater of Louisville was opened for the season on Sunday, Sept. 25. Bert E. Howard, who comes from Washington, is the resident manager and an experienced theater man. He will represent the lessees, the Sullivan & Considine vaudeville circuit, and is now negotiating with film concerns for picture services. Admission prices for the matinees are 10 cents for the whole house, with 25 cents the Sunday scale. The night prices are 25 cents for orchestra seats, 15 cents balcony and 10 cents gallery.

LOUISVILLE VISITORS.

Representatives of service companies recently callers in Louisville included Mr. Lewis of the Universal, and Mr. Paynter of the Criterion Film Company, Cleveland, with the four-reel film "The Mix Up." Frederick R. Martin, representing the Fox Film Corporation, was a caller at the Mary Anderson theater.

SAYS PADUCAH WILL HAVE A PICTURE STUDIO.

Paducah, Ky., is to have a branch of the Florida Photoplay Company, with studio and producing plant, according to an announcement made there by G. H. Hamilton, president of that company, who has been in Paducah inspecting the local situation. A producing company of twelve players will be established there, it is given out, and a training school will be maintained, graduates to be sent to the Tampa or Jacksonville branches of the company. It is said that the river front, Wallace Park and other suitable sites will be utilized in production of pictures.

V-L-S-E FILMS FROM CINCINNATI NOW.

The V-L-S-E Film Corporation, which formerly served Louisville from Atlanta, beginning October 3, began to supply Louisville from the Cincinnati office. R. S. Schrader, formerly of the Universal, is in charge of the Cincinnati office, located at 136 West Seventh street.

CHILDREN'S SATURDAY SHOWS TO BEGIN AGAIN.

The members of the local Board of Censors for children's pictures will have a sitting in the next few days at the Mary Anderson theater, where they will view a series of films which have been ordered for the purpose in view. Lee S. Goldberg, manager of the theater, has arranged for the showing and the plan at present is to conduct these Saturday morning children's sessions at the Mary Anderson theater in the same manner as last year. This plan provides for inspection of the films by the board on Fridays and showing of the films on the following morning when they have been approved by the volunteer censors.

THE LEVYS VISIT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Col. and Mrs. Fred Levy, while on their trip to the Pacific Coast, where they spent some two months, made a stay of some time at Universal City. Mrs. Levy is the originator of the children's program idea and Col. Levy is interested in pictures in a business way as well and anything that relates to pictures gets their immediate attention.

Louisville Exhibitors—Picture Hits—New Houses.

C. N. Cook assumed the management of the Novelty theater in Louisville on September 26.

When Marguerite Clark appeared at the Majestic in the feature, "Helene of the North," the management was unable to handle the large crowds which desired admittance. By special request the film was secured again and was shown on Wednesday, September 29.

"The Kreutzer Sonata" was the first picture showed at the Green Dragon theater in Shelbyville after that house was acquired by Fred. Sheldon, of Louisville.

It is given out in Louisville that the Pathe service will be represented by an office soon to be opened in the Novelty Theater building.

Henry Reiss of the Ideal theater, and Fred Dolle left early in October to spend a week or so in New York.

The East Broadway theater, Louisville, has been showing to large houses with a series of good features. A recent film was "The Clemencau Case," with Theda Bara in the leading role, and another that followed was the four-reel Paramount feature presenting Nat Goodwin's "When We Were Twenty-One."

The Crystal theater, Market street, near Third, has begun the serial, "Neal of the Navy," of which there are fifteen installments. On the morning of the showing of the first episode the theater used a small coupon in connection with its newspaper advertisement, the coupon being good for one admission to the first episode.

Advice to Small Houses

What Managers of Smaller Theaters Should Do for Business—M. H. Hoffman Talks to Exhibitors Through Representative of MOVING PICTURE WORLD—Some Kindly and Disinterested Hints of Interest to All Picture Men.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT was honored this week with a visit from Mr. M. H. Hoffman, general manager of exchanges, of the Universal Film Company. Mr. Hoffman came here after spending a few days in Chicago, in which city he completed arrangements for a four-story building where four complete programs will be handled, with a separate manager for each. It is something previously unheard of in the moving picture industry. The World correspondent caught Mr. Hoffman at the Detroit exchange, 159 West Jefferson avenue, a few hours after his arrival. "I am always glad to meet the trade paper representatives," remarked Mr. Hoffman. "Your paper is doing a splendid work for exhibitors, exchanges and producers, and is helping very materially to spread the gospel of efficiency and development.

"There has been a great change in this industry. Take the class of exhibitors, for instance. There has been a remarkable improvement in the class of men who own theaters; to-day they are men of business experience. Exhibitors to-day are realizing that they have to work, study, plan, devise and be alert if they want to be successful.

"What do I think of the opportunities of the small exhibitor? I believe he has just as much of a chance to make money as the big fellow, in comparison to his investment.

"The moving picture business is for the masses. The success of the industry is based on cheapness in price. And as long as the price is kept at five and ten cents (or possibly a little higher with the large houses that can play the big features) just so long will the motion picture theater thrive. The average family of four people can be entertained every night at the picture houses, and at the end of the week the cost will not exceed $2, providing he patronizes the five and ten cent theaters.

"Small houses make a mistake in trying to compete with larger houses in the neighborhood. The big house has its field and the small house has its field. The small outskirt dry goods store has its field and so do the large dry goods stores in the downtown district. It is out of the question for the small house to make any money by playing big features every night, because even if they do pack his theater, he pays it all out for the features. The big houses with the capacity, however, can put on big features and make money. The small exhibitor should stick to a regular program, where he can get a feature once or twice a week, and a good assortment of two and three reelers on other days. By keeping his clothes clean and attractive, paying attention to projection and getting personally acquainted with his trade, the owner of the small house can work up a steady list of customers who will stand by him no matter how many other houses there may be in his section."

COST OF ELECTRICITY UP.

The Edison Illuminating Company, which supplies all of the current for lighting and power in Detroit, has notified the outskirt exhibitors that hereafter they must pay an advanced rate for their service, which will mean an increase of from $2 to $3 per week. As the Edison is the only concern operating here, there being no competition, the exhibitor is forced to pay the new rate. A committee from the Detroit Exhibitors' League called this week upon some of the company officials, but without avail. They were told emphatically that the advanced rate would hold.

THE PARAMOUNT BUILDING.

The building at 278 East Jefferson avenue has been called the Paramount building, it being the Detroit home of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. Every day the building shows improvement in the way the various departments are laid out, and when completed it will be one of the finest exchanges—one of the most up to date—in the country. D. Leo Dennison is manager. He is making hosts of friends in Detroit and throughout Michigan. He says the latch string is always out for Michigan exhibitors, and he extends them all a hearty welcome.

COUNTESS THEATER SOLD.

Maurice Caplan and Ben Reuben have purchased the Countess theater. Both are from Cleveland.

G. A. MARGETTS BECOMES FATHER.

Congratulations are in order. According to a wire received this week, G. A. Margetts, formerly assistant to George W. Weeks, manager of the Detroit office of the Universal Film exchange, and now of St. Johns, New Brunswick, became the proud father of an eight-pound girl on Sept. 29.

SHAPIRO TO MANAGE DETROIT FOX OFFICE.

The Fox Film Corporation, of New York City, announce the appointment of A. I. Shapiro as manager of the Detroit exchange in the Peter Smith building. Mr. Shapiro is now on a three weeks' trip through the upper and lower peninsulas of Mchigan, for the purpose of getting acquainted with exhibitors and the territory. As soon as he returns, which will be not later than October 10th, William Burnstein, who has been in temporary charge of the Detroit exchange, will return to New York. Mr. Shapiro has been with the Fox company for some time, formerly representing them in the east.

MOONEY NOW DIVISION MANAGER.

It is announced that Paul Mooney, manager of the Cleveland office of the Fox Company, has been promoted to division manager and will have charge of the Fox offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and at St. Louis.

SATIN GOLDFIBRE SCREENS.

Detroit has a new screen company which will be known as the Satin Goldfibre Screens, Inc. Offices will be in the Dime Bank building. Frank M. Duncan is the inventor. The company is ably financed. The actual manufacturing of Satin Goldfibre screens has already started and a number of orders have been placed by Detroit exhibitors. The company will operate on a large scale. Those who have tried it speak very highly of the Satin Goldfibre screen and predict a future for it.

New Theaters—Exhibitors' Notes—Personals.

The Krim Circle Theater Company, Detroit, has incorporated for $10,000. The stockholders are Phil and Leon Krim and Benjamin Alpert.

A. J. Gillingham, proprietor of the New Empire theater, Detroit, is expected back October 10 from a two weeks' stay at French Lick Springs, where he went for a rest.

The beautiful Majestic theater announces a new policy. Instead of giving but three shows daily, Manager McGee will operate on the continuous policy, opening at 2 p. m. and running steady until 11 p. m. This change is made to accommodate the crowds. The Majestic is getting an immense transient business, despite the fact that it is not downtown.

John P. Harris, of the Harris Amusement Company, of Pittsburgh, which operates the Family in this city, was in Detroit on September 28 on his way from Mt. Clemens, where he spent a few days. He left for Cincinnati in time to attend the opening of his third photoplay house in that city.

It is reported that A. Arthur Caille, of the Majestic, Fine Arts and Maxine theaters, is to have another large house and that it will be located downtown.

Frank Drew, of the new Drury Lane theater, says it will not be ready to open until Christmas time. It will take at least several months to decorate.

Percy Bates, manager of the Woodward theater, Detroit, left September 28 for England. He will serve on one of the English battleships for four months. Bates joined the English navy eight years ago and after four years of service was given a furlough to last until his eight years of enlistment ran out with the proviso that should England need him he would return. The eight years lacked but four months this week. At the end of the four months—if he is fortunate enough—he expects to come back to Detroit and resume his position as manager of the Woodward.

James Steele, general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., and vice-president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, motored to Detroit from Pittsburgh and stayed here two days, Sept. 22 and 23.

BATTLE CREEK EXPECTANT.

Eastern Capitalist While at Sanitarium Saw Possibilities of Big Theater.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

DANIEL PEARSON, of Newark, N. J., said to be a multi-millionaire, has interested Battle Creek theater men by his investigation of the show business recently while he was a guest at a Battle Creek Sanitarium. Options on three sites for a theater seating 2,000 persons have been secured, it is said. "While in the city, Pearson looked over Post theater from basement to gallery, took in every moving picture house in town, and even looked into the structures now serving as auditoriums, for conventions, lecture courses, etc.," says a local paper. "Finally he came out with a statement that Battle Creek needed a building for theater and convention purposes and he 'had a notion' to build one. In the midst of the excitement, he left the city, but it has developed that he went to New York to interview architects regarding plans and specifications, and will return here about October 1, to renew negotiations."

"It is stated, however, that for the time being, Pearson plans to run big photoplay features, rather than legitimate attractions, and to stage Redpath Chautauqua courses, summer and winter, leaving the future to work itself out. He stated to several people here that he would have a stage built and equipped, behind his picture screen so that the theater could play any attraction on short notice."

GRAND HAVEN'S CENSUS BOARD.

Following the recommendation of the special censors who passed on moving picture shows last winter the council at Grand Haven has created a permanent board of censors. The report of the special board commended local managers for the class of films shown and their efforts to get the best pictures. The permanent board is composed of Mayor Van Zylen, City Manager Harry N. Beck, Mrs. R. M. Neale, Dr. C. W. Cotton, Dr. Edward Hofman, Edward W. F. Moll and Mrs. George D. Turner.

FITZPATRIC-McELROY COMPANY.

The Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company, which purchased the Lyric theater at Ludington and which will also operate the new house at Manistee, has been incorporated in Indiana with capital stock of $175,000. Pictures and vaudeville will be booked from Hammond, Ind., and Chicago.

THEATER AT ST. JOSEPH NOT SOLD.

After announcement had been made that John Connors, of Hartford, had purchased the Lyric theater at St. Joseph, it was given out the deal was not negotiated and Conners will devote his time to his photoplay house at Hartford.

New Houses in Michigan.

A. J. Rundle will replace the burned Rundle opera House at Iron Mountain with a new theater, 90x120, which will contain a moving picture show, a dance hall and a roller skating rink.

The Bijou theater at Iron Mountain will be transformed into an opera house seating 800. While the changes are being made, the moving picture shows will be given at the old Marion theater. After the Bijou is remodeled the Marion will be lengthened and otherwise improved and pictures will be shown at both houses, although the Bijou will have some theatrical attractions.

A vaudeville and moving picture theater seating 800 is being erected by Gus Kitzinger on River street in Manistee to take the place of the burned Royal. It will be leased to a Chicago amusement company.

Changes in Management.

R. D. De Noylles has succeeded J. J. Rieder as manager of the Temple theater in Jackson.

The Wilson has taken over the Uno theater at Crystal Falls, formerly Manager Needham having entered the electrical contracting field.

A. V. Parmlee sold the Princess theater at Yale to Justin Cavanaugh and will become a traveling salesman.

Fred J. Durkee has sold the Rex theater in Saginaw to the Mecca Theater Company, which has changed the name to the Annex. The new owners, who also operate the Mecca theater, will use Paramount Pictures and Broadway Universal features.

CASE AGAINST STEINHAUER DISMISSED IN ILLINOIS.

The case against William Steinhauer, former moving picture theater proprietor at Rock Island, charged with the larceny of a moving picture machine, has been dismissed.

BIG FEATURE FAILED TO COME —EMERGENCY SHOW FREE.

A few weeks delay whetted the appetites of Farmington people for "Neptune's Daughter," and Manager Chance of the Lyric theater had excellent patronage. The film went astray at the first booking and a record crowd was disappointed. As a guarantee of good faith, Manager Chance admitted everybody free to an emergency program and created a veritable boosting brigade for the second booking.

SITES AT PREMIUM IN ELGIN.

Charles Smith, manager of the Star theater at Elgin, which recently was purchased by Ralph W. Crocker, was unable to secure a satisfactory site for a new moving picture theater in that city. Several desirable locations are valued too highly by their owners, moving picture men say. W. J. Meehan, who owns the Lyric site at 64 Grove avenue, has had several offers.

Do Local Films Pay?

Pictures by Home Talent Made in the Home Backgrounds Do Not Always Bring the Business Hoped for from the Home People—World Man Finds One Such a Frost—Local Paper Blames Operator.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE local moving picture or home-talent photoplay is not always a success. There have been several instances where the company which made the film did not deliver the goods in the way of a story and the photography was so poor that the house manager had to either "sting" his patrons or cancel the picture. Cancellation means a gap in the program and often offending some influential persons who take part in the photoplay.

A few weeks ago a representative of the World dropped into a down state house where a much-advertised local film was being shown. Generous assistance had been given the promoters of the film. They had been loaned the country club, industries and other local institutions and interest was such that a good picture would have filled the house. But the result was a film that the "word-of-mouth" advertising after the first run killed the business for the rest of the four days it was booked.

A similar case is recorded at Kankakee where the last day of a booking was cancelled. "The fault with the pictures," says a local paper, "seems to have been that the operators must have thrown the different films into a hopper and let them come out as they would and the play so assiduously rehearsed by the young people had much the same continuity that subjects have in a dictionary besides a sandwich occasionally of an advertisement of local business houses. The manager of the house decided he was not giving his patrons a run for the money and ditched the films.

"An outside concern promoted the enterprise and came with good recommendations from other cities."

VOTES KILL SUNDAY SHOWS IN LINCOLN.

A move for Sunday picture shows in Lincoln was defeated by a vote of 1,367 to 763. A big revival meeting played an important part in the fight. The Sunday night before the election the evangelist assembled on the tabernacle platform the local ministers, who denounced the Sunday show. Rev. N. J. Hilton, pastor of the First Baptist church, said he was a patron of the week-day show, but was against the Sabbath performance. So was Rev. Melvin R. Laird, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. He had much praise for moving pictures, but added: "This proposed ordinance, it appears to me, is born solely of the desire of the theater men to make more money. I have never approved of boycotts and have never participated in one, but if the moving picture men put this thing over on us, I shall never darken the door of a moving picture theater in Lincoln again, and shall go before my people and urge them not to patronize the movies any further, either."

Two hundred women voted for Sunday shows and 626 against, 563 men for and 741 against.

FILM SERVICE "FOR OUR COUNTRY'S SAKE."

"There is no dearth of pictures," said Rev. Dr. McElveen, of the Congregational church in Evanston, discussing moving pictures for religious work. "Every one of the film companies are making educational, sociological and religious films." This church has in mind a novel film program and church service which will bear the title "For Our Country's Sake." It will include pictures illustrating child welfare work, sanitation and discoveries and inventions of public interest.

INJUNCTION ASKED.

J. F. Knock has applied for an injunction against the city of Lewistown to prevent the city from forbidding him from operating a moving picture show in his building near the Burlington station in that city.

New Openings, Leases, Changes.

Chadwick E. Smith has taken a lease on the Family theater at Dixon. He will install a $5,000 organ.

A. C. Wilson, of Fairview, has sold the Cort theater at Monmouth to S. E. Dobbins and P. L. Clark of Canton.

Mrs. Belle Lund-Dasch and D. F. Reese have opened the Cozy theater in East St. Louis. It will run as a five-cent house with features twice a week at ten cents. A four-piece orchestra will be used.

Manager Day has opened the Opera house at Streator to a moving picture policy, although theatrical attractions will be used at least twice a month. Two new Power's machines and a Fort Wayne generator have been installed. Five cents will be charged except on Thursday or feature night.

The York Amusement Company of Chicago has been incorporated with $2,500 capital stock. The incorporators are Jacob Perbohner, Samuel Keller and Morris Kempel.

Lowe & Hawks have purchased the Wright moving picture theater at Hopedale and closed it, leaving only one show there.

John Banks is now operating the Victor theater at Silvis.

Showmanship Hits—Exhibitors' Notes.

A hundred pictures of Kewanee plus the regular program opened parental purses for the Dreamland in that city.

Merchants of Bulpitt pay for a free show every Monday night at the Bulpitt theater, then send their customers to it.

A volunteer fireman in Abingdon was badly burned. The Abingdon theater loaned its house to the fire company for a benefit show.

A report comes from Peoria that the introductory reel of the film, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "was found unsuited to children and was therefore omitted from the program" at a special Saturday morning children's show at the Apollo theater.

The village board of Glencoe has passed an ordinance regulating the operation of moving picture shows.

M. W. Stults, manager of the Princess theater at Monmouth, will use nothing but features, making up this program from the V-L-S-E, Pathe, Fox and Universal Broadway releases.

Manager Schrader of the Vaudette at Sterling is remodeling his front and redecorating.

The Majestic at Clinton has added seventy to its seating capacity.

The Olympic at Kewanee has installed a new pearl plastic screen.

PRAIRIE STATES NEWS LETTER.

IN MINNESOTA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Picture Man Murdered by Thieves.

THE body of Charles Dellehey, 58, manager of the Majestic theater, at Ellsworth, was found September 23 in a clump of willows near that place.

Dellehey was killed while returning to his home with the night receipts of the theater in his pocket, about $300. When the body was found the hands were tied tightly behind his back. His head had been crushed with a piece of gaspipe.

More Local Film in Minnesota.

William A. Lochren, president of the Northwest Weekly, announces that in future releases, in addition to motion pictures of the Twin Cities, Duluth and northwest news happenings, there will be views of show places and beauty spots from all parts of the state. Camera men will be sent to every point of interest to make it possible for Minnesotans to "See the Northwest" without traveling.

Will Make Wild West Films at Roundup.

H. W. Edgerton, of St. Paul, is one of the incorporators of the Century Film Company which has filed articles of incorporation at Roundup, Mont. The company, which is capitalized at $100,000, plans to produce Wild West pictures at Roundup. The erection of a plant there is contemplated. Films will be released through exchanges, but later the state right plan may be tried. In addition to Edgerton, Charles Bise, of Pasadena, Cal., and Gil Speelman, are directors.

Calhoun Theater Improvements.

C. T. McElroy, architect, of Minnent, has made sketches for an addition to the Calhoun theater, at Lake street and Girard avenue, South, in Minneapolis. This structure is of rough texture brick, with paneled interior effect in brick, as well as the exterior. The intention is to build an addition of the same size and design as the present building.

New Theaters—Leases—Notes.

J. J. Price and R. Livingston, of Minneapolis, have leased the Columbia theater at Brainerd for five years and will open it early in October as a moving picture house.

W. L. Buck, of St. Peter, has purchased a block on Third street in Waterville and will open a moving picture theater and opera house about the first of the year.

Leon A. Hellweg will open a new moving picture theater on Churchill street, in Minneapolis.

M. L. Smith has sold his interest in the Gem theater, at Hill City, to A. C. Abrahamson, who now is sole owner. The new proprietor plans to use more multiple reel features.

Speagle & Johnson have moved the Crescent theater, at Buhl, to the Norton Hardware building.

George Kaupp has purchased the Converse theater at Blue Earth, from E. G. Fargo. He will use four reels of Universal service nightly. Tuesday will be feature night.

Minnesota Exhibitors' Notes.

E. E. Cline, who is remodeling the auditorium, at Canby, has offered a reward for a new name for the theater.

Persistent advertising by moving pictures is the plan of the Merchants' Association at Bemidji. Manager G. S. Harding, of the Grand theater, offered to run a 1,000 foot film twenty times in the course of a year if merchants furnished $375 for the project.

Patrons of the Rex theater at Duluth did themselves good and helped the homeless when that theater showed "An Alien" for the benefit of St. James' orphanage.

Films of the county fair at Hutchinson, which were made by H. D. Thorpe, of Redwood Falls, were shown for two days at the Rex theater, in Hutchinson.

IN IOWA.

Garden Theater, at Davenport Opens.

ATTENDING the opening of Blank & Greenebaum's new Garden theater was R. C. LiBeau, representative of the Paramount Picture Corporation. The Paramount feature, "Helene of the North," was the opening attraction. The foyer was a mass of flowers from local Davenport friends of the manager's and from film men.

More than 3,000 admissions were paid and many were turned away. Over a hundred automobiles were parked near the theater.

The lithograph will have no place in the new house. Two frames hang in front with photographs of current attractions, and in the lobby are brass frames with more photos.

The city electrician looked over the projection, equipment and declared: "This house has the finest safety arrangements in the operating room that I have ever seen. If every theater safeguarded its audiences in this manner there would be no trouble at all. The equipment includes two new Simplex machines.

The Garden represents an outlay of $75,000, but it has three large cities—Davenport, Rock Island and Moline—from which to draw patronage and its outlook is very bright.

J. R. Granger May Open Office in Cedar Rapids.

J. R. Granger, of New York, who has the Iowa rights for "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and also controls twenty large features for Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, recently was at Cedar Rapids, where he is contemplating opening an office to be operated in conjunction with his Minneapolis exchange. With him was Fred Reichelt, his western manager; Fred Wynne, of New York, who has the Iowa and Nebraska rights for "The Spoilers," and Brightly Dayton, who becomes manager of the new opera house at Vinton October 12.

New Cedar Rapids Company.

The Strand Theater Company has been incorporated with $60,000 capital stock to do business at Cedar Rapids. The directors are M. Ford, H. E. Spangler and A. J. Diebold.

Iowa Openings.

Coffin & Brown, of Manson, opened the Richards opera house September 25, where they will give two shows a week, using Paramount pictures.

The new Palace theater, at Vinton, was scheduled to open October 14. This house is modeled after the Strand, in Cedar Rapids, and is one of the finest in any Iowa town of 10,000 population.

The Opera house at Collins has been opened under the management of the B. & B. pharmacy.

The Opera house at Walcott will give motion pictures every Sunday and Wednesday night.

Manager Bridwell has reopened the Princess theater, at Keota, after a six weeks' shutdown to add 25 feet, 70 seats, and redecorate.

The Battle Creek band went to Schleswig to furnish a concert for the reopening of the Palace, John Krohnke's new picture theater.

Two New Houses.

W. E. Voss will erect a new moving picture theater and opera house at Colfax to cost about $15,000.

Whitmer & Son, of Anthon, will transform the second story of their hardware store into an opera house.

Theaters Change Hands—New Leases.

The Graces have sold the Lyric theater, at Adair, to W. H. and Don Crooks, who operate the Palace. They will operate both houses, but the Lyric will be open only on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

L. A. Brink has leased the Shirey building, at Fontanelle, and after remodeling will occupy it with his picture show.

H. D. Grove, who has been connected with the Casino theater in Davenport, is now manager of that house.

C. C. Taft and A. Frankie, of Des Moines, have purchased the lease on the Princess theater, at Mason City, and hereafter the house will be known as the Casino. It will be operated, after two weeks of remodeling, by the Iowa Amusement Company, with John Shipley, of Des Moines, as resident manager.

Paul R. Whitney, of Albert Lea, Minn., where he was connected with the Broadway and Idle Hour theaters, has purchased the Colonial theater at Oelwein.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

New Theater at La Maure.

A SITE in La Moure, N. D., has been bought by B. W. Heed, of Cokato, Minn., and Ernest Ellison, of La Moure, for the construction of a one-story, 24x85, moving picture theater, similar to the Scenic theater, at Lisbon. It will seat 264. Three-reel programs will be given nightly except Sunday, and in the course of the week they will run a serial and two features. Admission will be 10 cents.

Local Theater Supplements School.

Moving pictures pertinent to the courses of study in all grades of the public schools at Deadwood, S. D., will be shown in a local theater this winter. The idea was developed by B. H. Myers, superintendent of schools.

Dakota Briefs.

J. E. Scott, of Huron, S. D., who purchased the Lounge theater there from Lynde & Freeman some time ago, has resold it to Lynde.

Three reels of the South Dakota Nationl Guard in camp at Redfield made a good local attraction for the Imperial theater at Madison, S. D.

IN NEBRASKA.

Goldberg's New Omaha House Aims at Comfort.

EFFORTS to put all patrons at ease form a keynote of the plans for S. H. Goldberg's new moving picture theater at 1410-14 Farnam street, in Omaha. Architect Harry Lawrie spent two weeks visiting the best houses in the east and as a result the new theater will contain a nursery for the children, rest room for women and a smoking room for the men. The house will seat 1,800. A pipe organ will be installed.

The general plan provides for vestibules on Farnam street and a large foyer immediately behind the vestibules, which can accommodate a large number of people after admission has been bought at the ticket office, thereby avoiding crowding of sidewalks.

The exterior is designed in the Adam style of Italian renaissance. The entire front will be of terra cotta of a light cream color and the ornaments modeled in pale pinks, sage greens and delicate blues.

For night effect a large number of electric lights will be put on the front, which will not only illumine, but will trace out the leading lines of the design and show the beautiful ornaments.

The exterior vestibule and ticket booth will also be of terra cotta, in keeping with the general design, and the large foyer and the entire interior of the theater will have ornamental plaster decorations in the Adam style colored in soft yellows and russets, and the electric light effect of the interior will be diffused and soft.

ATLANTA'S FINE NEW THEATER.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA is to have a most remarkable moving picture theater, and one that will compete in beauty of design with the famous moving picture houses of the large eastern and western cities. This moving picture theater will be erected at the corner of Forsythe and Luckie streets, opposite the Forsythe theater, on a vacant lot having a frontage of 100 feet on Forsythe and 80 feet frontage on Luckie street. It will cost $50,000.

Peter Mion, who built the Strand theater, has leased the building for a term of fifteen years for an aggregate rental of $185,000, on a graduated scale which begins with an annual rental of $10,000 for the first five years, and increases at five-year intervals thereafter.

The interior proper will be 100 feet by 55 feet, with a seating capacity of 1,200 people. There will be a small stage and the interior decorations of the auditorium will be most elaborate, being finished in white marble and hardwood panelings. The construction will be of light brick with terra cotta trimmings.

BRIEFS FROM ATLANTA.

In response to the requests from people in all parts of Georgia for a chance to see the new Georgia motion picture film, which was given a preliminary run in the Atlanta auditorium, Sept. 18, the Georgia Chamber of Commerce decided to run the film during the annual meeting of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce at Macon, Sept. 29th and 30th.

The Grand Opera house in Macon was secured and the film, with a number of most interesting scenes in south Georgia, run during the afternoon and at night on those days.

Managers of the moving picture theaters in Atlanta declared Friday that following the publication of the new midweek feature page on Wednesday in the Daily Constitution, their theaters did a better business than they have done in any week for the past six months. Fine crowds turned out to see the pictures, and the venture was a success in every way.

A. C. Bromberg, Atlanta manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, is kept busy taking care of the demands for coming releases from his territory—the south. Mr. Bromberg has arranged nice offices on Fairlie street.

"Carmen" will be shown in Atlanta at the Lyric, beginning Oct. 4th, for the week. Geraldine Farrar is Atlanta's favorite in grand opera, and it goes without saying that the Lyric will play to standing room only during the week. It opened in Boston's Symphony hall on Oct. 1st.

IN MISSOURI.

Forest Kerrens, manager of the Star theater at Butler, Mo., is advertising the new motor driven machine that he has recently installed and is strongly advocating all new inventions in relation to the moving picture business through his advertising.

The Skydome, which was erected in Springfield, Mo., in 1910 and during that year and the year following was Springfield's most popular outdoor moving picture theater, has at last given way to the enclosed theater business.

SALISBURY WILD LIFE PICTURES

The Grand Feature Film company, which opened Kansas City in June with Salisbury wild life pictures, is placing them in fifteen states west of the Mississippi. A branch office has been opened in Minneapolis. The company has four copies of the picture, which is seven reels, constantly busy, and the reports are of good success. Only the larger towns are being covered now. A representative was recently sent to Texas to book the picture.

Kansas Forbids Protest

Film with Message from Kansas City Exchange Men to Exhibitors of State Censored by Official Board—Non-Censorable Slides to Take the Place of the Forbidden Film—What the Slides Are Saying.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

TWENTY-SIX copies of a statement against the censorship law are being made on slides, to be started out over Kansas next week. The first copies will go to twenty-six theaters, from which, after a week, they will be sent to twenty-six others, and so on until the entire Kansas field is covered. Next week a new slide will be issued. The series planned comprises twenty different "subjects," or statements, designed to inform the public as to the injuries of the censorship to the industry, and its reactionary harm to the public.

The sending of these slides was decided upon at a meeting of the Kansas City exchange managers September 30. The matter on the first group of slides is the same as that on the 20-foot strip of film which was to have been sent to all Kansas theaters. This insert was censored by the Kansas board—and eliminated. Only one company had submitted the insert, so the others did not use it. The copy follows:

"This theater pays its share of an unjust $2 a reel tax to the state of Kansas because our august legislators thought you didn't know any better than to pay us your money to see something that would injure you.

"Next thing you know they will be appointing an inspector to charge you two dollars each morning for an inspection of your person to see that you are properly clothed and that you have no concealed weapons."

WONDERFUL KANSAS LAW.

Films Illegal for Theaters Said to Be Legal in Churches.

The Rev. Festus Foster, traveling inspector of the Kansas Board of Censorship, marshaled two assistants to his banner last week, and covered Kansas City, Kansas. They found sixteen moving picture playhouses where, they alleged, films were being shown that in one way or another violated the law. Most of the instances were of uncensored films, though in a few cases the charge was that the films shown contained actions which the censors had ordered eliminated. No arrests were made. The exhibitors, however, were asked to appear at the county attorney's office the morning of September 30—and they all appeared. The Rev. Mr. Foster explained to them that they were violating the law; and he submitted to them a statement for their signatures, in which admission was made of offenses, and a promise given that hereafter the exhibitors would comply with all the regulations. All the exhibitors signed the statements. And then they went out to hunt for censored films that they could show to their patrons.

During the proceedings, while many exhibitors were still in the county attorney's office, an officer of the Kansas City Exchange Men's Association created a diversion. He charged the Rev. Foster with showing uncensored films in a church in Topeka with which he is connected. No denial was made of the charge, but a hint was conveyed to those present that perhaps the showing of uncensored films in a church was quite as illegal and subject to prosecution, as such showing anywhere else except in a school. Mr. Foster explained to the exhibitors that he had received from the attorney general an opinion to the effect that the law exempted churches as well as educational institutions from the censorship exaction.

FROM THE KLEINE EXCHANGE.

Robert J. Churchill, formerly with the General at Omaha, more recently with the V-L-S-E office at Kansas City, is now covering Nebraska and Iowa territory for the George Kleine office at Kansas City. Mr. Churchill is an old-timer at the game, well versed in all its branches, and knows the trade. John Hardin, manager of the Kansas City exchange of the Kleine company, has now three men on the road, the others being W. E. Condell in Kansas and Oklahoma, and C. A. (Kid) Nichols in Missouri and Arkansas.

FEATURE FILM HAS FINE KANSAS OFFICES.

"We never saw prospects so bright, and the demand for good pictures so lively, as this fall," said an officer of the Kansas City Feature Film company recently. The company has recently almost doubled its force, now employing about forty people. The offices are worth a visit—large, excellently well arranged, and unusually light. The front and one side of the rooms are almost entirely glass, and artificial light is necessary only on the darkest days. The company has installed many novel details of equipment, having taken the rooms on the second floor at 922 McGee street, when the building was erected, and fitted them for its purpose. One detail is a late model of mimeograph on which all the bulletins, and most of the office stationery, are printed. Another detail is a cleaning machine, through which each film, except the new ones that are too constantly busy, are put every few days when available. The latter operation is a particular feature of the company's service, since it keeps the films in first-class condition for every exhibitor of them.

FLOODS VISIT PAWHUSKA, OKLAHOMA.

The beautiful theater of C. Constantine. at Pawhuska, Oklahoma, a $35,000 structure and one of the best in the state, was flooded several feet deep on September 15. The generating plant was soaked, and the theater was shut down for four days to dry out. The water had reached the stage floor, and a lot of work was necessary to clean up. Albert Jackson's theater, a less elaborate playhouse, but very popular, was not so seriously damaged, the water reaching only the floor. The second night after the flood, Albert Jackson opened his picture show, and gave practically all the receipts to the Mothers' Relief Fund; at last reports he was still giving a large proportion of the receipts to this fund. Pawhuska is a town of 4,000; but the county seat of Osage county, the residence of the richest tribe of Indians in the world—so the recovery from the flood situation and depression was rapid. O. A. Bandy, a representative of the Pathe company, was marooned in Pawhuska four days, and then escaped on a mule, wagon and railroad bridges being all washed out.

Exhibitor Starts Paper

San Francisco Picture Man, Owner of the Verdi Theater, Begins Weekly Newspaper—Gives Film Reviews and Articles of General Interest—How It Is Distributed—Pleases People of Neighborhood.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BEN MICHAELS, the versatile owner of the Verdi theater on Broadway, in the heart of what is known as the North Beach district, has blossomed forth as the editor of a new weekly paper, the North End News, and the two first issues which have made their appearance have attracted wide attention in that section of the city where Mr. Michaels is well known. The new district publication is not only newsy but is distinctive for the energetic manner in which it attacks public questions and policies, as well as for way in which moving pictures are brought to general notice. Naturally, the films booked for the Verdi are given the most attention, but the reviews of these are interesting, being much more comprehensive than those usually given in the press.

In the initial issue of the North End News, Editor Michaels devotes considerable space to the history of the use of pipe organs in moving picture houses and announced that within a short time a fine organ would be installed in the Verdi. It is a well-known fact that Mr. Michaels was one of the first men in America, if not the first, to conceive the idea of using a pipe organ in a moving picture house. While manager of the Silver Palace on Market street in 1908, he purchased a Kimball church organ and engaged a celebrated organist, an innovation that attracted much attention. His associates in the business decided that the music was too "churchy" and the instrument was returned to the dealers to be finally disposed of to a Seattle theatrical man.

About three and a half years ago a splendid organ was built for the old Palace, but when this house was destroyed by fire it could not be delivered. The Verdi theater has since been erected on the same site, but owing to its staunch construction the walls have dried slowly and it has not been deemed advisable to have the big instrument installed. However, the house is now in shape for the organ. A fine, new "Radio" curtain has been recently completed at the Verdi theater and the size of the picture has been increased.

Manager and editor Michaels has adopted a clever plan for increasing the patronage at his house, and at the same time secure subscriptions for his paper. For one dollar he is giving one year's subscription to the North End News and twelve ten-cent tickets to the Verdi and has been compelled to install another cashier to care for this ticket selling department. The second issue of the paper appeared increased in size and containing a number of congratulatory letters from leading men in the North Beach district, as well as from prominent film men.

OAKLAND EXHIBITOR LAUNCHES HOUSE ORGAN.

Rex Midgley, manager of the Franklin, Oakland, Cal., as well as a leading house in Alameda, has launched a neat house organ known as the Franklin News that is attracting wide attention in the suburban city and which is causing other exhibitors to sit up and take notice. This is a very neat appearing sheet filled with reviews of the features that are to appear at this house written in a style that will appeal to the moving picture loving public. Copies are mailed each week to patrons desiring them and the paper is proving to be in great demand. A feature that appeals strongly to theatergoers is the weekly program, giving the time each subject is to be thrown on the screen, making it possible for them to time their visits so as to witness all productions from the beginning.

EMPRESS POLICY A SUCCESS.

The new policy of the Empress theater whereby a big feature production is offered on the bill each week, in addition to a serial picture, is meeting with marked success and it has been decided to give continuous performances daily, commencing at 1:15 p. m. No reduction has been made as yet in the number of vaudeville acts, although changes along this line are being considered by Manager Sid Grauman. The addition of moving pictures to the regular program has resulted in an increase in attendance that has been very gratifying.

SCREEN CLUB PLANS JINKS.

A '49 Camp entertainment is being planned by the directors of the Screen Club of San Francisco to be held in the rooms of the organization on Eddy street some time in October. A real old-fashioned western time is being looked forward to by members and their friends.

FARE BOXES AT THE TIVOLI.

Turner & Dahnken have been so well pleased with the pay-as-you-enter plan recently tried out at the Berkeley and Sacramento houses that automatic machines have been installed at the Tivoli theater at San Francisco and the services of the ticket seller have been dispensed with.

GOLDEN GATE SELLS ITS SUPPLY BUSINESS.

Sol Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film exchange, has returned from a business trip to New York. This concern has disposed of its supply business to Walter Preddey and in the future will devote its attention exclusively to the distribution of films.

EXPOSITION CITY NEWS.

The Clement, at Nineteenth and Clement, has installed a Wagner motor-generator set.

Extensive preparations are being made for the presentation of "Carmen" at the Imperial, commencing October 10. Special attention will be paid to the music and the engagement, which will last for three weeks, is expected to be a memorable event.

E. W. Castle has completed the taking of a very fine picture for Gaumont, showing the rebuilt city of San Francisco at its best.

I. H. Lichtenstein, head of the Globe Film Exchange, expects to leave for New York early in October to purchase films for his exchange.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is expected in San Francisco early in October.

M. F. Lowrey, traveling man for the Mutual Film, has returned from a trip through the northern part of the state. Fred Voight, the city representative, is spending considerable of his time working on "Damaged Goods."

F. E. Guenther, former president and general manager of the Atlas Film corporation, has disposed of his interests in this concern to George Chamberlain, secretary and treasurer, and has left for Spokane, Wash.

The Golden Gate Film exchange has added another Power's Cameragraph No. 6A to the equipment in its exhibiting room at 234 Eddy street.

DENVER MUTUAL FILM MOVES.

By Muriel Lee, Denver correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Mutual Film Corporation has just moved from their old office in the Iron building to new quarters at 1724 Welton street. The exchange was designed by Manager Harry Lustig, and was built under his supervision. It was completely equipped in eight days, and on the eighth day the Mutual was open for business.

This exchange office is, with no exception, the best arranged office in the city, as the arrangement is such that the exhibitor can be served in the shortest time possible. As you enter, to the right is the accounting department. Next this, situated between the accounting and the booking departments, is the manager's office. He can get into instant communication with either department.

In the rear are the shipping and the inspecting departments. The inspection tables are made of metal, to safeguard aginst fire. There is a huge vault for the films, which is made of brick and cement, and which is absolutely fireproof.

In fact, the entire exchange is so arranged in every detail to prevent loss of time, and yet to provide every comfort The departments are logically arranged, and the entire office is ideally planned.

Many of the Denver exchanges could profit by the example Manager Lustig and the Mutual have set. The office has every business convenience, but also is handsomely fitted up. The entire office is fitted up in oak, and well lighted and well ventilated, it makes an unusually pleasant exchange.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS STOPS OFF

Douglas Fairbanks, the well known Triangle star, stopped off in Denver on Thursday, Sept. 30th, accompanied by a party which is touring with him to the East. Mr. Fairbanks is an old Denver man, and has many friends here, who were anxious to see him and renew old ties.

MAE MARSH IN DENVER.

Mae Marsh, the popular Griffith star, is in Denver for several days to get a complete rest from her busy studio life Miss Marsh is in love with the pretty mountain city, and says she would love to live here. She is intending to go out in the country near here, to some ranch high up in the mountains, where she can just have a free outdoor life for several days. From here, she intends to go to New York, and, although her trip is purely for pleasure and for rest, Miss Marsh is so accustomed to being in the harness and is so in love with her work, that she plans to make a picture in New York "just for fun."

She is being so feted here that she will have to go to the country, and get clear away from her friends, if she expects to get any real rest. Denver people are captivated with her, and find her as charming off the screen as on it.

HARRY NOLAN GOES TO NEW YORK.

Harry Nolan, former division manager of the Universal has gone to New York to book for his own circuit of theaters. He and Mr. Swanson are just planning to add another theater to their already large list—this is to be a $200,000 building and will be strictly modern.

T. C. MONTGOMERY TO GO ON ROAD FROM DENVER.

T. C. Montgomery, a live wire salesman from the V-L-S-E San Francisco territory, has been transferred to go out on the road from Denver. Since the V-L-S-E branch in Denver has become a real exchange, with Frank Harris in charge, more salesmen are needed, and a larger office force has been employed. A new location has been found for the office, and will be occupied about November 1st

SPOKANE EXHIBITOR RAISES EVENING PRICES.

Lee S. Forbes of the Class A Is Enthusiastic Booster for Mutual.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHILE there has been some talk among Spokane moving picture men recently, relative to increasing rates of admission so that the 10 cent houses would charge 10 cents in the afternoons to 5:30 and 15 cents in the evening and for some of the five-cent houses to charge five cents in the afternoons and 10 cents at night, no agreement was reached, but Lee S. Forbes, manager of the Class A, a 10-cent house, took the initiative and on Sunday, September 26, raised his prices to 10 and 15 cents.

On this occasion he opened with the first of his run of Mutual Masterpictures which he recently arranged for, with W. J. Drummond, manager of the local Mutual exchange. He contemplates running these regularly. Mr. Forbes also changed from three changes a week to two, running new shows each Sunday and Wednesday. The first presentation was Bessie Barriscale in "The Mating," and the house was filled to standing room from 3 p. m. Sunday until the last show. It was also filled to capacity Monday night.

In half page advertisements in the three daily papers Mr. Forbes signs his name at the bottom and across the lower section headed "Complete Change of Policy at the Class A Theater," he says:

"The price of admission will be raised to 15 cents in the evenings after 5:30 o'clock. The afternoon admission will remain the same as heretofore, 10 cents; children five cents afternon and evenings.

"We are changing film services and providing what we believe to be one of the best services in the country. The Mutual Masterpictures will make the Class A theater their permanent home, and other features shown will consist of the well known Mutual Weekly, showing the world's news. We have spent six months trying to determine the best film service and we feel sure our patrons will approve our choice."

In a statement to the writer he said: "I believe what I said in my ad and I made this change independently of other moving picture men because I feel I have the service to justify the change and that my patrons will agree with me."

PICTURE TO PLEASE SPOKANE.

J. W. Allender, manager of the Lyric, who operated the Spokane for three weeks and closed it Saturday night, September 25, has arranged to run "The Melting Pot" at the Auditorium theater for the week starting October 10.

SPOKANE ITEMS.

James McConahey, manager of the Best Show, reports that he is having excellent success with the General Film releases which he started to run September 21. One of his biggest drawing cards of the week was Ruth Stonehouse and Henry B. Walthal in "Temper," an Essanay release.

One of the most striking and successful productions, from a box office standpoint, at least, shown at the Rex last week was Ella Hall and Rupert Julian in "Jewel," a Universal production. This ran for two days and drew large houses.

Hazel Dawn in "The Heart of Jennifer," drew well at the Clemmer. This house is now using the Animated Weekly.

Betty Nansen in "The Song of Hate" was one of the best drawing programs at the Casino during the past week.

Clara Kimball Young in "Trilby" played to large audiences at the Liberty.

Joseph Krom, manager of the Empress, a vaudeville house, announces that he will run Mutual releases in addition to his vaudeville attractions.

The "Pass Key Movie Stamps" are being used by some Spokane merchants.

Portland Prices Rise

Several Downtown Theaters Now Charge 15 Cents—Other Houses May Follow—Increase Necessary and Not Arbitrary Move—Valley Towns in Line for Raise—Cost of Service the Reason.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN line with the announcement in the World a month or so ago that a general raise in price was contemplated by the 10 cent houses in Portland, several of the downtown houses have already increased their admission price to 15 cents and all of the other downtown theaters are momentarily expected to fall in line. Meetings on the subject have been held at short intervals by the Portland Protective Association, and while the proposed raise will not be an arbitrary and concerted move on the part of the managers in the manner of a picture trust as an article in a Portland paper seemed to indicate, the meetings have been held to bring the managers together and work out a plan of salvation for all the downtown houses.

A prominent exhibitor said the matter had gotten to a point where a raise in price or a decrease in quality of service had become absolutely necessary to existence and with Portland having the reputation of being one of the first cities in film exhibition in the United States, they hesitated to cut the service. Triangle was in Portland recently looking for a house in which to play but none of the local theaters could reach their price.

Prices in the Valley.

George Blye, owner of the Blye and Ye Liberty theaters, Salem, Ore., was radiating his good nature along Film Row in Portland the other day when ye scribe interrogated him on the price situation in the Willamette valley. He advised that nearly all the houses in Salem and neighboring cities were getting 10 cents but that there had been much talk of raising to 15 when the Portland houses did. There seemed to be some doubt in Mr. Blye's mind as to the success of such a raise but he was perfectly willing to join for the good of the service if he could be assured that the other exhibitors would stay with it long enough to give the venture a fair trial.

A CENTRAL VIEWING PLACE.

The censor board, Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary, has finally put to Mayor Albee its proposition for a central viewing place. At a meeting of the board recently at which the mayor was present the board's plan was outlined to him and Sol Baum and Walter Wessling were instructed to interview the exchange men to ascertain their standing on the question. It is proposed to charge a fee of 25 cents for each reel viewed and permit the exhibitors to view the pictures with the board's viewers as they now do at the individual exchanges.

If the board's proposition meets with favor by the city the following issues will have to be met: First, will the city be responsible for films while at the viewing place; second, will it be good business to exhibit competitive films where they can be subjected to comparative discussion by the exhibitors present.

But the most important question which presents itself concerns the general taxpayer as well as the exhibitor. Under the new fire ordinance now in the hands of the fire marshal, an independent substantial building would be required to house such a viewing place and the city now has no building which is suitable for that purpose.

NO CHANGE AT NATIONAL.

Messrs. Jensen and Von Herberg journeyed from Seattle to Portland one Sunday recently and it was rumored and printed in the papers that they had negotiated with the stockholders of the National to lease that house and occupy it with Triangle pictures. This rumor is absolutely denied by Manager Orton E. Goodwin. Since the house discontinued musical comedies it has been showing first run features at 15 cents, this week doing good business with Faversham in "The Right of Way," and anticipating even a better week with "Damaged Goods" which will show October 3.

NEW MANAGER AT GENERAL.

With the transfer of T. C. Malcolm to the Los Angeles office of the General Film company, there has been much question who would succeed him to direct the destinies of the Portland General. The answer has come in the shape of Frank L. Hudson, a smiling six footer from the Lone Star state, who is as congenial as he is big. The Portland boys regret the departure of Mr. Malcolm from the Rose City and wish him all kinds of luck in the film metropolis.

CENSORS CAN'T AGREE.

Metro's "Destiny," a Rolfe picture, has been the cause of much discussion in censorship circles this week, it having been viewed twice and each time the board has been unable to agree upon it. P. E. Noble of the Portland Metro office and the exchange men who have seen the picture declare there is nothing in it that should cause it to be held up. Mr. Noble has taken the matter up with Metro's legal representatives and is awaiting their advice. Harry Cohen of New York City, Metro's special representative, has been in the city for two weeks and has conferred with Mr. Noble about the censor board's action.

"DAMAGED GOODS" TO SHOW.

Contrary to the anticipated opposition by the censor board, "Damaged Goods" was passed with favorable comments and with the request that children under 16 not accompanied by parents should not be permitted to view the picture. Prior to the inspection by the censor board the picture was shown privately to Dr. Calvin S. White, State Health Officer, and to the Portland members of the board of directors of the Oregon Social Hygiene Society.

BUSINESS BRIEFS.

O. Phelps, who formerly conducted the Grand theater at Hillsboro, is now house manager of the Star, Tillamook, Ore.

H. Baldra has purchased the Cozy theater at Woodburn and will run it as the Rex. Rev. Mr. Baldra was formerly trap drummer at the Hub theater, Albany, Ore.

The Home theater, Portland, has been sold to Mr. Thomas. Mr. Dosch, the former owner, has gone to Eugene, Ore., as an art teacher.

Captain Davies, the veteran showman at Sumpter, Ore., is adding equipment to his house.

The Opera House, Enterprise, Ore., has closed.

PORTLAND PERSONALS.

P. E. Noble, of the Portland Metro, had the surprise of his young life the other day when five visitors called on him, all of whom were in the market for theater buys. Mr. Noble sells films, not theaters. "And," says Mr. Noble, "all of them had money, too." Mr. Noble recently returned from Walla Walla.

L. C. Morgan, Lyric theater, Prineville, Ore., was a visitor in Portland.

G. A. Reed, branch manager of Mutual, Seattle, and W. J. Drummond, branch manager at Spokane, were visitors in the city conferring with C. J. Kerr, the local manager, on the subject of Mutual's new program.

A CORRECTION.

On page 314 of last week's issue a synopsis was published of Vitagraph's Broadway Star Feature entitled "To Cherish and Protect," and the release date was given as Sept. 15. This is an error; the subject is scheduled for release on Oct. 26.

The first episode of Selig's "Chronicles of Bloom Center," a story of which was published on page 324 of last week's issue, will be released on Oct. 21, instead of on Oct. 14, as previously announced. There will be no Selig release on Oct. 14.

ESSANAY.

BRONCHO BILLY, SHEEPMAN (Oct. 8).—Broncho Billy, the sheepman, goes to the village store and purchases an engagement ring for his sweetheart, the school teacher. As he is about to mount his horse, he finds a note pinned to the saddle, telling him to leave the country that only cow men are desired. On his way home he is fired upon by the cattle king and his gang. Broncho Billy returns the fire wounding the leader, but also is wounded himself. He goes to the school house, where he is protected by his sweetheart until help arrives. In the meantime the wounded cattle king has been picked up unconscious by Broncho Billy's parents. When he discovers who has saved him, he rushes to the school house, where he begs Broncho's forgiveness.

THE VILLAGE HOMESTEAD (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 11).—The cast: Darwin Karr, Betty Brown, Joseph Byron Totten and Howard Lang.

The chief of the United States Secret Service learns that moonshiners are at work in one of his districts. He sends Jim Canby, one of his operators, to gather sufficient evidence to convict them. Canby, posing as an unsophisticated city youth, buys a homestead in the village where he suspects the moonshiners are at work. There he meets and falls in love with Sallie Samson, a beautiful, but untutored, girl of the mountains. One of the daring band of moonshiners also is in love with her. The girl is torn with doubt as to which she loves best.

The moonshiners try every ruse to drive Canby from the village, fearing that he may see and tell things, although they do not suspect that he is a government agent. Canby, however outwits them at every turn. Finally, grown desperate, they plot to kill him. Sallie overhears the plot and her heart then tells her it is Canby she loves and not the man who is plotting his death. She hurries to warn Canby of his danger. He and an assistant are attacked by the moonshiners and after a desperate battle, in which Canby is wounded, they capture the moonshiners and Canby learns that he has also captured a girl's heart.

THE GREAT DECEIT (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 12).—The cast: Hugh E. Thompson, Lillian Drew, Warda Howard and John A. Lorenz.

After two years of married life, John Allen's home is still unblessed by God's greatest gift—a child. This fact grieves him terribly. Some time before his wife, Grace, had been informed by the physician that it would be impossible for her to bear children. She has not the heart to tell her husband this. He is later called to South America to be gone for a long period. About this time Grace's sister, Louise, receives a letter from her supposed husband telling her of their illegal marriage. Grace, desiring company during her husband's absence, asks Louise to come and stay with her. Shortly after a baby is born to Louise. To save her sister's honor and her own happiness, Grace, when her husband's returns, leads him to believe the child is theirs. He is overjoyed. A few years later Grace dies, and eventually Louise becomes the wife of John Allen. The secret is held until the boy proves a great disappointment, then the truth becomes known.

THE CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL (Oct. 13).—This is a split reel release, containing five hundred feet of animated cartoons dealing with the current topics of the day from a most humorous standpoint, also five hundred feet of scenes taken in the gorgeous Canadian Rockies, considered the most beautiful section of our great American continent.

ALL STUCK UP (Oct. 14).—The cast: Jack Pollard, Bud Jamison, Marta Golden, Leo White and Billy Armstrong.

The salesman arrives in the town of Podunc and convinces the storekeeper that swatting the fly is endangering the health of the good citizens, so lands a big order for his sticky fly-paper. The storekeeper places the paper in every conceivable place and starts an advertising campaign on the wonderful fly catcher. Before long his customers, while lounging around the counter and the potatoe sacks, find themselves covered from head to foot with this sticky paper. A fight ensues and a riot call is sent in to the constable. He arrives and also becomes entangled. However, this does not stop the sale of the fly-paper, and before long every housewife is well supplied, and many side-splitting scenes take place as a result. Finally the salesman is kicked bodily out of town after being plastered up with his marvelous fly-paper.

THE REAPING (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Lillian Drew, Camille D'Arcy, Richard C. Travers, Frances Wood and De Weese Seewir.

Dennis, a young man of questionable character, becomes engaged to Diana. One evening he betrays her and a few days later, Dennis drops dead. Later Diana goes to the country home of her aunt, the only mother she has ever known. Shortly after a boy is born to her. In the meantime her father dies suddenly, and she returns to her city home with her aunt, the boy posing as the aunt's adopted son. Later Diana marries and has a little girl. As the years go by the children fall in love. When the boy asks to marry her daughter, Diana confesses the truth to her husband, and is about to tell the children when her aunt discloses the fact that Diana's real son is dead, and that she had substituted an adopted child for her niece's son years before.

SHANGHAIED (Special—Two Parts—Charles Chaplin Picture—Oct. 4).—Charles Chaplin is hired by the mate of Vaquero to help him get a crew. Chaplin hides in a barrel and thumps the men on the head with a mallet while the mate talks to them. They are then thrown into the hold. Finally the mate takes the mallet and thumps Chaplin on the head and he is shanghaied with the rest. The ship puts out to sea, but the water is exceedingly rough and the crew has many mishaps, all on board falling into the water at various times.

Chaplin and the ship owner's daughter were in love, but the father objected to the match. The girl stows away aboard the vessel, leaving a note with her father that she is going to follow her sweetheart. The ship owner had conspired with the captain and mate to blow up the vessel for insurance, so he hurries after the boat in his yacht to rescue his daughter before the ship is blown up. Chaplin finds the girl in the hold and they hide while the captain and mate light a fuse to blow up the ship. When the two take to a small boat Chaplin carries out the lighted dynamite and hurls it into the small boat, which is blown up and the captain and mate hurled into the water. Chaplin and the girl then climb aboard her father's yacht. Chaplin throws the father overboard and the couple sail away happy.

VITAGRAPH.

QUITS (Oct. 18).—The cast: Wally Van, Charles Eldridge, Nitra Frazer.

Tried beyond all endurance by his son's vagaries, Billy Delano's father sends him to a country farm and tells him to stay there and not write to him until he has made good. Billy goes into partnership with Madge, the daughter of the last owner of the farm, and as the new owner, throws himself heart and soul into the work and makes such a good impression on his rural neighbors that they elect him mayor. On the strength of this Billy proposes to Madge and is accepted. His dad is informed, and he sets off hot-foot to prevent the nuptials. He is arrested within the town limits for speeding, and brought to trial—before Billy. Delano becomes obstreperous and Billy sends him to the cooler. There pa's anger subsides, but a bread-and-water diet is necessary before he finally capitulates. Acknowledging his son has "made good," he smilingly gives his blessing to the marriage. Billy "discharges the prisoner," and they all call it "Quits."

THE GODS REDEEM (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 19).—The cast: Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, Van Dyke Brooke, Mary Maurice.

Having drunk deeply of the dregs of life, and tired of its many troubles, Slippery Tom and Nell, the Pickpocket, both strangers to each other, decide life is no longer worth living. Fate takes them to a high bridge at almost the same time, and Tom sees Nell take the fatal leap. He dives after her with the determination of saving her life, if possible. After a struggle with the girl in the water he succeeds in bringing her to shore, and there each learns the other's story. Old Blind Jim, a blind man, meets them and at his suggestion that they throw off the old life and go to the country, Nell gladly consents to go with Tom. In the country Nell nurses a smallpox patient, and Tom goes away, after kissing her goodbye and declaring his love for her, promising to return when he has made good and claim her. A year passes and both have become respected and well beloved by every one, but it is five long years before Tom feels he has "made good" sufficiently to claim Nell for his wife. But their meeting and reunion more than repays both for their long separation, and Tom, now a successful physician, at once makes Nell his wife.

BROWN'S SUMMER BOARDERS (Oct. 20).—The cast: Jay Dwiggins, Arline Pretty, Thomas R. Mills, Garry McGarry, Charles Eldridge, Edwina Robbins.

Sam Brown, a close-fisted bachelor, marries Edith, the school teacher of Baytown, and at once begins to worry about her "extravagance." At sight of the wicker porch set Sam nearly has a fit, then a bright idea strikes him. He will take in boarders and make all the improvements pay for themselves. Edith does not like the idea and works out a little scheme of her own. A few days later Will and Harry, two young men, apply for and secure board at Sam's home. They make themselves right at home and all go fishing, leaving Sam at home alone and miserable, particularly at thought of the tender way the boys had helped Edith into the boat. Matters get worse until Sam begins to think his wife is deliberately flirting. The third day the boys teach Edith to swim, and this proves the last straw. Sam wants to thrash the young men, but Edith stops him and calmly introduces him to her brothers, Will and Harry, and her uncle.

ON THE TURN OF A CARD (Oct. 21).—The cast: Harry Morey, Garry McGarry, Carolyn Birch, Louise Beaudet.

On entering their home after the marriage ceremony, John Granger immediately becomes aware of the intense dislike his bride, Enid, has for him. Hurt and angry, he announces they shall be husband and wife in name only, then both bitterly reflect on the rash act which had united them for better or worse. Her love of bridge whist had plunged her into debt and Granger had helped her out. Unable to pay him back, he had suggested they cut cards to decide if he will cancel the debts or she marry him. She had lost, and their wedding was the result. Weeks later Enid has learned to love her husband, but conceals her affection. Granger sees Gerald, an old friend of Enid's, making love to her. He challenges the young man to a pistol duel, and despairing of winning Enid's love, quietly extracts the cartridges from his weapon. Enid sees this and rushes between the men, exclaiming: "It is you I love, John." And all ends happily.

A SAFE INVESTMENT (Oct. 22).—The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Donald MacBride.

Charley Sharp, a broker's clerk, with the aid of two pals starts the "Gee Whiz Mining Co.," and so well do they launch the enterprise that the money simply pours in. Dividends are paid the first month and Sharp, not trusting the banks, brings home his share and gives it to his wife to keep for him. She, spurred on by her husband's insinuation that she knows nothing about business, determines to show him that she does. The Gee Whiz mine stocks seem to be the best paying investment on the market, so she simply invests all her husband's money in them, not knowing that the whole affair is a fake promoted by her husband. Meanwhile, the secret service people have been busy, and immediately after Mrs. Sharp has deposited the money in the Gee Whiz office the place is raided and all holdings confiscated. Sharp escapes the clutches of the law and rushes home, where he gasps and chokes on learning of his wife's awful mistake, then, as the police arrest him, he goes out with bowed head and silent tongue.

THE RULING POWER (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: L. Rogers Lytton, Edith Storey, Maud Milton, Adele De Garde, Alice Lake, Leah Baird, Lionel Adams, Denton Vane, Edward Elkas, James Morrison.

Mr. Williams, a stern father and man of wealth, disinherits his son Hugh, for marrying Rose, a seamstress. Twenty years later, although Sose is practically supporting her sick husband, their little store is taken from them and they are obliged to move, with Martha, their daughter, to the tenement district. Here follows a bitter fight against the power of evil, and poverty. Hugh dies and Mr. Williams, now a politician—to aid his finances—meets and takes a liking to Martha. Still bitter against Rose, he offers to adopt the child, but Martha refuses to leave Rose. Steve, an East Side "sport," makes trouble for Rose and her daughter, and in desperation Rose goes to Mr. Williams for aid in suppressing the dance halls and "gardens." He refuses and she openly denounces him, shows him that if women had the vote in her state, they could clean out such places. Realizing the truth of what she says, Williams lends his influence to Women's Suffrage; it wins, and a joyful reunion of the whole family follows.

EDISON.

THE LITTLE SALESLADY (Oct. 16).—The cast: Leonie Flugrath, Bob Walker, Guido Colucci.

Grace Osborne is an orphan and a lace saleswoman in the departmental store of John Folk & Son, of which firm Robert Folk is now the head. Folk has been attracted to this demure little salesgirl since the first day of her coming to the store.

One day he sees a masher annoying Grace while she is at her work. He steps up to the counter and the man moves away, but that evening, as the employees are leaving the store, Folk sees, from an upper window, the masher speaking to Grace on the street. When Grace repulses the man's advances, he struggles with her and finally throws her to the ground. He makes good his escape, although pursued for several blocks. In falling, Grace has received a severe blow on the head, and Folk takes her home in a taxicab. Every day until she recovers he calls upon her and does all in his power to show his sympathy and regard. At last, on the day that she is able to return to her work, he calls her up into his office, and tells her that he is going to increase the salaries of many of the girls. But he is not, he says, going to increase hers. Grace's face pales as she hears this, but Folk instantly changes her expression to one of joy when he tells her that he is not going to raise her salary because he wishes her to share his salary with him—in other words, to step from behind the counter into the home—via the altar.

CARTOONS IN THE COUNTRY (Oct. 20).—The cast: Raymond McKee, James Harris, Gladys Leslie, Caroline Rankin, Jessie Stevens, Mabel Dwight, Marie Luhring, Doris Hill.

"Two's company, three's a crowd." Donald and Eleanor are in love, so that Jim realizes it is up to him to pick a peach for himself. There is only one room left at their country boarding house and Jim wants to make sure that no one but the proper peach rents it. In order to keep the proprietress busy while he interviews the applicants for the room, Jim gives her the animated picture book to look at. There's the fly Mr. Fly, who is looking for a mate. In his travels, he imbibes rather too freely of the fiery water, and then—but what self-respecting fly would marry a drunkard? And Mr. Fly flies into the embraces of fly-paper forever.

Meanwhile, Jim is busily picking his peach. He turns away a stoutish lass who wants the room with her sister, but rents it to what he thinks is The Peach. But when that peach relaxes and takes off that wig of luxuriant curls, etc., Jim turns yellow. The peach is a lemon.

Let's see what the proprietress is laughing at. It's Kid Kelly, who has just smoked papa's butt. How the room swims—and how his head whirls, and oh! poor Fido. Gosh! what a strong cigar. It reminds us of the day we stole that first one from Dad.

The proprietress has just turned another page when Jim emerges from the house, pursued by the cling-stone. Nothing left to do—he is going to end it all, and he heads for the lake. Then—he meets the corpulent miss and her sister—the one whom he refused the room to. Oh, mamma, what a sister that is! Those eyes! That hair! Those teeth! That settles it! Jim heads for the lake with the lemon in hot pursuit and then—bubble! bubble! Poor Jim.

THE LAND OF ADVENTURE (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Edward Earle, Johnnie Walker, William Fables, James Harris, Harry Linson, Julian Reed, Frank A. Lyon, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Margaret Prussing, Jean Dumar, Guido Colucci, George Romaine.

Eddie Reynolds and Billie Drew read of a new revolution, headed by General Villanza, which has broken out in Panzuelo. The same day comes a message from the president of that South American republic, asking their aid in crushing the revolution. As quickly as preparations can be made, they are off on a steamer bound for the South American port.

Aboard ship, they meet Mary and Alice Bruce, the two daughters of Stephen Bruce, who happens to be the American backer of the president of the republic. It is a case of love at first sight with the young men. Arrived in the capital of Panzuelo, they at once place themselves at the president's disposal. Following their meeting with the president and his staff, they receive a warning message to the effect that if they do not leave the country at once they will never do so alive. The boys laugh at the sinister message and make further preparations to aid the existing government. General Villanza, the rebel leader, consults with his officers, and it is agreed that since Mr. Bruce is backing the president, the revolutionists will win a big point if they can capture Bruce's two daughters and hold them as hostages, threatening to kill them if their father does not withdraw his aid from the president and transfer it to General Villanza.

After careful planning, the girls are captured while out riding, and are placed under guard in a tent of the rebel camp. Learning of this, Reynolds and Drew immediately make plans to rescue the girls. From that point on to the end of the story startling events follow each other thick and fast until, finally, the boys not only rescue their sweethearts but effect the capture of General Villanza himself. The rebel leader is given his choice of being put to death or of giving up the fight and inducing his followers to surrender. He finally capitulates and peace is restored. The boys are given a handsome reward by the president and the last chapter of the story is reached when Mr. Bruce and his wife give their consent to the marriage of their daughters with the two young men.

THE BROKEN WORD (Oct. 23).—The cast: Ben Turbett, Nellie Grant, Herbert Prior, Yale Benner, Grace Williams.

Jack Clayton and Tom Hennesy have been at loggerheads for some time, when one day Hennesy confronts Jack in front of his home, and a violent quarrel ensues, during which Jack kills his enemy. As the shot is fired, Bob, Jack's brother runs up and takes in the whole situation, just as Jack's wife comes to the door of the house. For his brother's sake, Bob tells the sheriff that he has killed Hennesy, and is led off to the jail. That night Jack rides to the jail, which is a typical southwestern "calaboose" with no jailer, and sets his brother at liberty.

A day later, at the edge of the desert, Bob's horse falls under him, ridden to death. For hours, Bob shambles on alone, his throat parched for want of a drink. Coming to a spring, he finds it dried up, and then he abandons hope, sinking to the ground in a semi-unconscious state. Here he is found by Steve Dixon, a prospector, who gives him water and food and offers to help him. Months later, we find them mining partners at Malpais, on the Mexican border. Here they both meet Molly Pearson, the new teacher at the village school. Both men fall in love with her, but Bob is the favored one, although she is very friendly with Steve. Steve, however, has a habit of showing a great deal of attention to the women who frequent the dance hall in the mining town. At last Steve sees Bob talking to Molly in such a way that no doubt is left in Steve's mind as to Molly's regard for Bob. He confronts Bob and declares that since he has saved his life when dying from thirst on the desert, Bob should now remember his debt to him and give him a chance to win Molly's love. Bob, by no means ungrateful, tells Steve that if he will promise to leave the women of the dance hall alone thereafter he, Bob, will go away and leave him a clear field with Molly. Steve gives Bob his word that he will do as the latter suggests.

Bob leaves the camp without even saying good-bye to Molly, and goes to a neighboring valley, where he starts in prospecting. A poor Mexican woman of the camp, who has been protected by Bob when attacked by a drunken Mexican, comes to him while he is at work, and tells him that, almost from the hour of his going away Steve has been at his old tricks of flirting with the dance hall women. Bob returns to the camp and confronts Steve in the saloon, where he is drinking with a woman. He accuses him of having broken his word, and tells him that he is going to marry Molly at once. He hurries away to Molly's house and wins the promise that she is only too willing to give. They ride off together, but in Bob's ears keeps singing the threat made by Steve as Bob left the dance hall; that he will bring the sheriff of the adjoining county to arrest him for the murder to which he has confessed.

The story ends with a wild ride for the Mexican border, with Bob and Molly only a little in the lead. They cross the line, however, and head straight for a village where there is a little Spanish church. As their pursuers, headed by Steve and the sheriff, arrive at the boundary line, Bob and his bride-to-be are entering the church, while the sheriff, whose authority ceases where United States territory ends, is forced to turn back with the disgruntled Steve.

KALEM.

THE APACHES OF PARIS (Broadway Favorites—Special—Four Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Robert Ellis, Marion Whitney, Edna Hibbard, Arthur Housman.

In his effort to ensnare Paula, an American girl studying music in Paris, Darcelle intercepts her mail and steals the money sent her from America. When financial reverses beggar the Farrells, they send Paula her passage money and urge her to return home. This money is stolen by Darcelle. Desperate, and anxious to aid her mother and sister, the girl falls a victim to the scoundrel's wiles. Mrs. Farrell dies, believing that her daughter has achieved success abroad.

Marjorie, Paula's sister, unexpectedly comes to Paris to live with her. Paula endeavors to hide her secret, but it is revealed when Austin, a young American who loves her, learns of the girl's affair with Darcelle. Late that night, half-crazed as the result of the denouement, Paula visits a cafe and witnesses a performance of the "Dance of the Apaches." The fate which is meted out to the male Apache deeply impresses the girl. During her absence, Darcelle, whose eyes have turned towards Marjorie, enters Paula's apartment. Confronted by the scoundrel, Marjorie stabs and mortally wounds herself to escape him. Darcelle flees just before the elder sister returns. Dying, Marjorie tells her story to Paula. Remembering the fate dealt out to the Apache, the girl vows to slay her sister's murderer.

The police have been looking for Darcelle and the man takes refuge in Paula's apartment. The girl's attempt to slay him fails. Austin, who is aiding the police, enters the apartment with the latter just in time to save Paula's life. Darcelle leaps from a window in trying to escape and is killed. Austin learns Paula's story and forgives her.

"NEWMAN"
Ticket Chopper

Safeguard against having your tickets used over again and resold. Circumstances sometimes cause many men to yield to temptation. Newman's ticket choppers positively chop and positively insure you against any collusion between ticket seller and ticket taker. The most practical and the most attractive choppers made.

As will be seen on the cut, we have several vital improvements on our choppers, which place them in a class by themselves. The principal improvement is the automatic feeder, which feeds the tickets, whether a single ticket or a string of tickets, into the mutilating knives, preventing any possibility of tickets clogging and failing to enter mutilators. The knives absolutely mutilate the tickets, chewing up portions of the tickets, thus making them utterly impossible to iron out and use over again, which is not overcome with other makes of choppers. The tickets, however, are not so completely defaced that they can not be read and rechecked, if necessary.

The emergency door, which is under lock and key, allows ready and instant access into the chopper, without the necessity of removing the top and other parts—a feature possessed by no other makes. The handles on each side enable one man to carry the chopper without any difficulty. The ticket door, which leads into the compartment containing the removable ticket receptacle, is under lock and key. When the tickets are once tossed into the chopper they are rendered absolutely useless.

The wooden ticket chopper is furnished in nickel trimmings in either mahogany or oak finish. Price $50.00 with all improvements.

The brass ticket chopper is furnished in lacquered finish, which does not require any polishing. This is the most attractive machine made. Price $70.00 with all improvements.

We allow $5.00 off of above prices if automatic ticket feeder is not wanted. We advise, however, that all choppers be equipped with same, as it prevents tickets from clogging and riding the mutilators without entering. Saves using a wire jiggler to make tickets enter mutilators. $18.00 allowance is made off of above prices if wanted without the mutilators, and equipped with trapdoors. These ticket droppers otherwise are the same, except that they do not mutilate the tickets.

ADAM'S ANCESTORS (Oct. 19).—The cast: John Rand, Myrta Sterling, William Heller, Ethel Teare, George F. George, Bud Duncan, Rube Miller.

Weary, Dud appropriates a baby carriage, ousts the infant it contains, and compels Bud to wheel him. The two are seen by Quince and hired to whitewash his fence. While Quince watches his men labor, the fair owner of the baby carriage appears upon the scene. Mistaking the farmer for the thief, she makes things hot for him. Bud and Dud hotfoot it away. Peter, commissioner to illustrate a magazine story, entitled, "Adam's Ancestors," advertises for two male models. Bud and his pal get the jobs and are ordered to don skins. Just as they are posing, Quince and his better half arrive on a visit to their son. Seeing the causes of his recent difficulty, Quince makes for Bud and Dud, but the two get away by using their prehistoric clubs freely.

In the meantime, Long John, a pickpocket, attempts to ply his profession upon a slumbering policeman. The officer awakens and goes after the crook. Long John runs into Bud and Dud and thus the three are captured. Thrown into a cell, Bud and his pal turn upon their jailor, tap him into slumber, knock Long John flat, and then endeavor to escape. A revolver in the hands of the desk sergeant suddenly causes the prisoners to recall the comforts of the cell. Hastening back to their barred chamber, Bud and Dud, with one accord, raise their clubs, bring them down upon each other's head and drift into dreamland!

THE MAN IN HIDING (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 20).—The cast: Harry Millarde, Alice Hollister, Nell Farrin, William McNulty, James B. Ross.

Tom Ingraham, who has been rescued from the clutches of Lina, a siren, meets Ruth. Knowing the marriage would please his wealthy uncle Macy, Tom makes the girl his wife. Ruth soon discovers the marriage to be a loveless one. Tom's hopes of inheriting a fortune are blasted when Macy is ruined. The boy meets Lina and is persuaded to desert his wife. Ruth subsequently obtains a divorce, her freedom coming shortly before her daughter's birth.

Several years later, Ruth accepts a position in the home of Marston, a widower, as governess. When Marston urges her to marry him, Ruth declines, telling him her story. She further declares that she knows Tom will need her some day. Tom and Lina quarrel. The adventuress seizes her pistol to defend herself. The weapon is accidentally discharged and Lina falls in a faint. Under the impression that he has killed her, Tom flees. He is pursued by officers who have heard the shot. In an effort to escape, the fugitive ducks into the Marston home—and comes face to face with Ruth.

Heeding the wretch's pleas, Ruth hides him in a closet and then throws the police off the track. Marston returns home before Tom can emerge. His suspicions aroused by Ruth's conduct, Marston investigates and discovers the man in hiding. Ruth then reveals the circumstances, telling the widower of Tom's identity. His heart touched, Marston allows the man to leave the house. Tom, however, walks right into the hands of an officer outside. Taking Ruth in his arms, Marston again asks her to marry him.

A MILE A MINUTE (Episode No. 50, "Hazards of Helen"—Oct. 23).—The cast: Helen Gibson, Robyn Adair, E. Z. Roberts, Charles Murchison.

Hume and Frintz, while riding in a boxcar, see a trunk in the unguarded baggage car of a passenger train. By a daring leap from the freight to the passenger, Hume steals the trunk, throws it into one of the box car, and then leaps back. The trunk is missed and the loss reported from Helen's station. Deering, a railroad detective, is sent to investigate. Later, when the box car containing the looted trunk is set out at Helen's station, the girl discovers its contents and makes a report to Deering.

The detective discovers the hiding place of the crooks, but in attempting to capture them is knocked unconscious and placed upon the tracks. Helen discovers the man's predicament barely in time to save his life. Later, the girl sees Frintz and his pal boarding an outgoing freight. Pursuing them, she just manages to swing aboard the last car. After telling her story to the train crew, Helen climbs to the top of the cars and runs forward. A battle between the yeggs and the brakemen ensues. The latter are defeated, and to prevent pursuit the yeggmen cut the train in two. By a desperate leap, the girl telegrapher manages to make the front section.

The crooks then hold up the engine crew and throw the men off the train. Helen, however, turns the tables on the thieves and runs the broken section back to where the rest of the train has been abandoned. Frintz tries to overpower Helen, but the girl easily frustrates the man who, with his pal, are shortly afterward made prisoners.

BIOGRAPH.

BAD MONEY (October 18)—The cast: Claire McDowell, Alan Hale.

The girl cashier of a restaurant finds a counterfeit quarter among her change and is reprimanded by the manager, who threatens that if she is not more careful she will be discharged. The remark is overheard by a counterfeiter at a neighboring table, and he schemes to make a tool of the girl by having her discharged. In the park he offers sympathy and a job in the cleaning and dyeing establishment which is the counterfeiters' blind. At the end of the week she draws her wages. A secret service agent secures a spurious coin just after she has passed it, and follows her.

Taking a suit of clothes as an excuse, he returns to the fake dyeing establishment. He has been seen trailing the girl and is at once seized and bound in an empty room. The girl, having discovered the counterfeiting plant, is locked in another room. She hears the malefactors plotting to turn on the gas and kill the secret service man, and foils them. By starting a false alarm of fire she effects her escape and frees the prisoner, but they are recaptured. At this moment, however, the agent's comrades, posted in advance, arrive and capture the gang after a sensational fight, in which the agent once more displays his prowess.

HIS HAND AND SEAL (Special—Two parts—October 19)—The cast: Vera Sisson, Clairette Clair, Madge Kirby, Jose Ruben, Charles H. Mailes, G. Raymond Nye.

Albert Curwood disinherits his dissolute son, Ed, and summons his lawyer, Weatherby, to make a change in his will. He directs that all his property shall go to his niece, Isabel, on attaining the age of twenty-one. Weatherby is astonished at the value of Curwood's securities, and when a friend gives him a stock-market tip he cannot resist the temptation to use a part of the Curwood estate "to make a killing." The market goes against him, however, and he is compelled to pledge other securities, until, on Isabel's twenty-first birthday, the estate has shrunk to nothing.

Fearing to face the girl, yet determined to make the best of a bad situation, Weatherby attends her birthday reception and makes an appointment for the next day at his office. Others present at the reception are Ed Curwood, whom Isabel loves, and Count Kavroff, suitor of her sister Grace. Kavroff gives Isabel his signet ring and asks her to have it fitted to Grace's finger. Isabel goes shopping and meets Ed Curwood. Learning Ed's immediate need of money, she offers him her brooch to pawn until she gets her inheritance. She then resumes her walk and disappears. Her body is found in a lonely part of the park. Count Kavroff's ring is found beside the body, and he is arrested. Ed Curwood is arrested at a pawnshop with a ticket for Isabel's brooch in his possession. Grace, puzzled by a thumbprint on Isabel's hand mirror, calls on Weatherby. Accidentally she spills ink on the desk; Weatherby mops it up and leaves his thumbprint on a sheet of paper. The print tallies with that on the mirror, and Weatherby is arrested. He confesses that he killed Isabel and attempted to cast suspicion upon the count, whose ring he had found in her vanity case.

THE VULTURE (October 21)—The cast: Augusta Anderson, Charles Perley, Charles Bennett, Clairette Clair.

At the Bradford reception, Madeline Harleigh, an actress, meets Sir James Merton, who is attracted by her charm. Lady Edith, wife of Sir James, is also present, and during the evening chance brings her near her husband and Miss Harleigh. The hostess introduces the two women; the actress puts forth her hand with a cordial smile, but Lady Edith bows coldly to Mrs. Bradford and says: "I do not wish to meet this actress, 'The Vulture.'" Sir James becomes infatuated by the Vulture and haunts her dressing room. She keeps him at arm's length despite his lavish gifts of jewelry, to the tune of fifty thousand pounds.

Facing ruin, Lady Edith determines to smother her pride and call on the Vulture. The latter receives her coldly in her dressing room, and to her frantic appeals makes no other reply than a scornful scrutiny through her gold lorgnette. Lady Edith retires from the room. Hardly has she left the theater when one of the Vulture's most persistent admirers calls. Sir James follows him and upbraids the Vulture as a heartless flirt. She bids him begone.

Realizing too late his own folly, he goes to his wife. In the midst of their despair she receives notice that the supposedly worthless estate of an uncle has proven valuable. A draft for fifty thousand pounds is enclosed. Time passes, and at another Bradford reception Lady Edith again snubs the Vulture. Mr. Bradford then publicly denounces her conduct, declaring: "But for Miss Harleigh's generosity you would be a pauper. That supposed legacy was from her—the woman you call the Vulture!"

BRUTE FORCE (Special—Two parts—October 22—Biograph -Reissue No. 20)—The cast: Robert Harron, Mae Marsh, Charles H. Mailes, Jenny Lee, W. J. Butler.

On ladies' night at the club, a discussion of man's evolution and possible re-incarnation arises between the young author and his clubmates. Piqued by his sweetheart's flirtation with a rival, the young man drains his first cocktail to the dregs and falls asleep over the tale of "Weakhands and Lilywhite." This is a story of prehistoric days, founded upon the famous Biograph picture, "Man's Genesis," in which Weakhands is shown triumphant over his enemies through the invention of the stone club.

The author dreams that he is Weakhands, leader of the Stone Club men, who inhabit the upper caves of a great antediluvian mountain. With Lilywhite and his band, he is living peacefully when Monkeywalk, leader of the Low Cave men, seeks another dwelling place and invades the territory of the Stone Clubs. Monkeywalk's men have just come through a devastating war and there is only one woman left in the tribe. So the Low Cave men covet the wives of Weakhands' men and attempt a raid. Thanks to the stone club, they are beaten off; but they appropriate Weakhands' idea, fashion clubs of their own, and by superior force abduct the women, Lilywhite included.

Weakhands and his men, after futile attempts at rescue, are practically besieged in their cave by Monkeywalk, and are facing annihilation when Weakhands makes another invention. While sitting moodily he flicks the string of a whip. The idea of the bow and arrow is evolved. The weapon does such terrible execution among Monkeywalk's men that the Stone Clubs are emboldened to make another attempt at freeing their women. They are successful; Lilywhite and her companions, after several attempts to escape, are rescued; and Weakhands is again acclaimed a hero.

THE BANKER AND THE THIEF (October 23)—The cast: Herbert Barrington, Hector V. Sarno, Isabel Rea.

Because the bank president has taken the unsecured notes of a friend for large loans, he is in a predicament. The friend promises to raise the money if possible, to avert an investigation next day. The banker's selfish wife scolds him for his refusal to attend a ball, and goes off alone, while he, convinced that he faces imprisonment, determines to kill himself. He is interrupted by the entrance of a female burglar. At pistol's point she declares that she is not a regular thief, but stole that she might send her ailing husband to the country. The banker, incredulous, offers her five hundred dollars if she will prove her love by drinking poison, and she consents. But she drinks only water. Convinced at last, he sends her home rejoicing to her husband, of whose restoration to health she can now be assured. Her daring act has saved the banker, too, for just then the telephone rings and his friend announces that the money has been raised.

LUBIN.

THE LONELY FISHERMAN (Oct. 18).—The cast: Melvin Mayo, Dorothy Barrett, Jay Morley.

Job Morris, a hunchback fisherman, has his life embittered by the aversion shown him by the townspeople. He makes one last attempt to gain the companionship of his kind, but meeting the same rebuff as always, retires to his lonely cabin. A little waif is washed in to the shore. As the years pass, Job's love for the little girl grows until she is the one thing in life for him. He hopes that, some day, she will marry him. Here again he is to be sorely disappointed, for a youth appears and the girl soon falls in love with his youth and beauty. Job sees them at their love making, and wild with passion and jealousy upbraids them for being false to him. That night on the fishing grounds they fight for the possession of the girl. The girl is thrown from the boat in the fight and is cast upon the rocks by the waves, where she is found by Job, who carries her to the arms of her young sweetheart.

CUTTING DOWN EXPENSES (Oct. 19).—The cast: David L. Don, Mary Charleson, Jack Delson.

John Wilson on his wedding day is advised by a friend to purchase two cut-rate tickets. By doing so, he can save forty dollars on his trip to San Francisco. John takes the advice and buys a Pullman ticket for himself and wife. Things go along nicely and they are given a great send off. They arrive at the train; the porter ushers them to a seat. John discovers that the names on the tickets read Mary Ann Ohoolahan and Quickolfritsheim. He tells his wife about the awful predicament he is in and they both begin practicing to spell the names. The conductor comes along; they are nearly frightened to death. A young man is ushered in who has purchased the upper berth over them.

The conductor takes the ticket of the man in front of them who is told by conductor that his ticket is not his, being a cut-rate ticket. The man refuses to pay his fare and is put off the train. John and his wife are now frightened; he tells his wife they will have to be strangers the rest of the journey. She cries; John rushes to the smoking car; the conductor arrives and takes the tickets. The Pullman conductor asks for Pullman tickets. John gives him his ticket, but the conductor refuses to take it. John, embarrassed, says, "I forgot to get one." Conductor says, "Well, all berths are taken," and goes on through the car.

John is compelled to stay up all night. He tries several times to talk to his wife, but each time when he is near her berth the porter interrupts him by saying, "Anything I can do for you?" At last John makes one more attempt. This time the young man in the upper berth looks out, orders him away and makes a noise. All the passengers look out and John makes a hasty exit.

The next morning they hurry away to a hotel, are assigned to a room, when the young man, who occupied the upper berth, comes in and sees them. He tells the clerk they are not married. The clerk calls the house detective; he goes to the room. John lets him in. The detective orders them out, when John pulls out the certificate of marriage and kicks him out.

NELL OF THE DANCE HALL (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 20).—The cast: Edythe Sterling, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Adelaide Bronti, Robert Gray, Melvin Mayo.

Nell, a Western dance hall girl, is under the influence of Ben Keats. The proprietor, Rev. Miles Justine, lives nearby and one day saves Nell from the unwelcome attention of Keats. The dance hall is raided a few nights later and Nell escapes to the minister's home. The Rev. Justine thwarts the pursuing police. and throws them off the track. The minister then exacts a promise from Nell never to return to the old life and offers her a home.

Soon a love affair develops, and Keats, determined to get Nell back, tells the church trustees of her history. The trustees order the Rev. Justine to give her up. Nell overhears his promise to do so, determines to take her leave, and disappears, leaving an explanatory note. She finds a home with Jerry, the church sexton, and begins work in a factory. The Rev. Justine is stricken with brain fever, and in his delirium calls constantly for Nell. She learns of this through Jerry and rushes to his bedside. Nell's attentions are noted by the church trustees. An indignation meeting is called and the Rev. Justine is expelled from the church.

To prolong his life the minister is ordered to the mountains. Nell, learning that he is penniless, plans to get the money to send him away. Refused in her every demand and as a last resort she returns to the dance hall, continuing to send money to the minister, which he believes to be coming from the church trustees. Restored to health, Rev. Justine returns and learns of Nell's return to the old life. He is unrelentful until by comparison of handwriting he realizes who his benefactor has been. The truth dawns upon him and with it comes his forgiveness. Nell is led to a newer and better life as his wife.

WHEN YOUTH IS AMBITIOUS (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 21).—The cast: Robert Cain, Mary Charleson, Francis Joyner, George Clarke, Mrs. Magee, Rosetta Brice, Liela Frost.

John Forbes and Mary Blake live in a boarding house and are pledged in their love. John, an ambitious man, meets his employer's daughter, Jennie Jeffreys, and deciding to sacrifice ambition for true love, jilts Mary and marries Jennie. Mary marries, but in resignation, and in later years her daughter, Nanette, becomes stenographer in the plant of Jeffreys & Forbes. There she meets Philip Forbes, the son of her mother's old time sweetheart, and they fall in love. John does not know of his son's love, nor the identity of Nanette. Neither does Nanette's mother realize the identity of Philip Forbes.

John Forbes becomes enamored of Nanette and, because of his wife's death, the consequent loneliness and the reflection of his spoiled life makes a strong plea for her love. Nanette takes Philip to her home and introduces him to her mother. Realization of her own better teaching and the similarity of her daughter's love affair forces her to request that Nanette resign her position.

In the interim John Forbes, at an opportune moment, confesses his love to Nanette and is overheard by Philip. In a rage, he attacks his father, just at the arrival of Nanette's mother, who recognizes John Forbes. There is a moment of tenseness; a breaking down of the two older people, while the young man claims his love for Nanette and takes the bewildered girl away, while Mary and John confront one another. The mother denounces Forbes and explains to him the awful endurance of her past life and leaves him.

A WOMAN RECLAIMED (Oct. 22).—The cast: Alan Quinn, Joseph W. Smiley, William Cohill, Lilie Leslie.

Rose Carson, a spirited young woman, has never had a chance to live an honorable life. Reared in a family of thieves, she has become a big card among the light-fingered gentry, glorying in her skill as a thief of international reputation and priding in her title, "The Queen of Diamonds." Rose has never known love. Her nemesis proves to be Larry Moran, a young Central Office detective, working under Chief McCall, who has taken a fatherly interest in the young sleuth's advancement. Larry has seen Rose on her first appearance in the city and, not knowing her record, has fallen under the spell of her charms. Even after he has been told of her identity by the Chief he still cannot resist her fascination. The Chief one day sees him looking fondly at Rosie's photograph in the Rogues' Gallery. He resolves to put the boy to the test.

Rose, visiting a fence run by Spanish Ed, is tipped off to a job by that worthy, who is one of her many admirers. She readily accepts the tip, but repulses his advances. Ed resolves on revenge and manages to get information to Police Headquarters that Rose is to crack a safe that night at a wealthy uptown residence. At headquarters the Chief assigns Larry to make the "pinch" alone. Larry resolves to put his duty as an officer before all else and conceals himself that night in the marked house. Rose, unsuspecting, walks into the trap. After a strenuous struggle, Larry succeeds in shackling Rose's wrist to his own with handcuffs. Rose resorts to woman's most compelling weapon, tears.

Swayed by his secret love for her Larry yields to her pleadings to be released from the humiliating cuffs. As he unfastens the cuff from his arm, however, Rose, her criminal instincts predominating, deals him a vicious blow on the head with the loosened bracelet and he sinks unconscious to the floor. Rose then attempts to find the key to the cuffs, but in so doing she comes upon the evidence of Ed's betrayal and also proof that the young detective himself loves her. At this moment the Chief, who has just rounded up Ed and his gang in a raid, comes to the marked house to verify his suspicions. Rose hides and the Chief finds Larry alone, the loot and the lady missing. When Larry comes to, he is given a brow beating by his superior officer that leaves nothing for him to do but to resign from the service. But as the Chief turns momentarily away Rose, who now realizes that an honest man really loves her, comes from her hiding place and, quickly snapping the handcuff back on Larry's wrist, returns the loot. As the Chief returns he finds that after all the young officer has made the "pinch."

Sometime later, after Rose has served her sentence, and accepted Larry's love, it is conclusively proved to the Chief that the reformation of the once notorious "Queen of Diamonds" is a fact. We leave the lovers receiving the Chief's blessing as he tears the picture of Rose that once hung in the Rogues' Gallery.

PLAYING HORSE (Oct. 23).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Mae Hotely, George Clarke, Patsy De Forest, Earl White.

Bill is a brave man in spots, but as his wedding day approaches he decides that he is not brave enough to marry Betsy and he slips away without saying good-bye other than in a letter. Hyppolite, the Hypnotist, discharges one of his assistants for being so impertinent as to ask for some money, and hires Bill to be a "horse," as the fake subjects are called. Bill doesn't like the idea until he sees that Dolly, a decidedly attractive young woman, is also a "horse."

Eventually Bill and Hyppolite come to blows over Dolly and the "horses" kick him out, because they think he has been holding out salaries on them. Bill puts on a beard and turns hypnotist himself. All might have gone well had not Hyppolite, walking back to New York, stopped to ask for a hand-out from Betsy, who sits mourning over Bill's picture. He tells where Bill is and that night there are two in the audience who take an unusual interest in the performance. Indeed the entire audience feels that money's worth has been given—and Hyppolite gets the show back.

IN THE MIDST OF THE WILDS (Jungle Zoo—Oct. 16).—Jan Kraga and his daughter, Meta, receive a call from Kraga's friend, John Morgan. With Morgan comes Sir John Herschell, who is studying African farming. Hans Vedder, a neighboring farmer, loves Meta and is displeased when his love is not returned. It is almost love at first sight with Meta and Sir John, and Hans, seeing the trend of events, is infuriated.

Hans goes to Kraga and demands that Meta name a wedding day, and Kraga promises him that she shall do so. Meta refuses her father's demand that she marry Hans, and he orders her from their home. Armed with a small knife, she wanders into the jungle. There she is attacked by a ferocious leopard, and, bleeding from many wounds, she escapes death by a miracle. Her father, with Hans, Sir John and others, find her later with a huge elephant with whom she has made friends and which animal is conducting her from the jungle wilds. Kraga shows remorse and the girl is taken to Morgan's home, where, upon her convalescence, she agrees to marry Sir John.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

The Universal Film Mfg. Company has made several changes in its releases. Instead of releasing the two-reel Rex picture entitled "The House With the Drawn Shades" on Sept. 19, as originally scheduled it has been postponed until October 8. A synopsis of this subject can be found on page 1728 of the issue dated September 4. On September 19 "The Pine's Revenge," a two-reel Rex, was released, and a description of this offering was published on page 2062 of the September 18 issue. In order that its program for the week of Monday, September 13, should not exceed twenty-eight reels, the Universal Company has postponed the release of the Imp one-reel subject for that week, named "Bashful Glen," until October 4. It was announced for release on September 14, and a story of the picture can be found on page 1727 of the issue dated September 4.

The Joker "Fifty Dollars For a Kiss," which was originally scheduled for release on Oct. 9, and a description of which was given on page 328 of last week's issue, has been temporarily withdrawn from the program and is replaced with the Joker "No Babies Allowed," a story of which is published in this issue.

POWERS.

THE HERO OF THE GRIDIRON (October 7)—This film shows Charles E. Brickley, the famous Harvard football captain and star, illustrating how the great college game should be played. He initiates a beginner into the mysteries of falling on the ball; shows how a lineman should conduct himself on offense and defense; illustrates side and straight tackling; straight and handspring blocking; interfering, drop kicking with a close-up of his famous self-patented square toe; place kicking; correct method of holding the ball on place kick; forward passing; the kick off; punting; position of the hand in forward passing; catching and fixing ball so it can't be punched out of the crook of the arm; dodging, side-stepping and straight-arming and passing from the center for a kick or a run.

THE ACROBAT'S DREAM (On same reel as foregoing)—Two acrobats prepare to go to sleep. One of them dreams that the other is dead and sees himself performing his act alone. He goes through all his contortions with his partner inert, slams the dead man about with the greatest abandon, and does all sorts of impossible stunts. He flings the lifeless body about and it falls in various attitudes with alarming thumps. The interest of the act centers around the apparently lifeless contortionist's suppleness and ability to withstand the punishment and ill treatment of his partner, who throws him around mercilessly.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK, Series No. 9, "When the Wets Went Dry" (Oct. 14).—The cast: Milton Moranti, Gale Henry, Max Asher, Wm. Franey and Lillian Peacock.

This is another comedy, in which trick photography plays a large part. It is a travesty on the temperance question, siding with the dry element. On the refusal of the Governor to sign a bill in favor of the liquor interest, the political boss tries to force the executive to his will. The Governor, after a series of thrilling experiences, thwarts the efforts of the politicians. The latter calls on Lady Baffles, who impersonates the Governor's wife and secures the executive's signature to the bill. Detective Duck, however, captures the politicians in a clever manner and beats Lady Baffles at her own game.

THE THIRD PARTNER (Oct. 12).—The cast: Sydney Ayres, Wm. Canfield, Val Paul, Doris Pawn.

A scheming and corrupt political faction, in order to get a certain bill passed, appoints Fred Hilton to abduct Justus Miles, a lawyer, who is connected with the association fighting for the passage of the measure, so that the bill can be put through without objection. Miles' partner, however, learns of the intrigue and determines to circumvent the plot by having his nephew, Christy Brehm, a young attorney, act as Miles' private secretary, but in reality to perform the duties of a detective.

Brehm transacts his business in the country home of Miles, and in the course of time Myra, the daughter of his employer, begins to feel a growing attachment for the young man, but the secretary realizing his position does not express more than a friendly attitude toward her notwithstanding that he is inwardly infatuated. Womanly, she knows that he loves her, but cannot understand his apparent indifference. To arouse his jealousy more than anything else she associates with Fred Hilton, a guest. Knowing Hilton's reputation, Brehm decides to keep a close watch on him.

The kidnapping is to take place shortly, and Hilton, the next time that Miles takes his eve-

SELF MADE EXHIBITOR TO

No. 1

New York City, October 1, 1915.

My Dear Bill:

It pleased me to learn that you had decided to take over that house in Providence. It is certainly true that the day is past when a chap can run a shoestring into a limousine in the exhibiting game without paying as much attention to his business as does the average night watchman, but it is also true that there still remains a lot of money to be made by the exhibitor who will look out for the little details.

The equipment which you have selected, it strikes me, is of the best, and I am especially well pleased with your selection of a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. Of course, you do not deserve such a great amount of credit for this selection, as even the rawest cub in the business knows that the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE is the only screen that comes anyways near meeting the exhibitor's real requirements. Without it there can be no projection worthy of the name, and with any other screen that I have ever seen there are entirely too many "walk-outs" with that "tired-eye" feeling. And this class of walk-outs, you know, never come back. I suspect, too, that your choice of a screen has been influenced to some extent by the experience which you know me to have had during the many years which I have been in business. Never, you know, have I gotten further than a ten-minute demonstration with any screen other than a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE.

I will be very much interested in knowing what progress you are making and hope that you will write me often. Any help which I can give you is, of course, yours for the asking.

Yours,

ning walk, signals his hirelings, who by a previous arrangement, have been stationed outside the house. But their plans are frustrated by Brehm, who has learned of the scheme and who comes to the aid of Miles. Meanwhile Hilton, who is under the impression that his plot has been successfully carried out and who takes Myra's attentions to be genuine, is making violent love to her when he is interrupted by Brehm, who places him in the hands of waiting detectives.

When Brehm later hands in his resignation Miles, who is highly pleased with the young man's work and kindness, refuses to accept it and urges him to stay. At this juncture the partner of Miles appears and introduces Brehm as his nephew. Miles has always been hesitant about bringing a third partner into the concern, but readily agrees to make Brehm a member of the concern. Later all differences settled, Myra and Brehm become engaged.

THE VENGEANCE OF GUIDO (Oct. 16).—The cast: Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Jack Sterling, Clara Horton.

Guido Morea and his sister, Nydia, forced to leave Italy, seek refuge in California. While the two are crossing one of the streets Nydia is killed by an auto driven by Willie Vail. The party are taken to the police station, but Vail, because of his wealthy connections, is liberated. Unable to find work in the city, Guido goes to the vineyards and gets a job with Adam Strohm. In his spare time Guido works to perfect his invention which throws a light so powerful that it will melt a bar of iron. One day Strohm and his daughter, Mary, come upon him at work and he explains the invention to them. Guido has taken quite a fancy to the girl and loves her for her many kindnesses, but holds his love in check, thinking she is not for him. Mary, too, has taken quite an interest in him.

Willie Vail, who is a friend of the Strohms and suitor for the hand of Mary, pays them a visit. He is recognized by Guido and the latter's face hardens when Willie barely misses running Mary down. Vail takes Mary riding in the car and Guido sees him barely miss running into some children along the road. Mary quarrels with Willie over this and makes him take her home. When they arrive Guido, overcome with rage at the man's recklessness, overpowers him and takes him to his shack, determined to fix his hands so he will never run another child down.

Just as he places Vail in front of his invention and starts to turn on the light Mary rushes in and saves the unlucky Vail. Guido tells of the death of his sister and how he thinks Vail should be cured of his recklessness. Mary's protests result in Vail getting free and Guido, thinking all is lost, prepares to depart. Mary then tells him he is so different from others and smilingly he tells her that back in Italy once he was rich. Because he hated war and would not turn his invention over to the government he was banished and brought his little sister to America, thinking to find happiness. When he tells of her death he breaks down and Mary, overcome by love, tells him she is not banishing him. Guido takes her into his arms, and in the distance Vail is seen carefully driving, his lesson learned.

NESTOR.

SOME FIXER (Oct. 11).—The cast: Corinne Lessler, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Jane Waller.

Corinne and Eddie have all the symptoms of "calf love," but father is not willing that his only daughter should leave him in the lurch and takes drastic measures to break off the attachment. Lee and father have always been good friends and Lee, being one of the easy-going kind, father never thinks he would be capable of loving the girl, so throws her with Lee on every occasion.'

Lee soon finds the girl has her attractions and plans the downfall of his opponent. Corinne stills thinks Eddie is the only one, and Lee has to be careful not to let her suspect. Accordingly he tells Lee that at Corinne's suggestion he will devote himself to Jane, especially in the presence of father, in order to make it appear that he is deeply in love with her. Eddie doesn't like this plan, but is forced to try it, as father makes it so hot for him that he can't see Corinne.

The plan works fine, for Lee, for on the next meeting, Corinne sees Eddie busily engaged with Jane and is highly indignant. Eddie finally flatly demands that he be permitted to see the girl. Lee tells him that he will arrange it that night, and takes Corinne out for a stroll and proposes to her. She, seeing the constant love-making between her former lover and Jane, consents, and they make all arrangements for an elopement.

Lee leaves Eddie in his room while he goes for Corinne, and drops a note beneath Jane's door, telling her to meet him in ten minutes on the porch, and signs it Eddie. He and Corinne are just ready to get in the auto, when Corinne's father catches them. Eddie has come down to meet Corinne, but it turns out to be Jane. When Corinne's father sees who is to be his son-in-law, he withdraws his objections and everything is settled amicably, even Eddie finding out that Jane has her attractions after all.

AND THE BEST MAN WON (Oct. 15).—The cast: Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallagher, Neal Burns, George French.

The boy has long tried to get the girl to consent to an engagement with him, and finally succeeds. Papa tells them that he has just closed a contract with a famous and handsome artist, Jene Van Wheeler, to paint the girl's portrait. The boy doesn't like the idea of a man painting his sweetheart's picture, and says so, but the girl laughingly puts his objections aside, and even her father tells the boy that he should not be afraid, as the girl loves only him. The artist falls in love with his subject, and the girl, for a lark, encourages him. Things drift along this way until one day the boy comes in just as the artist kisses the girl. He tells the girl's father, and when the girl seeks him out later, they quarrel and she hands the boy back his engagement ring. Father is wrought up over the artist's love-making to his daughter and tells him to finish the picture as soon as possible. Papa's prohibition arouses the girl's ire, and the artist finally persuades her to elope with him.

The boy and his chum have gotten off for the day and are taking an auto ride, when they meet with an accident and fall in a ditch. The boy drops in at his minister's home and upon finding that the minister is away, they proceed to dress up in his clothes, believing he will not object when he hears their story. Hearing a noise outside, they look out and see the girl and the artist coming in. The boy surmises that they are coming to get married and his chum plans a trick on them. The boy blacks his face up and the chum acts as minister, and when the elopers come in and ask to be married, the pseudo minister agrees to perform the ceremony. The minister returns at this inopportune moment and the chum takes him upstairs to explain. They find out that he is a new minister and does not know the boy at all.

The girl has decided that she really loves the artist after all and regrets her decision, when the police, who have been chasing the elopers for speeding, arrive. Things are finally settled, and the boy and girl decide that as long as they have a minister convenient they will save time and money by getting married at once, which is done amid the congratulations of all. The artist is led off to pay for his reckless speeding.

REX.

A MOTHER'S ATONEMENT (Three Parts—Oct. 17).—The cast: Cleo Madison, Lon Chaney, Ben Rothwell, M. K. Wilson, W. Standing, A. Shirley and Miss Manning.

Old Ben Morrison and his daughter, Jen, an unsophisticated girl, live on an island not far from the mainland. Jasper Crane, middle-aged sensualist of the rougher type, bargains with Jen's father, in hopes of marrying and gaining possession of the girl. Morrison is willing, and explains that she is like her mother, who deserted her home and baby for a city man. Jen, hearing of her father's plan, makes her escape by swimming to the mainland, where she seeks protection from Mrs. Hilton and her daughter, Dorothy, members of a camping party. James Hilton, Dorothy's brother, falls in love with Jen. Kent, a refined sensualist of the party, covets the girl, but finds his plans checked at each turn by James. Knowledge of James' affection for Jen reaches his mother's ears, and she informs her daughter that things are going too far and the strange girl must go. Jen overhears the conversation between Mrs. Hilton and her daughter, and realizes that she is not wanted. Kent, noticing the girl's discomfiture, gives her a sum of money for expense and advises her to call at his office in the city, should she ever want for anything.

Alice, Jen's mother, served for a time as the plaything of John Newton, the man with whom she ran away, but when he tired of her she drifted into a vulgar blase set. Jen, unable to secure work in the city, writes to Kent for aid. Kent is engaged to marry Dorothy Hilton and plans to celebrate the closing days of bachelorhood on board his palatial yacht. John Newton, who is just returning from an extended European trip, is also to be in the party. Kent and his cronies plan a surprise for Newton. Knowing his former relations with Alice Morison, they plan to have her as one of the party. At the party Alice is discovered by Newton and strange emotions surge in the breasts of the pair.

At the height of the party Kent receives Jen's letter asking for aid and he plans to add to the zest of the party by showing them an unsophisticated girl. He accordingly sends for Jen. She arrives, and Alice recognizes her daughter, although she cannot reveal her true identity to her child. Back in the offices of Kent & Hilton, who are partners, news comes of a financial crisis, and James Hilton leaves hurriedly to communicate with his partner aboard the yacht. When he finally arrives he is shocked to see Jen, plainly embarrassed, in the midst of the mad riot aboard the yacht. He takes her from the place, and Newton, seeing what Alice is undergoing, suffers a change of heart. He asks her for a chance to atone for the past, and begs her to lead a life worthy of her daughter, he to supply the means. Kent drops out of the party suddenly and hurries to the mainland. On the deck of the yacht, alone, James and Jen plight their love anew. Alice, the result of her past sin apparent, sinks down overcome, while Newton endeavors to quiet her tumultuous emotions, realizing his own part in the tragedy so narrowly averted.

LAEMMLE.

THE GIRL OF THE DANCE HALL (Three Parts—Oct. 14).—The cast: Agnes Vernon, E. P. Evers, Ray Hanford, Malcoln Blevins.

In a small western town, Dora Matthews, an orphan, works behind the lunch counter at Hawkin's restaurant. Faro Revere, a gambler, is paying attention to Dora and escorts her home after work. Hawkins gets married and tells Dora that her services will be no longer required as his wife will work in the lunch room. This, of course, leaves Dora without any means of livelihood. Revere pretends to sympathize with her and obtains work for her at the dance hall.

Some time passes. Ralph Allen, a mining engineer, coming to the town, sees Dora in the dance hall and becomes interested in her. He finally learns that she is living with Revere. His sympathy is aroused, for he feels that she is living this life from necessity and not from choice. Revere acts brutally toward Dora and occasionally beats her. One night, when passing their cabin, Ralph protects Dora and Revere and learns that she is not married. At this moment the sheriff comes on and arrests Revere for a crime in another county. Ralph, sorry for Dora, gives her money with which to leave town. The same night Revere escapes from the jail and makes his way to the city. Later, Ralph comes back to the city and is met at the train by Wilfred Oliver, his close friend, and taken to his home. Oliver introduces his wife, whom Ralph recognizes as Dora, but he keeps her secret.

In the meantime, Revere has found Dora through an accident that occurred at the time of her wedding, and has blackmailed her. Ralph learns this and Oliver, seeing them talking, becomes suspicious. Revere gets in trouble in a low dive and is again obliged to leave town. He sends a note to Dora, telling her to come to a certain spot with money for him. Ralph finds her reading the note and tells her that he will settle matters with Revere. After he has gone, Dora becomes alarmed and follows to the appointed place.

At the dive, a struggle takes place between Revere and Ralph, and as Revere is about to shoot him, Red, a crook and an ancient enemy of Revere's, kills him. Dora arrives just as

The husband, in a jealous rage, follows them home and accuses Ralph of being intimate with his wife. After a scene, Ralph tells Oliver of Dora's past and how he was helping her free herself from Revere's influence. Reconciliation follows.

VICTOR.

A KENTUCKY IDYL (Two Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: J. Warren Kerrigan, Ethel Phillips, T. D. Crittenden, Helen Leslie and Norbert Myles.

Lees Point, a small town in the mountains of Kentucky, is owned by Bill Cameron. Madge Lee is Cameron's woman and assists him in all his deviltries. The Rev. Plante and his daughter, Cynthia, arrive to take charge of the parish, and on asking Cameron for the keys to the church, is refused until he introduces Cameron to Cynthia. Attracted by this unusual type of girl, Cameron decides to let the misionary stay at Lees Point and turns over the keys.

Attendance is small at the church, however, and the minister is about to return whence he came, when Bill decides he is in love with Cynthia and calls upon her. The father refuses to let him even see his daughter on the grounds that he is not a Christian. Bill thinks the matter over, closes his saloon and forces all the inhabitants to go to church. He is then allowed to call upon the girl. Madge, in the meantime, seeing how matters are going, takes up with Bolton out of jealousy, and the two of them proceed to plunge deeper into the mire.

Cameron proposes to Cynthia, but is rejected, and out of spite, reopens the saloon. In a few weeks things are as they were at the beginning. Then Cameron realizes that there was something in church besides the girl and decides that he really loves Madge. This decision made, he again closes his saloon, "does the right thing by Madge" and Lees Point "gets religion for keeps."

GOLD SEAL.

THE KISS OF DISHONOR (Two Parts—Oct. 12).—The cast: Jane Novak, Frank MacQuarrie, Frank Newberg, Ronald Bradbury, Bill Cauffield, Anna Lehr.

Bonny, being left alone in the world by her mother's death, is taken up by the minister and becomes one of his household. The little waif is often melancholy and the only thing that assuages her grief is the playing of Rigo, a poor young hunchback, on his violin. As the years pass by the two become inseparable. Ray Harding, seeking a vacation from the city, pitches his tent in the village where Bonny, now a girl, lives. They eventually meet and become deeply interested in each other. Rigo sees the growing intimacy, but is powerless to avert it, and secretly pines for the girl's love himself.

The young girl is captivated by the city man and they finally elope. Ray is true to the girl and upon their arrival in the city marries her. Their first few months are happy, but soon the little country girl palls upon the cosmopolite, and he seeks other society. Rigo has come to the city and spends his time searching for Bonny, in vain. One night Bonny sees her husband kiss another woman and, upon asking him for an explanation, he flies into a fierce rage. Frightened, she determines to return to the minister's home and leaves Ray a note saying good-bye. Dore, the artist and a friend of Ray, comes to the village to paint, and unknowingly comes upon Bonny and her little baby. The picture appeals to him and finally her consent is gained for him to paint her and the baby.

He finishes the painting and returns to the city, where Ray meets him. As they are going to the artist's home. Rigo sees Ray and recognizes him. He follows the two men, and on their arrival at the house, Dore, noticing his friend's agitation, goes for a drink. In his absence Rigo attacks Harding, but they are parted when Dore returns and switches on the lights. In the flare of light Rigo and Harding stand spellbound gazing at a life-sized photo of Bonny and her baby. Explanations follow and Rigo exacts a promise from Harding that he will return to his wife and baby. But the minister refuses to see him and orders him away. Bonny rushes out and, snatching up the baby, returns. Then the old minister is unable to keep blood from blood an gives his consent and Bonny joyfully joins her husband. Rigo returns to the village, his mission completed, and although his heart is almost broken, he has been true to his trust and the now happy husband and wife listen to the plaintive notes of the violin as Rigo leaves them in their happiness.

L-KO.

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT (Two Parts—Oct. 13).—The cast: Gertrude Selby, Gene Rogers, Alice Howell, Ray Griffith.

The stenographer was entirely too pretty for the equilibrium of the office force, and both clerks and the boss found themselves off balance. The boss had the avantage of authority in the office, but unluckily he didn't have the same at home, and when his spouse happened in and interrupted a little conversation he was having with the stenographer, said stenographer went out by express orders of the wife.

This didn't help matters, however, as Gertie came back in boy's clothes, got her old job back, and also got wifey stuck on her. The ensuing trouble is best left untold, with the exception of a secret meeting at the cafe, an intercepted note, and an important disclosure just at the wrong time. The whole affair would have been far better if wifey had not attempted to take over the office under her management and Gertie had not imagined she could get away with the men's clothes effect.

DOES FLIRTING PAY (Oct. 17).—The cast: Harry Gribbons, May Emory.

Did flirting pay? Mr. Rawsberry apparently thought it was going to, for he established a regular flirting headquarters behind a screen door and sallied forth to prey upon the ladies who came to look in a lingerie store. He came out once too often when a 200-pound escort was there waiting for the lady Mr. Rawsberry was trying to get acquainted with, and Mr. Rawsberry made a hasty exit. His next trysting place was a cafe, where the "chickens" congregate, and he figured to grab one.

He was luckier than he anticipated, as he discovered the lady who had smitten him in the first of the story. He made eyes at her and her escort left. Mr. Rawsberry thought he left through cowardice, and he went over to the lady's table. He was just in time to get the other man's check for dinner. He demanded to see the proprietor, but the proprietor was a gentleman he had wronged in his early life, and he had been looking for Mr. Rawsberry for twenty years. An account of the meeting is best left out. Suffice to say that many edibles and soups were wasted in the ensuing excitement. Mr. Rawsberry decided that flirting does not pay.

BISON.

THE YELLOW STAR (Three Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast: Marie Walcamp, Frank Newbery, Kingsley Benedict.

The Secret Service is baffled by a band that is smuggling in Chinese. The chief of the department has assigned Robert Wharton to take charge of the case and in spite of his utmost efforts the smugglers are still at large. William Harwood is chief clerk to the chief of the service, and on the side is connected with the smugglers. Claire Morton, one of the stenographers in the office, and Robert are sweethearts. The office is tipped off regarding the arrival of a ship from the Orient, suspected of carrying contraband Chinese, and the chief assigns Robert to the case. Robert and his men watch the ship and observe a gang unloading a cargo of big boxes. They are suspected and followed to their den, but the smugglers are too wary for them and the boxes, on being opened, contain merchandise. On making his report to the chief, Robert receives a reprimand and is told that he will be given one more chance.

The Secret Service Office receives a call that night from the night watchman, and Robert with his men hurry to the scene. Howard, one of the smugglers, is shot. Robert picks up a yellow star one of the smugglers dropped, and is again reprimanded for his failure when he returns to the office. Howard does not appear at his desk the next day and Claire, who has been assigned to do his work, finds stationery bearing an imprint of the yellow star, a code book, and concludes that he is one of the smugglers. Robert turns in his resignation and the chief tells him that if he can apprehend the smugglers, he will make a big jump up the ladder of promotion. While wandering about the warehouses, he sees a gang of linemen at work and, showing his star, climbs to the top of a house and peers in. He sees men going into a secret room and each of them shows a yellow star like the one he has found. Robert leaves unnoticed by the gang. On his arrival at the office, Claire tells him of her discoveries.

She pleads for a chance to take the letter to the smugglers on the pretext she comes from Harwood. He finally consents and she is successful in finding her way to their room. Robert and his men follow and hide nearby. When she starts to leave, one of the men insists on returning with her to Harwood to collect the money and she is powerless to resist. As soon as she and the smuggler come out, Robert conceives a plan and, calling an officer to his aid, captures the man and Claire. The smuggler escapes, however, and hurries to Harwood and tells of his experience. Harwood accompanies him back to the den. Claire tells of her experiences and Robert plans to capture the gang that night.

She again returns to the house, and says Harwood was short of money, when Harwood himself steps out. She is bound and gagged. Meanwhile, Robert and his men have surrounded the place and have a revenue cutter nearby. In the excitement the trap in the floor is opened and Claire falls through. Bob sees her in the water and, diving in, saves her. He then gives the signal and his men rush in. The gang is all run in and Robert insists that all the credit is due to Claire, but she, happy in the thought of his promotion, modestly refuses the credit and tells the chief that it is due to Robert's aggressive ability.

JOKER.

NO BABES ALLOWED (Oct. 9).—The cast: Milburn Moranti, Gale Henry, Max Asher, William Franey.

Freddie and his wife come to the city for a change and try to get lodgings, but in vain, for they have with them a small baby, and all lodging houses have signs out "No Babies Allowed." Concluding that they must spend the night in the street, Hubby suddenly remembers that he has an uncle in the city and they make all haste to reach his home. Uncle Schultz lives in state in his bachelor quarters and is attended by a negro servant. He and two cronies are having a fine time, when Freddie, wife and baby enter. There is a joyful meeting and after Freddie tells his troubles, Uncle agrees to care for the baby until they find lodgings. Relieved of the child, the pair now find little trouble in securing lodgings.

Uncle Schultz and his cronies find much enjoyment in the baby. Meanwhile, Freddie and his wife, settled at last, begin to long for their baby. Wife smuggles the baby into the house in a basket of vegetables. The youngster begins to cry and the landlady tells the young people to either move or put the baby in a foundling home. They agree to the latter course. The infant is later adopted by Uncle Schultz. Feeling the loss of their child, Freddie and his wife decide to visit baby, but great is their astonishment to learn that it has been adopted. The clerk at the home is unable to give them the name of the person who adopted the child, as ink spilt on the register blots out the name. But Freddie and his wife, who run about the streets looking at every child they meet, come upon their beloved offspring as Uncle Schultz is taking the baby out for an airing. Explanations set everything right.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

THE MAN OF SHAME (Five Parts—Oct. 11).—Roger and Luvesan have a quarrel over cards and arrange to fight a duel at dawn. In the duel Luvesan loses two fingers. Having been made an outcast by his brother officers he hates Roger for it and vows vengeance on him. Roger returns to Paris, where he meets Julia, an adventuress. He falls in love with her—and then Roger is called to the front. There his life is saved by one Lucien de Noirville.

On their way to Paris, Roger is invited to Lucien's home and discovers that Julia is Lucien's wife. Out of duty to Lucien, Roger severs his friendship with Julia, who becomes resentful. Roger visits his uncle's country home and falls in love with Marie, the ward of his relation. Julia hears of the coming wedding of Roger and Marie and is furious. Seven years pass. Roger and Marie have a child, a girl of five. Roger is a devoted husband. Julia has made several attempts to win him back, but so far has failed.

Roger is a banker. He holds a large sum in trust for a rich man, Gerbier. Luvesan is constantly writing Gerbier that Roger's bank is in trouble. Luvesan and Gerbier meet. Luvesan shows Gerbier that he has drawn all his money from the bank and urges Gerbier to do likewise. Gerbier begins to think there is some truth in these rumors and goes to Roger to get his money. Just before this incident Julia has visited Roger and asks him to advance her 100,000 francs. When he refuses, she claims she will be arrested for her debts—and so, more for Lucien's sake than for her's—he gives her the loan and leaves his bank in difficulties.

When Gerbier asks for his money Roger cannot pay it. Gerbier demands it by the next day. Luvesan visits Julia and unfolds a plan to take 100,000 francs from Gerbier's safe, have Julia return them to Roger and then await results. Luvesan steals into Gerbier's home intent upon robbing. The old man makes a hard fight to save his gold, and in the struggle is killed. The child, Suzanne, sees all this from the balcony, and the wife is convinced of her husband's guilt when Roger gets money the next day. Letters found on Gerbier, asking him to wait for his money, lead to Roger's arrest. Lucien defends Roger at the trial, and dies suddenly from the shock on hearing that the money Roger received was sent to him by Julia.

The child is called upon to testify. Believing that she is helping her father, she persists in saying that she neither heard nor saw anything of the murder, and the mother is too ill to appear. Thus Roger is sentenced to life imprisonment. Marie visits Roger in jail and sees Luvesan lurking in the neighborhood of the prison. She is impressed with his striking resemblance to her husband and concludes that he is the real murderer.

Tristot, an old political friend, gets Roger out of jail at midnight and has a horse waiting to take him to an ocean steamer, where his wife is waiting with Suzanne to say farewell. She tells him of Luvesan, and Roger realizes that Luvesan, his old enemy, is the real criminal and refuses to leave the country, determined he will stay and prove his innocence. To prevent this Luvesan puts the police on his track as an escaped convict. Roger overhears a conversation between Luvesan and Julia and sends for her to visit him at his place of hiding. Julia goes there, believing that he wishes to renew his former love affair. Roger tries to get her to confess and she breaks down and tells him all.

Luvesan, who has tracked Roger, arrives ahead of the police, breaks in and covers Roger with a revolver. Julia, fearing for the man she loves, gets between, grabs at the gun. It goes off. She is shot as the police enter. She tells all, vindicates Roger and accuses Luvesan. The police, noting that Luvesan wants to run away, catch him. Julia dies, begging forgiveness. Luvesan is sent to jail, while Roger returns to his family.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURES.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 17, "The Castaways"—Two Parts—Oct. 10).—Count Frederick in his motor boat comes alongside the gigantic ocean liner demanding of the captain the release of Kitty Grey, whom he insists is on board. The captain denies that she is there and Count Frederick, feeling sure that she is some place on the boat, climbs aboard. After a heated argument the captain is about to force Count Frederick to leave the boat when he notices a strange expression on the faces of two of the deck hands whom he had sent to the hold of the ship when the passengers heard the strange cries. Thinking there might be some truth in what Count Frederick says, he calls the deck hands and demands that they go below to look again. Followed closely by Count Frederick and the captain, the two deck hands do their captain's bidding.

In the meantime in the hold of the ship the unconscious Roleaux comes to, just as the engineer discovers that a boiler has been tampered with.

Frederick, the captain and the two deck hands reach the hold of the boat and discover Roleaux, and after searching a while they find Kitty under a bundle of gunny-sacks. A commotion is heard on the main deck, and the captain, rushing ahead, comes face to face with the engineer, who tells him the trouble with the boiler. A moment later an explosion occurs and the ship starts to sink. Frederick and Roleaux keep hold of Kitty and try to get her into one of the lifeboats, but are forced back by the half-crazed women and other passengers.

Back in Grahaffen, Count Sachio and his king plan to get the other part of the charred paper which Sachio has found in the palace during the revolution. Seeking to gain entrance to the palace of Gretzhoffen, Sachio, relying on the weak character of King Michael, sends him a letter asking if they cannot again be friends. Kitty, Count Frederick and Roleaux succeed in grasping hold of a piece of wreckage as the ill-fated boat goes down. Other drowning passengers vainly trying to grasp the same piece of wreckage, finally force Roleaux and Count Frederick to loosen their hold on Kitty and the piece of wreckage. They try madly to swim to Kitty, but the drowning passengers prevent them from reaching her, and they helplessly flounder in the water, watching Kitty disappear from view. Grasping hold of a small piece of timber, Frederick and Roleaux keep afloat until unconsciousness overtakes them.

Frederick recovers with a terrible thirst He revives the unconscious Roleaux. By frantically waving a part of their clothing the men manage to attract the attention of the natives of a distant piece of land. Their rescuers cannot understand their language, but notwithstanding the natives take the shipwrecked men to land. In the meantime the other women that were on the same piece of wreckage all finally lose their hold, one by one, until Kitty is left alone with no one in sight but the floating bodies. She finally loses consciousness, and after what seems several hours she awakens to find herself not in midocean, but on the beach of a strange island. Kitty is about to get up when she sees rising from behind the palm trees wild-looking natives raising their spears. They crawl toward her as the episode ends.

THE CORSICAN BROTHERS UP TO DATE (Oct. 4).—The cast: Will Browning, Edith Thornton, Joe Burke and W. G. Don.

The Corsican Brothers, Nap and Bony, both fall in love with the Count's daughter. Nap is fat and Bony is thin. Naturally, the fat brother falls the harder. The Count does not approve of his daughter's suitor, so he sends the soul of poor Nap to Elysium. The thin brother is left alone, but the fat one's spirit hovers near to guide and protect him. The Count finds it incumbent upon himself to continue his warfare on the remaining Corsican. He calls for a duel in the woods. Secretly, he instructs one of his soldiers to take a cannon behind the hill and fire at the brother while he is duelling with the Count. Thus does the cruel father mean to dispose a second time of his daughter's true love. The duel begins. It is some duel—for both the Count and the Corsican are fancy fencers. When, at last, the cannon goes off, the ball strikes the ground near the Corsican. Bony hurls it back at the man who shot it with such force that the soldier drops dead. The Count picks up a huge stick. But every time he tries to bring it down upon the head of the thin brother, the soul of the fat one appears, seizes the club and suspends it in mid-air. The bewildered Count cannot account for this trick. At last he gives it up. The thin brother wins the Count's daughter; while the soul of the fat brother, having saved Bony from destruction, ascends on high amidst the strains of hallelujah music.

like a toothpick, she fails to display to advantage the garments in which she parades for the delectation of the buyers. At last, Izzy's office manager persuades him to advertise for a beautiful model. Maisy, fair of form and face, answers the ad. She has been having trouble with her husband, who cannot see but that her last year's hat is good enough for another season, and the rebellious young wife is delighted when Izzy selects her out of the multitude of applicants.

Frank, Maisy's husband, finds a clue in the newspaper from which she has torn the advertisement, and buying another copy, discovers Izzy's address. Rushing to the cloak maker's establishment, he demands his wife. Izzy's protestations of ignorance are of no avail, for Frank suddenly spies on the table the source of all his troubles. "Whose hat is that?" he cries. "It's yours for a dollar," rejoins Izzy, always with an eye to business. Frank leaves in disgust. On the stairs, however, he hears Maisy's voice. Rushing back to thrash Izzy, Frank finds that again his recalcitrant bride has given him the slip.

An hour later he has the pleasure of rescuing Maisy from an embarrassing position in a restaurant, where Izzy has left her to pay the bill. They are attacked on the sidewalk by Izzy, who has equipped himself with boxing-gloves, putting a horse-shoe in one of the gloves for luck. By mistake, the cloak-maker places an uppercut on Maisy's jaw instead of her husband's. Muggs and her brother happen along, bent on revenge. They have Izzy arrested. Maisy goes home with her spouse. And Izzy is compelled to give Muggs back her old job.

FALSTAFF.

COUSIN CLARA'S COOK BOOK (Oct. 4).—The cast: William Howell, Winifred Lane and Riley Chamberlain.

Bings was a clever book agent—but he ran up against a snag in trying to dispose of "Cousin Clara's Cook Book." "It sure is a tough one," he confided to the manager of the branch office. "Perhaps it's the war. Anyway, something is wrong with the people. I don't mind the usual insults, and since I put that board in the seat of my trousers I thought I was immune. But the populace is finding all sorts of new ways to injure me. Besides, no one will buy a book." A pretty girl, who sat in the office, taking in the talk, raised to Bings a face eloquent with sympathy. Then she gazed appealingly at the manager, who promptly introduced Bings. "I am so sorry, Mr. Bings," murmured she, "so very, very sorry. You see, I wrote the book. I am Cousin Clara. Father is an invalid, and so poor. We have a tiny, tiny farm, with a big, big mortgage. I wanted to help. First, I wrote a play for Mr. Belasco, but he was too busy to reproduce it. So I decided to compose a cook book. The recipes really are excellent—at least, I have been told so." She dropped her eyes a moment, then glanced up again archly. "When our kind manager," she resumed, "said you were to handle the book, I rejoiced, for I had heard what a wonder you are. It discourages me deeply to learn that you have failed. Now I fear that nothing can keep the mortgage away from father's little farm!"

Cousin Clara wept gracefully, and the heart of Bings was touched. Also, it was a case of love at first sight. A desperate plan came to him. Calling up the editor of the local paper, and introducing himself as "Dr. Hupple," proprietor of a private sanitarium for the insane, he imparted an exciting piece of information. "One of my patients has escaped," he explained. "He is a sufferer from a disease with a long Latin name, which scarcely could be understood over the phone. The unfortunate man used to be a book agent, and I fear that his weak mind may return to his old vocation. Warn your readers that if he calls to solicit patronage, that they must immediately subscribe, no matter what the book may be. Give him money for a subscription and he is harmless. But refuse him, and I cannot answer for the consequences. He was the most dangerous patient I had, and is capable of handling with ease six strong men."

The paper printed the warning. It made a good story. All the neighborhood read it, and shuddered. The maniac book agent soon appeared. He was armed with "Cousin Clara's Cook Book"—and no one dared refuse to subscribe for a copy. After one busy day, however, he ceased to call. That night, ready to drop, Bings staggered into the office, his pockets bulging. He turned the pockets inside out. But did Cousin Clara fall into his arms, crying, "My preserver! Take your reward!" She did not. She marshalled forward a hulking youth, and thanking Bings sweetly for his exertions, explained that now she could marry Tommy Banks without waiting for him to get a raise of salary. Bings has left the book agent business forever.

DICKY'S DEMON DACHSHUND (Oct. 7).—The cast: Burnett Parker, Frances Keyes and William Carroll.

Dicky is a "Summer boy," doted upon by all the girls at Seacrest Villa. "A society man from New York," they call him—though the rumor also floats abroad that Dicky sells stockings at Macy's. This charge, however, is laid to some jealous male, and the girls are only too willing to discredit it. Three young men at the villa, who have been cut out by the newcomer, scheme to get even with Dicky. Their landlady despises dogs, and will not permit one on the premises. The conspirators send Dicky a letter, supposedly signed by a lady of rank, asking him to take care of her pet dog, Fritz, "from the imperial kennels in Berlin and valued at $20,000." The animal accompanying the missive is a baby dachshund. The landlady, however, has fallen under the spell of Dicky. She consents to let him house the dog in his room—and the schemers, for the nonce, are foiled.

Next day, one of the conspirators, who has the room next to the summer boy, with the help of one of the others, cuts out the woodwork so that he can gain access to the closet where the dog is kept. They then get a phonograph and hire a bloodhound to make a record of sleep-disturbing howls. Early the following morning the concert is turned on. Dicky picks up a golf stick and opens the closet to argue with the baby dachshund. To his dismay, a huge animal steps out. The conspirators, meanwhile, have made a substitution of pets and withdrawn the phonograph. A little later the howls are renewed, and a delegation of boarders call for explanations. Dicky lets them in and tells them that his baby dachshund howled because of growing pains—that he has grown two feet during the night. Naturally, his story is doubted.

Dicky opens the closet door to prove it. He is astounded to discover that the baby dog has returned, while the other animal has vanished. The landlady now glares upon him him and accuses him of having personally barked like a dog just for a practical joke. She invites him to leave the house in the gray dawning. At daylight poor Dicky wanders forth from Seacrest Villa, an outcast. The boarders are assembled on the porch. But no one speaks to him, save a waiter. He says, "The missus asks me to tell you, 'Don't forget the dog, sir.'" Dicky takes from the waiter's hands the baby dachshund and packs him tenderly in his satchel. All the girls go back to their respective sweethearts—while Dicky and the dog face the cold, cold world together.

GAUMONT.

HIS LORDSHIP'S DILEMMA (Oct. 3).—The cast: W. C. Fields and Bud Ross.

Fields, a remittance man, with tears in his eyes, informs his valet, Bud, that he is broke and that they must both look for jobs. Unknown to each other, they obtain work carrying advertising signs. Fields stalks the streets under an immense restaurant placard, while Bud staggers along announcing a new brand of indigestion tablets. One day they meet. Fields, having been paid a dollar in advance for his services, invites Bud to have a drink. While Fields engages the bartender in conversation, Bud fills his pockets with free lunch. Fields manages to pour down three drinks for the price of one, and sticking a piece of chewing gum on the end of his cane, he succeeds in hooking up again the dollar with which he had paid for the Scotch.

Last, but not least, the big-hearted bartender blows them each to a good cigar. Fields and Bud, blessing their luck, retire to the park to enjoy the spoils. Finding a newspaper handy, they read that Lord Swan has won a Fifth avenue heiress, Dolla Bills, by his wonderful golf playing. Fields lies down on a bench to take his afternoon nap, and is visited by a beautiful dream. He does not win his heiress by golf playing, exactly, but by his skill and bravery in using one of the clubs to whack a bomb planted by two black-handers on the steps of Mr. Moneybags' palatial home. He wakes embracing Bud, who cannot control his laughter. In disappointed rage. Fields pushes his ex-valet off the bench into the lake. As the latter fails to rise to the surface, Fields wanders away, realizing that now he must fight his battles single-handed.

MUSTANG.

"TWO SPOT" JOE (Two Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: E. Forrest Taylor, Jack Richardson, Anna Little and Louise Lester.

Tom and Jennie, recently married, finding few chances for advancement in the East, decide to go West. Tom goes and leaves Jennie with his mother, promising to send for them. Tom is a weak character and is soon lured into the dance hall life. He squanders his money on Stella, a dance hall girl. Broke, he writes to his mother for funds, representing that he needs money to develop a valuable claim. She sends it, and wife and mother take in sewing to support themselves.

Tom immediately spends the money on Stella and boasts of it. He is overheard by "Two Spot" Joe, who sees a locket containing the pictures of Tom's wife and mother. Tom stakes the locket in gambling with "Two Spot" Joe, and loses it. "Two Spot" keeps it, supposing the pictures of Jennie to be Tom's sister. Tom leaves with Stella.

A bank in the East fails and Tom's mother loses all her money. The shock of it kills her. Jennie goes West, supposing that Tom is prospering. Tom is arrested for a hold-up and jailed. Joe gets Jennie's letter, goes to the jail, releases Tom, gives him money, and tells him to "beat it." Joe cares for Jennie on her arrival, and tells her Tom died rescuing a man in a mine. He discovers that she is a wife instead of Tom's sister, and he loves her deeply. Tom hears that Joe and Jennie are living together, and starts back to kill Joe, falls over a precipice and is killed. Joe, realizing the mistake he has made, leaves a note to Jennie explaining all. As he leaves, he finds Tom's body, buries it and rushes back to Jennie. He discovers her as she is about to read his note. He takes the note from her and confesses his love.

CUB.

TAKING A CHANCE (Oct. 15).—The cast: George Ovey, Jefferson Osborne, Louis Fitzroy, George George, Ray Lincoln, Janet Sully, Miss Horner, Miss Callanan, Goldie Colwell, Louis Fitzroy, Arthur Mund.

With their funds entirely exhausted, Jerry and Hank are in a quandary to obtain further means of sustenance. They have tried several methods without success. Disconsolate, they wander to the town depot, arriving just as a troupe of Uncle Tom's Cabin players step from the train. Anxious to get business the company manager commissions Jerry to pass out heralds among the townspeople. The work is distasteful to Jerry, who decides that the heralds can be used to better advantage. He and Hank follow the actors to the hotel and with the heralds as credentials proclaim themselves as members of the troupe to the gullible hotel proprietor, who forthwith provides them with a meal. While Jerry and Hank are disporting themselves the manager enters, and looking at the register, inquires how Jerry and Hank's names happen to appear there as with his company. The light dawning upon him, the hotel man drags the impostors from the dining room.

As they reach the desk another commotion is on. Little Eva and the Angel of Death quit and leave. Without the pair there can be no performance and to starve off such an event the manager hires Jerry and Hank to play the parts. After a lot of adventures Jerry and Hank arrive at the theater that night and are made up for their roles. Their make-up is funny, but their performance funnier and it ends up in a riot, with the audience, such as there is of it, egging them on. The other performers, angered because the show is broken up, start after the disturbers, who by this time have reached the street.

In their queer garb they seek shelter in a house which is occupied by a spiritualistic medium and enter just as a seance is at its height. The spiritualists assume that Jerry

THANHOUSER.

THE LIGHT ON THE REEF (Two Parts—Oct. 5).—The cast: Morris Foster, Winifred Kingston, Samuel Niblack.

The little dancer drank of the cup of pleasure, and now realized its futility. She was the favorite at the dance hall, and one of her admirers, a man of wealth, had been very persistent in his attentions, but the girl sought a man different from those whom she has met. Some time later she was knocked down by an automobile which did not stop, and she was rescued by a stalwart young man, who carried her to the nearest hospital. He was the keeper of a lighthouse on a distant island. Ever since the death of his parents he had led a solitary existence tending the light. During the girl's illness the young man called to see her, and soon he began to feel that the lighthouse would be much more cheerful with two instead of one, while the girl realized that she had grown to love her new friend. She did not tell him of her past life, but when questioned as to what she did for a living, the young man was informed that she worked in a store. They were soon married and all went along happily for months until the wife's dance hall admirer chanced to come to the island. He recognized her and told the husband all. The wife did not deny the accusation, and pleaded with her husband to forgive, but he remained obdurate, and told her to leave his home immediately. She did and found refuge in the hut of a fishing couple on the mainland.

The husband's grief over the breaking up of his home was hard for him to bear, and one fateful morning he went to the mainland, met bad companions and took to drink. The effect of the liquor made him drowsy, and he fell asleep. When he awoke it was evening, and his wife's former admirer was standing near him. The man of the world chanced to enter the saloon, saw the sleeping man and remarked that the lighthouse is dark to-night. The lighthouse keeper realized the meaning of his words in a flash and rushed out of the saloon. As he reached the beach a remarkable thing occurred. For the great light, at first dark, suddenly became illumined and cast its rays in all directions across the sea. Some one had taken his place. The truth was learned when the lighthouse keeper reached the island. His wife, despised and cast off, had risked her life, swam to the island and kindled the light. She was asleep, exhausted from her great task, as the man entered the lighthouse, but awoke as he kneeled beside her and a reconciliation followed.

THE HAS BEEN (Oct. 10).—The cast: Wayne Aery, George M. Marlo.

For years the sheriff of Jericho county had been one of the most respected men in his community, working hard to make enough money to send his son to college so that he might be a lawyer. At the conclusion of the son's college course he came home to Roseburg, the little western town where the sheriff made his home. The son hung up his shingle and waited for clients, but somehow or other they did not come as fast as either he or his father had believed they would. To complicate matters, Eleanor, the eastern sweetheart of the sheriff's son, continually wrote for him to hurry up and make enough money to marry her, for she was tired of keeping school and wanted to come out West to live.

Suddenly things began to happen in Jericho county. One crime after another took place—banks were robbed, stages and mail trains held up, to say nothing of numbers of lesser robberies. It was up to the sheriff to "get" his robber or have his reputation suffer. Word was brought to him one day of another robbery, and it was also known which way the robber had made his escape this time. The sheriff went out after his man alone, telling them to have the posse follow.

That day was the beginning of the turning point in the sheriff's life. Nobody could tell how it was, but for the first time he didn't get his man. Broken-hearted over his failure, apparently, the sheriff returned to town, where his first action was to resign as sheriff and relinquish his cherished star of office. From bad to worse he went when he got started on the downward trail. He even came to avoid the beloved son and none ever saw him go near the little law office where things were becoming prosperous.

For a long time after the sheriff's resignation, however, nothing more was heard of the bold bandit, but one night he came back and the bank of Roseburg gave up its tribute. The posse and their new sheriff got an early start, but when they first caught sight of their quarry they discovered that the old has-been" had "come back," for he was ahead of them, riding hard on the trail of the robber who was putting forth all energy to reach the border.

They finally reached the robber and the "has-been," but it was across the border they found them. The "has-been" had his robber this time, and he intended to keep him for himself, for he was bound, and the old sheriff stood up against the lot of men with drawn rifle, telling them they could not get his prisoner. They might have the loot, though, he said, for before he settled his prisoner he had discovered the hiding place. "If you find it, let me know by building a fire on the hill," said the old man, "then I'll know what to do." A bonfire proved the robber had told the truth, but it brought no gladness to the heart of the robber, who believed death only his portion. When the sheriff unbound him, he stood up like a man for the shot, revealing to one of the men who had returned and unintentionally overheard—and saw—the face of the sheriff's respected son! It was not to kill his son, though that he had saved him, but to start away with him on a new life.

AMERICAN.

THE BLOT ON THE SHIELD (Two Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Dick Le Reno, Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer.

Col. Taliaferro, a proud Kentuckian, lives on his country estate with his only daughter, Sallie. It is his ambition to preserve the family honor unsullied, as it has been for the past five hundred years. On her eighteenth birthday, he presents his daughter with a beautiful necklace, and, pointing to the family shield, impresses upon her his desire that she will always respect the family name and preserve the family honor.

William Copeland, down on his luck, tramping through the country, comes upon a band of tramps, who invite him to take part in a robbery. He resents their insult, and a fight ensues. Speed Allen and his overseer happen along and see Copeland hatless, disheveled and dusty. They also see the camp of the tramps and report the matter to the sheriff. Copeland applies to Col. Taliaferro for work. Allen objects, but Sallie persuades her father to give the young man employment. As time goes on, a strong attachment springs up between the young people and Allen is jealous.

The tramps steal chickens from Allen, and the theft is discovered by the overseer. In the fight that follows, the overseer is killed by the tramps. Copeland is suspected of the murder because Copeland has inherited estates and a title in England and foreign lawyers have advertised for information regarding him, publishing his photograph. When the sheriff comes to arrest Copeland, Sallie hides the young man in her room. In an attempt to escape from the bedroom window he is discovered and arrested.

Fearing that his daughter has been compromised, Col. Taliaferro gives her a revolver to kill herself rather than have the family honor stained. Meantime the tramp who killed the overseer is captured, Copeland is exonerated and advised of his inheritance. He and the colonel rush to Sallie's room just in time to prevent her suicide, the young people are happily reunited and blessed by the colonel.

People who are looking for a good laugh in pictureland will do well to see "Just Out of College." It is film humor of good sort, ripplingly easy, with something of a musical comedy swing, clearly photographed and well acted. —CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

"Just Out of College" is chock full of rich and boisterous humor from beginning to end. —CHICAGO EVENING AMERICAN.

It is a corking comedy, one of the best presented in some time and deserves the laughs it receives. —CHICAGO HERALD.

The action is fast, furious and funny; it possesses a wealth of humorous situations, effectively handled, and unquestionably provides good, wholesome entertainment that is bound to satisfy everybody. —CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

I heartily approve of it. There is everything in the picture that I had in my play. —GEORGE ADE.

his office, Bess decides she will go to visit Mrs. Martin, and sends a note to Purdy. At the same time Purdy sends a note to Bess that he is going to the Big City on business. Each leaves without the other's knowledge.

At the same time, Ruth Martin decides to visit Bess Purdy and 'phones her husband. Martin is elated. Bess Purdy arrives at Martin's house just as Ruth was preparing to leave. They decide to remain and have a good time, not advising Martin. Purdy visits Martin at his office, and the two men go out for "a night of it," as they suppose Mrs. Martin is visiting Mrs. Purdy. The men return home at 2 a. m. quite intoxicated. The ladies have retired.

"Spider" Barlow, intent on robbing the Martin home, discovers the men having a hard time to get in, and offers to put them to bed. As he assists them into the house he cleverly robs them of their watches, rings and money. Martin gets into Mrs. Purdy's room and Purdy gets into Mrs. Martin's room. The women shriek and then recognize the men and proceed to "bawl them out." Explanations and reconciliations follow, and both men swear "Never Again."

BEAUTY.

ALIAS JAMES—CHAUFFEUR (Oct. 19).—The cast: Neva Gerber, Frank Borzage, Jimsey Maye.

Frank Barton, apparently a wealthy bachelor, has the reputation among his neighbors of being a woman hater. Neva Stewart, a young and pretty girl who lives next door, decides to invite Frank to a dance. He receives the invitation with pleasure, but declines with regret. Neva is disappointed. She conceives the idea of masquerading as Frank's chauffeur. She bribes his chauffeur and dresses in man's clothes. The chauffeur feigns illness and sends Neva in his place. Frank at once recognizes her, but conceals the fact. They go for a ride in his auto.

He picks up his sister at her home, and, by prearrangement, does not let Neva know who she is. He kisses the sister and is seen by Neva. By this time Neva realizes that she is in love with Frank and becomes very jealous. On their return to Frank's house, Neva starts to tell Frank of her deception, but he stops her with the information that he has loved her for months, showing her a newspaper with her photograph in it. Then he shows her why he let her think he was a woman hater. He shows her a child in bed, and tells her he is a widower and must care for the little tot. Neva is delighted and tells him that she will make as good a nurse as she was chauffeur. They pledge their love, and the scene ends happily for all.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES.

THE BRINK (New York Motion Picture Co.—Four Parts—Oct. 14).—The cast: Forest Winant, Rhea Mitchell, Arthur Maude, Joseph T. Dowling, Lewis Durham.

Paul Martin, dissolute son of a rich father, loses his all at the gambling table. Later, at the club, he meets Grimshaw, wealthy man-about-town, to whom he tells his troubles. The following day the youth, ordered from his home by his irate parents, again meets Grimshaw, who invites him to share his home with him. Paul consents. Several days later Grimshaw reveals to the youth that he is the leader of a gang of society thieves and implores the youth to join forces with him. Penniless, Paul consents and is given the plans of the Kirkland home, in one of the city's suburbs, which Grimshaw has planned to rob. Paul, on Grimshaw's instructions, goes to Bayville, is introduced to Kirkland and later to his young daughter, with whom he later falls in love.

Returning to the city, Paul informs Grimshaw that he is through with the gang and plans to lead a straight life. Grimshaw and "Chicago Red" attack him, bind and gag him and rush to Bayville to carry out the robbery. As they enter the dining room, they are confronted by Beth, Kirkland's daughter, whom they cover with their guns. Her cries, however, had been heard. Meanwhile, Paul, breaking loose from the bonds, engages an auto and is rushed to Bayville, entering as Beth shrieks for help. Chicago Red, leaping from a window, is shot and killed by Beth's father. Grimshaw flees, shouting back so all could hear that they should ask Paul what he knew of the contemplated robbery. Speeding his car around a sharp bend, Grimshaw loses control of the wheel and the machine leaps over a precipice, killing him. Questioned by Beth, Paul tells her everything and she forgives him.

THE MIRACLE OF LIFE (American—Four Parts—Oct. 21).—The cast: Margarita Fischer and Joseph E. Singleton.

A man and a woman who have long been sweethearts are married and are supremely happy in each other's love. Some months after the wedding husband and wife are in attendance at a ball, when suddenly the wife is seized with an intense revulsion against her husband. To him the sudden transition is inexplicable. With her, however, the case is different. She knows what her sudden revulsion means—the coming of a child! The young wife is horror-stricken as she grasps the truth of what has come about. The young wife is loath to give up society. In desperation, she goes to the home of an elderly woman friend, who has knowingly placed herself at the young wife's disposal. From the friend is obtained a deadly potion, a potion that will destroy the young life and restore the prospective mother to the condition in which she may enjoy to the fullest limit the follies which society offers. With the bottle clasped to her bosom, the young wife locks herself in her bed-chamber, intent on following the advice of her friend. Dramatically she places the bottle to her lips, and then falls in a swoon across the bed.

A doctor is standing at the bedside of this young woman. He is sadly shaking his head, while across the room sits the husband. He cannot realize the motive which prompted his wife to do as she has done. He follows the course of least resistance. A decree of divorce is obtained. The husband again establishes a home in which he is happy with a loving wife and children. For a time the young divorcee is happy and gay, enjoying to the fullest measure the life which she preferred to motherhood.

Then comes old age and loneliness. Though plentifully supplied with money, there is an emptiness which funds cannot fill. Day after day, the woman is alone in her large house surrounded by none but servants. Then come visions, visions of a stairway to heaven, up which angels are leading mothers and children. Then comes a vision of death, and the old woman sees herself refused entrance at the gates of heaven. She is turned away, and ordered to the region of everlasting punishment. The visions continue. A sprightly child takes the withered hand, and she is led about through the world. Everywhere, in the kingdoms of animals and plants, she is shown happiness which attends the rearing of young. All this happiness she sees as she is guided by the infant, and it all is denied her through the act of her younger days.

Then comes the awakening. Once more she is the bride of a few months. She is lying across her bed clasping tightly in her hands the bottle which contains the deadly potion. She has seen what the future had in store for her. With a cry she throws the bottle from her, and the hateful contents fall into a bed of flowers, withering and killing the plants it touches. Joyfully, the bride calls to her husband, and the secret is whispered into his ear. He clasps his wife in his arms, and both are happy in the joy which is to come. The little life completes its long journey and arrives at the home it is to bless. There never was a couple more joyful, more supremely happy. The nightmare of the vision has passed. The wife has learned her lesson and learned it well.

they have rescued from the Hidden City. They arrive in New York to find Ada gone and resolve to return to Africa and find her. Tom marries Nina and they start. Ada reaches the Hidden City. The guard left behind by Stanley can give her no information. It is an even chance whether he has joined Stanley or has returned to America or is dead. Ada, half distracted, resolves to push forward and join Stanley's party.

Jack, Tom and Nina land on the coast and push forward to the Hidden City with various adventures with animals and natives.

Stanley, seized with fever, is delayed weeks in an interior town. Jack, Tom and Nina reach the Hidden City and find that Ada has been there and has gone forward. Ada falls in with an eccentric old man with an elephant, known as the Jungle Rat. He becomes the companion of her wanderings. Stanley recovers and moves on up the Congo River by boat. Jack is seized with fever and lies at death's door. Ada is captured by natives. The Jungle Rat is left for dead. Stanley is attacked by natives, but beats them off and fires their town, escaping in the confusion.

THE VINDICATION (Two Parts—October 21)—The cast: John Oaker, Mabel Van Buren, C. Baker, John Brennan, W. H. Bainbridge, Capt. Jack Bonavita and Bostock animals.

Bad feeling is engendered between William Burnes and John Carter, both employed in the same office, when the latter takes Burnes to task for making improper proposals to his wife while she visited his office. Secretly Burnes appropriates the funds of the firm for his private use. One night after a session in his favorite gambling den, where he loses all his money, he resolves to visit the office and replenish his supply. The janitor for the firm is a hard but secret drinker. On this particular evening he has fallen to the floor in a stupor, from which he is just recovering in time to see Burnes rifling the cash box. With the idea of holding up Burnes and forcing him to divide he creeps toward the thieving clerk. Burnes springs at the janitor and in the fight which follows is struck and killed by a blow with a heavy ruler, wielded by the janitor. During the struggle he smears his fingers with ink from an overturned bottle. Unwittingly he leaves his finger imprint on the ruler which is tossed away and falls behind a letter file.

Remembering the quarrel between Carter and Burnes the janitor decides to divert suspicion upon the former. Taking a pair of black muslin sleeve protectors from Carter's desk he tears them into shreds and places them in the fingers of the dead man. The next morning the clerks discover Burnes' body. J. B. Prescott, the head of the firm, is called, and he summons the janitor, thinking that he may be able to shed some light on the crime of the night before. The janitor points to Carter's mutilated sleeve protectors in the dead man's hand and directs suspicion upon Carter. The police arrive and take Carter to jail.

At the trial which follows Carter's alibi is so strong that he is acquitted. Prescott, however, refuses to reinstate Carter in his old position and he wanders from place to place vainly endeavoring to obtain employment. At last, moved by desperation, he drops in at an amusement park and begs the animal trainers in charge of the caged beasts in the "Zoo" to allow him to work. One of the trainers has just quit because he was expected to clean the cage of a ferocious lion and the man in charge offers Carter this vacant place. Carter accepts it, and goes into the cage. Suddenly the lion springs upon Carter, whose shrieks bring the other men. They manage to drag the brute off, but Carter is wounded.

In the meantime, while Carter has been searching for work, his wife feels that some clue is to be found in the building and applies for the position of scrub-woman. The janitor gives her the job. During the course of her work, she discovers the ruler which has been tossed behind the file. She finds not only the blood and the hair of Burnes upon it, but the finger prints of the janitor as well. The janitor comes in with his whiskey bottle and attempts to force her to drink. Anxious to get a sample of his finger print she pretends to accept, takes the bottle from him and finds it covered with greasy finger marks. By a ruse she eludes him long enough to send a 'phone call for the police and for the head of the firm and when they arrive they find the maudlin janitor just on the point of forcing the brave woman to pay the greatest price for her temerity. The evidence is so conclusive that the drunkard breaks down and confesses. This completely vindicates Carter.

CENTAUR STAR FEATURE.

THE PROTEST (Three Parts—Sept. 29).—The cast: Crane Wilbur, P. O. Tabler, Jean Wolf, Ella Oswald, Leona Hutton, Margaret Gibson, Robert Newcombe, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Donald O'Brien, John E. Brennan and Joseph Von Meter.

Molly Fisher, an East Side factory slave, living with her parents and fourteen-year-old sister, is subjected to the taunts of her father and mother and of the neighborhood because of her aspirations to better herself. Skinny Walsh, a political ward heeler and gangster, comes to her aid, but his assistance is only a pretext to get her to live with him. By pretending that he loves Molly, he manages to hide the truth of the motives which prompt him to get Molly in his power, and he thereby gains the consent of her mother to let her daughter marry him. But Molly will not listen, and unable to tolerate the persecutions of her parents, flees with her crippled sister.

Some time later, Molly, having gained a thorough knowledge of stenography and typewriting, obtains a position, but because she refuses to receive the insidious attentions of Walsh, who has managed to locate her, Walsh sees to it that she is summarily discharged. He then forces his unwelcome attentions with renewed energy, and Molly is about to surrender to him when she is prevented by her younger sister, and she drives the gangster from her home. The next day, being unsuccessful in securing a position in a department store, Molly, in a fit of desperation, steals a pocketbook which she finds lying on the counter, and which had been left there by Blanche Armstrong, a society woman and fiancee of Roger Hackett, the district attorney and son of the proprietor of the store. She is caught and brought before Hackett, who, notwithstanding the fact that he is a wealthy married man, has an inordinate lustful longing to consort with young and beautiful women. This desire evidences itself when he lays his eyes upon Molly, and he tells her that she may have her freedom if she will condescend to cast her virtue aside. Calloused, cynical and bitter, and knowing that her past experience with men of the lower walks of life has been such that a woman can rise to their favor if she does not consider her chastity, Molly acquiesces.

Walsh, learns that Molly has yielded to Hackett, whom he knows, and he sets about to bring disgrace upon him. When Molly and Hackett have entered a private dining room in a notorious cafe, Walsh telephones Mrs. Hackett. Roger gets wind of the situation, and, in an endeavor to save his father, is inveigled into the affair himself by the gangster, who has Jerry Flynn, a political boss, and two newspapermen on the job. Roger takes the blame when his mother appears, and Hackett tries to bribe Flynn, but to no avail. The reporters "cover" the event with the district attorney as the central figure. Blanche reads the story in the paper, and forthwith severs her engagement with Rogers, who, meanwhile, is telling Molly that his fight against the corrupt political boss is complete but for the acquisition of certain documents, which are still in Flynn's posssesion.

The following day Molly puts into effect the scheme she has worked out in her mind, and is successful in getting employment in Flynn's office. She attempts to steal the documents, but is caught in the act, and faces the exposure of her double-dealing or the alternative of making her supreme sacrifice. She chooses the latter course, and goes bravely with him to his bachelor apartments. But she experiences a revulsion of feeling and resolves that she cannot submit herself to the licentious demands of Flynn just as Roger, who, having learned of Molly's connection with Flynn from her crippled sister and who, believing that the incident of the day before was a prearranged affair in order that the corrupt political boss might learn through Molly how much material he (Roger) has against him, arrives. Molly's decision crazes Flynn and he fires at her. His aim is bad, however, and he kills Walsh, who was entering through the window to warn the boss. Roger's sharp mind comprehends the situation immediately and his animosity for Molly turns to love. As the story ends, Roger wins his case, Flynn is jailed and Molly is the affianced wife of the district attorney.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episode No. 5, "A Message from the Past"—Panama Films—Two Parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: Lillian Lorraine, William Courtleigh, Jr., Ed. Brady and Henry Stanley.

Mrs. Hardin and her adopted children, Annette Ilington and Joe Welcher, all survivors of the Mt. Pelee disaster, journey to the Naval Training School at Newport to visit Mrs. Hardin's son Neal, enlisted as a sailor. While at Newport, Annette is attacked by Hernandez, who, aided by his partners Ponto and Inez Castro, and their strange brute man servant, is trying to secure the Yellow Packet in Annette's possession. This packet contains the map showing the location of Lost Isle and its treasure mine. By the timely aid of Neal and a squad of U. S. Marines, Annette escapes, still in possession of the map.

In this episode, Annette attends a dance aboard the U. S. S. Alabama, where the disguised Hernandez again attempts to secure the

Mr C.M.Stebbins,
1028 Main St,City.

Dear Sir;-

I am very glad to advise you that we are greatly pleased with the 1916 Model Motiograph Moving picture machine which we purchased from you several weeks ago. We have much film to run that has never been through a projection machine before and is often very green,giving some trouble. With this new machine we have had very little trouble along this line and none resulting from the film "crawling " off of the sprockets. The machine is in use every day and we are getting a very good picture.

Yours truly,
Fred J. McClure

Yellow Packet, and Annette is thrown into the sea. She is rescued, and that night, while drying out the soaked map before the fire, sees a secret inscription showing the latitude and longitude of Lost Isle. Annette and her party start for Lost Isle aboard the S. S. Coronado, on which Hernandez, Ponto, and the Brute also take passage. There is a mutiny aboard ship, and Annette is attacked by a drug-crazed sailor. The Brute, prompted by some mysterious force, takes Annette's assailant in his huge arms and climbing to the topmast flings him into the shark-infested sea. There is a thrilling and timely rescue of the Coronado's passengers by Neal and the crew of the gunboat Jackson, cruising in southern waters.

THE SPENDER; OR THE FORTUNES OF PETER (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: George Probert, James McCabe, Sam Ryan, Alma Martin and Paul Panzer.

Peter Lobert lets his reckless carelessness plunge him heavily into debt just once too often, and is sent away by his indignant father, to seek his fortune as best he may. Bagley, the faithful old family servitor, casts his lot with his young master. That night, at the Royal Arms, Peter's favorite cafe, he tells his boon companions of his misfortune. The picture of an American heiress gives him an inspiration, and he declares his intention of going to America, masquerading as a prince, and winning the hand of the Yankee newly-rich. And so they set out—Peter and Bagley.

As a prince, it doesn't take Peter long to gain entrance to the McCabe home, and as a lover it doesn't take him long to gain admission to Nellie McCabe's heart. They are married, much against the wishes of Pat McCabe, who doesn't put his faith in princes, and who orders Peter, now that he has her to take care of her. This hasn't been Peter's idea at all, but, since it has come to a showdown, he tells her of his poverty, and she, though disillusioned, sticks bravely by him.

Peter and Bagley get a job in McCabe's factory, unknown to McCabe. The latter has trouble with his help, who are incited to strike and riot by Jim Walsh, a walking delegate. Here are some tremendous scenes, in which Walsh's factory is set afire, a troop of cavalry rushed to the rescue, and old Bagley saved by Peter, who keeps the mob back by holding a lighted cigarette over a keg of dynamite. Bagley is dumbfounded when he learns the identity of his rescuer, but Peter explains it all when he says he simply couldn't let his baby's grandfather get hurt! There is a touching reconciliation at the end.

CONSIDERABLE MILK (Starlight—Oct. 2).—Heinie and Louie wake up under the spreading filbert tree, and consult on how best to extract from a reluctant world the living so long withheld from them. They are surprised when a dainty slipper lands at their feet, with the following message neatly inserted: "We are two sisters, one fair, the other homely. Neither of us may marry unless the other one does. If you are game, come tomorrow at noon. You will find both heavily veiled. One of you will get the fair one. Here's hoping you both win."

The boys have the true gambler's instinct, and decide to risk it, each trusting in Providence to cast his lot with the fair one. They get dolled up and meet the tremulous brides, who are dressed exactly alike, and heavily veiled. The fatal knots are tied, and Louie, raising his veil to either kiss or say howdedo to his bride, discovers he picked the winner. It's needless to say what Heinie discovers! The boys then find themselves proprietors of a milk bottling station, and take immediate charge. Louie, made ambitious by his recent luck, proceeds to take charge of the girl engaged in capping the bottles, and his fair wife, catching him at his tricks decides to make up to Heinie, and be revenged. She and Heinie, have a pretty soft time of it for a while, when the girls' cousin Reggie, a social scandalhound, spies them and gets out an extra early edition on it. Louie then pursues his old side kick, with intent to kill, and Heinie lands up in a doctor's office to have his nerves overhauled. His run has made him dry, and he tries something sweet smelling out of a convenient bottle, and is quite put out to find it poison. The doctor says that nothing but milk will save him, and Heinie starts his race for life to his milk station, where he meets up with more side-splitting complications than there is room to tell of here.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD, NO. 1 ("The Bungalow Bungle"—Pathe—Two Parts—Oct. 4).—Featuring Burr McIntosh, Max Figman, Lolita Robertson.

J. Rufus Wallingford and Blackie Daw, "con" men extraordinary, through the pleadings of Violet and Fanny Warden, whose father was ruined by the Falls clique, make an attack on the Falls millions. J. Rufus, the spokesman of the team, invests money in a portable house invented by young Falls, son of the president of the O., Q. & T. But for a long time no customers appear to take their products on their hands. Finally one does show up, a farmer—and with a big order if there were more improvements on the house. Now, Wallingford has several inventions along these lines which he will sell for $125,000 and the company is forced to take them.

However, as they are about to be shipped, Onion Jones comes on the scene with the alarming statement that the entire output of the company has been attached by him and he will sue for infringement of patents. The houses are then turned over to him. As the boys file out of the office after giving up their all to Mr. Jones, the farmer takes off his beard and is none other than Blackie Daw. Onion Jones proves to be a member of the firm of Wallingford & Co., and the two ladies, apparently, the maid and the farmer's wife, are the Warden girls. Then, with due ceremony, the name of Fall's is crossed off the list of prospective "soft ones," and they prepare to "land" another.

The next episode is called 'Three Rings and a Goat."

FRESH FROM THE FARM (Phunphilms—Oct. 4).—Rube Slivers leads a strenuous existence on the farm, but his father comes to the conclusion that he has not as yet cornered the brain market, and suggests that he go off to college. It is a co-ed school that he selects and the boy wastes no time in shining up to the female portion of the students, and also has several encounters with the president. Dolly Smawl leads the field in the eyes of Rube and he makes up to her continually, thus causing much jealousy on the part of his fellow students. But he should worry.

As a chemistry student, also, Rube is in a class by himself, and in the laboratory manages to mix two high-powered chemicals in such a way that the explosion resulting makes nitro-glycerine seem like a baby firecracker. Of course, the room is wrecked and the students barely escape with their lives, but Rube must be educated.

All good college students must join a fraternity, so the brothers of I Eata Pie invite our hero to become one of them. He assents, of course, and is put through his paces in grand style. One of the stunts is to pose in the place of a cigar store Indian. Rube does this, all right, but while in the midst of his posing, Dolly comes along with another fellow in tow. This is too much for Mr. Slivers and he lands of the head of the poor unsuspecting one with his tomakawk. The police are ordered on the trail of the would-be assassin, but he runs for a box of eggs of uncertain age, which are being sold at ridiculously low prices, and peppers his pursuers with them. Chlorine gas bombs are nothing compared to these and the death list is enormous.

PICTURESQUE ZEELAND (Photocolor—Colored—Oct. 6—One-half reel)—Holland has always been of peculiar interest to Americans. Year after year tourists have visited this dike-bound country of Europe, drawn there by the great simplicity of the country and its inhabitants. In this release all the most beautiful parts of the country are shown, and the peaceful people with their quaint garb make a beautiful picture. Then it is done in photocolor, bringing out all the wonderful natural colors of the scenery and costumes.

THE ALTAR OF HEAVEN (Pekin—China—Scenic—Oct. 6—On the same reel with foregoing)—The city of Pekin, capital of China, contains many relics of the Hidden Empire. The most prominent of these, probably, is the Tien-Tan, the "Altar of Heaven," which was built by the emperors of China during the Ming dynastry, in the 14th century. This is conceded to be the finest and most original example of Chinese architecture in existence. It was once the scene of many imposing rites and ceremonies, but is now silent and grass grown, with the shepherd and his flocks as the only tenants. Many other scenes in this most peculiar city of the Orient are shown.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (No. 6, "The Cavern of Death"—Panama Films—Balboa—Two parts—October 7)—In search of Lost Isle, her heritage, Annette Ilington and her party have reached the Island of Martinique, where the evil Hernandez, Ponto, and Inez Castro, attended by their brute man servant, follow them. Annette gets an invitation from the Governor to attend a levee on his lawn that night, and asks Neal to accompany her; but Neal is in uniform and can't act as her escort. He promises, however, to slip into the garden that night and meet her for a chat. Inez learns of Annette's invitation, and communicates with Hernandez and Ponto, who plan to kidnap Annette.

At the party, Annette and Neal are set upon in the Governor's garden, and kidnapped by Hernandez and his accomplices. They are carried off to "The Cavern of Death," a smuggler's cave, where they are bound tightly and told by Hernandez that the cave will be wrecked by dynamite in an hour. Neal and Annette finally manage to free themselves, and are shown by a sponge diver a perilous way of escape underwater. A moment after their exit, there is a terrific detonation, and the cliff sheltering "The Cavern of Death" topples into the sea. Neal and Annette are picked up by the crew of the sponge fishing boat, and saved to participate in the next episode, called "The Gun Runners."

CLOSING NET (Gold Rooster Play—5 parts—October 8)—Featuring Howard Estabrook, Bliss Milford and Kathryn Browne-Decker.

Trouble comes early in the career of Frank Clamart, known later in life as "The Tidewater Clam." While but a babe in arms, he is left alone when his mother, finding that the father of the child is not her legal husband, commits suicide. But before doing away with herself she places the infant in an orphan asylum. Frank spends ten years in the institution and finally, goaded to desperation by the brutality of the attendants, rebels and runs away. Burglary as a fine art is his conception for the next fifteen years and he becomes known as one of the most expert cracksmen in the business. To escape the too close vigilance of the police, he flees to Paris, where he meets Leontine, an adventuress; Chu-Chu, the shearer; Ivan, the "fence"; and Jeff the Red. Frank falls a victim to the charms of Leontine, much to the disgust of Chu-Chu.

Clamart's reputation has preceded him to the continent, and one night, on Chu-Chu's dare, he effects an entrance to the well guarded estate of his foster-brother, of whose existence he had never known. He is accompanied on the expedition by Leontine, garbed in her famous gown which is known in under-world circles as causing her to "blend with the night." The "Clam" is shot down in his endeavor to rob the place, and is recognized by his brother by a means of diamond-shaped scar on his arm. His repentance follows, but his erstwhile accomplices rob the home of his benefactor, which puts him under suspicion. However, he recovers the stolen goods in short order from Chu-Chu, who had taken them.

Chu-Chu continues the feud and, in another effort to rob the home of Clamart's brother, shoots the Clam in the shoulder. The latter, in his search for his assailant, several days later, jumps into a taxicab. He succeeds in running his enemy over a cliff and injuring him severely. Later, after Clamart seeks a truce, they come together again, but just as Chu-Chu is about to kill Frank, Rosalie, the driver of the cab, who is secretly in love with Clamart, kills Chu-Chu. Later, Frank and Rosalie, the former having broken away from his lawless companions, declare their love for each other.

PRETTY ROUGH ON AUNTY (Starlight—October 9)—A simple little ad in a newspaper starts this rollicking episode of Heinie and Louie. They read that Miss Bella Donna requires the services of two strong men and immediately apply for the place. Said place consists in guarding a safe which they are told contains a bunch of jewelry valued at a million dollars. They learn that the jewels are to be called for by an aunt of Bella, whom the young lady has never seen. This last part appeals to their sense of humor. "Why don't we try for these jewels?" they reason between themselves. Well, they do, all right. It is decided in council assembled, that Louie should dress up as they imagine an old aunt should regail herself and offer herself to the unsuspecting Miss Donna as her unseen relative.

Louie comes in with that outfit on and is given a great reception. This is rather a novel sensation for him and when he is escorted in to dine, he is just wreathed in smiles. Then an automobile ride is suggested and his joy knows no bounds. But while he is out, the real aunt arrives and Heinie is left at home to receive her. This he does, but it is a rather rough welcome that she receives, for he hits her on the head and drags her upstairs, where she is tied hand and foot. That evening, a reception is given in honor of the aunt, and Louie is the center of attraction. "So far, so good," he thinks as he looks longingly at the safe. Then the jewels are handed to him with much ceremony.

But meanwhile the real aunt is getting madder and madder at the treatment she has received and manages to free herself from her bonds. Then she rushes downstairs in full cry and lands in the middle of Louie's party. Bella is incensed at the treatment accorded her by the men she has befriended and they are both sent sailing out of the window, a wiser team than before.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL (Santa Barbara—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. Oct. 4).—Two little children, stepsisters, are living with their respective parents in humble surroundings. The father tenderly loves his little girl as does the mother her little girl. The skeleton in the closet is the fondness of the mother for drink and her hatred of the child of her husband's former wife. The cabin accidentally is set on fire and in rescuing his daughter the father is killed and the little one is blinded for life.

Fifteen years later the children, grown to womanhood, are discovered in sordid surroundings. The mother has become an absolute slave to drink and in her frenzies she brutally ill-treats the blind child of the dead man. A young artist and his brother meet in one of their rambles the blind girl and her sister. The young people are mutually attracted to each other, and after a romantic courtship they are happily married.

THE HIGHEST BIDDER (Empire—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 11).—A widowed wealthy lumber dealer dies and leaves his possessions to his only daughter, who is in charge of an unscrupulous superintendent who schemes to deprive the girl of her fortune by his crooked handling of the company's funds. He makes arrangements with a money lender to give him money on the firm's notes, and upon the failure of payment to them, to force the property into their grasp.

Seeing the superintendent and the money lender together, Jim, the sweetheart of the girl, gets suspicious, listens to their conversation, and overhears the plan of the schemers. He then goes to his friends, tells them the story, and through their contribution he is able to outbid the schemers, thereby saving the sweetheart's fortune.

MONTANA BLOUNT (Ramona—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 11).—Montana Blount, a cowpuncher, is in love with Alice, and is about to propose when George, a surveyor, comes into their lives. He falls in love with Alice, asks her father for her hand, and is accepted. Montana Blount, upon hearing of the engagement of Alice and George, sends George a note saying that he will harm him if he should run across him.

Months go by, and George is out surveying on the same range where Blount is herding. They meet, and Blount, whose anger has died out, is very glad to see George.

One day, George, while out in the fields, is bitten by a large snake and Blount, who sees this, shoots the snake. The boys who delivered Blount's threatening note happen to be on a nearby mountainside, see Blount shooting and misunderstand the meaning. Seeing George fall from the snake's bit, they run to the village and inform the authorities that Blount has killed George. The Vigilance Committee starts to hunt Blount, who has left George on the field while he has gone for medical aid. Blount is seen in the distance, and the Vigilance Committee commence firing. Blount, not understanding the meaning, fires back in order to protect himself, but is cornered in a stable, and when he is about to be smoked out, George, who, in the meantime has been picked up by some friendly Indians, arrives and informs the Vigilantes of their mistake.

IN WRONG (Atla—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 18).—Smith, a bookkeeper, not over fond of work, possesses a pretty wife. Boggs, his employer, catches him loafing and is about to read him the riot act when Mrs. Smith enters. Boggs, who is an old bachelor, is at once much interested. Upon her departure he asks Smith the name of the young woman. Smith, who is supposed to be single, gets confused and claims that she is his sister. Boggs at once makes him a proposition that if Smith will fix it up with his sister for him (Mr. Boggs), Smith will be promoted to general managership.

Smith goes home, talks things over with his wife, and she agrees to act as his sister until he gets his promotion. Boggs comes down to visit Smith's "sister," and much to Smith's consternation Boggs at once starts making love to Mrs. Smith. This is too much for Mr. Smith and he is almost caught smashing Boggs' head with a heavy dish. Things are straightened out when Boggs runs across another face much prettier than Smith's wife, to whom he proposes and who accepts him, thereby ridding Smith of his only stumbling block to happiness.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A DOUGHNUT (Alhambra—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 18).—The Newlyweds lose their cook, and wife decides to get along without one. Mr. Newlywed does not like the idea, but not wishing to make Mrs. Newlywed think that he doubts her cooking abilities, he pretends important engagements that keep him away during meal hours. But she corners him one morning at breakfast and poor hubby is made to eat wifie's cooking. One of the most important factors are the doughnuts, which are as hard as rocks, and poor hubby, pretending that he likes her cooking, rids the table of the doughnuts by putting them in his pocket, unnoticed by wifie.

Leaving home, Mr. Newlywed finds it very hard to dispose of the doughnuts. After making dozens of trials of throwing them away or leaving them somewhere and always getting them back, he throws them into the wastebasket. Wife, in the meantime, has lost her diamond ring. After a thorough investigation she realizes that it must be in one of the doughnuts hubby had eaten. Calling a doctor and a stomach pump she rushes to her husband's office, and they try to operate on him; but hubby will not be operated on without an explanation. Hubby then promises to return the ring if wifie will get a real cook. The promise is made, doughnuts are brought forth and the ring is recovered.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL (Banner—Ret. Wk. of Oct. 18).—Harold Browning, who when young was sent East to be educated, but whose parents have since died, on graduating from college receives an invitation from Chas. Canton, a rancher, his father's former partner, to come and visit him on his ranch in the West. He writes Canton that he is coming. Canton imagines that Harold is like his father, who was a rough and ready sort of a man, and tells the cowboys that a real man is coming to visit them. They are chagrined and disappointed when a dude alights from the train who claims to be Harold Browning. You can well imagine the stunts the cowboys put the angel-faced Easterner through before they remodel him into a real man.

MISTAKES WILL HAPPEN (Federal—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 18).—Hubby goes on a trip. Wifie, in the meantime, rents her home to a newly wedded couple and moves to larger quarters. She wires him the new address, but he never gets it. He returns home late one night, lets himsl into what he thinks is his home with his latchkey, and makes himself comfortable. Taking off his shoes, he steps up to what he thinks is his sleeping wife and kisses her. The night previous an announcement appeared, "Beware of an Escaped Lunatic," and the description fits hubby pretty well, so that when the newlyweds discover the intruder in their home they think he is the escaped madman, and things are getting to look mighty black for him when wifie, from her nearby house, hears the rumpus and comes to his rescue.

SAVED FROM DISGRACE (Empire—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 18).—A widow with two sons struggles hard to get them an education. The oldest son, upon graduating, is given a position in a bank, and is soon promoted to paying teller, after which he gets in with a fast crowd and is soon living above his means. Gambling is the next step taken and the result is meddling with the money and books, discovery, and a sentence of hard labor follows.

Soon after this he escapes from jail and goes into Western Canada. The younger son, in the meantime, has occupied a position as cashier with a mining camp. A notice to this effect appears in the papers, and is read by the police, who think it is the escaped convict, but who later find out their mistake.

In the meantime the older brother arrives in the town where his mother is now living. He is almost captured by the police, but his poor old mother saves him by paying the money he took from the bank. The son, realizing his mother's sacrifice, reforms, and in years later becomes a very prosperous citizen and builds a home for his mother.

THE MISLEADING CLUE (Santa Barbara—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 18).—Henry Ross, a retired banker, is discovered murdered. Detective Lindsey is called in, and after giving one of the maid servants the third degree, he finds that Robert Stanley, the fiance of Marjorie Ross, the dead man's daughter, quarreled with him the day previous, when Robert asked for Marjorie's hand in marriage. With this circumstantial evidence in hand, Lindsey places the murder on Robert's head, and is about to arrest him when the old butler, who has brought Marjorie up since the death of her mother, confesses. The butler tells that he is the only one who knew of the lover's secret marriage, and after hearing of the quarrel between Robert and his employer, he went to Mr. Ross and pleaded for his sanction to their marriage. Ross, who had been suffering from heart failure, got so overwrought that his heart failed him and he dropped dead. During his fall he cut his head and on account of that cut the butler was afraid to disclose the cause of Ross' death, fearing that he would not be believed and blamed as the murderer. The detective believes him, and everything ends happily.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stere Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 22—Two Parts—Sept. 27).—Sanky, the keeper of the stable where Quabba keeps his horse, has clutched the diamond locket from the claws of the lion after La Belle, the Lady of Lions, has been slain by the maddened creature and the flashing bauble torn from her neck. He runs in terror to his stable and hides it under the hay, then cowers in the darkness as he hears Quabba and the corner policeman outside the stable talking over the horrible events which ended the circus in pandemonium. He does not respond to their call, thinking that they must know he is the possessor of the fatal jewel, and when they have gone back up the alley, he crawls out and flees to hide in another part of town, leaving the diamond from the sky under the hay.

After Arthur had been conveyed by Durand to the waiting motor, he collapsed, and on his revival demanded that Esther be brought, firm in his belief that he had seen her at the circus. Again his so-called friends persuade him that his vision had only been the result of a diseased mind. To keep his mind occupied, they plan one folly after another. But Arthur, still not convinced that he has not seen Esther, telegraphs to Blake, the Richmond lawyer, asking, "Is Esther Stanley in Los Angeles?" The reply is intercepted by Vivian and Blair at the office of the Good Hope Oil Company, and the message, "She is," is changed to "She is not."

The next day, "John Powell," as Arthur is known, starts for the races with his friends—so the papers proclaim. Esther decides that she will test Arthur. She dons her gypsy dress and goes with Quabba, walking barefoot beside him in the dust. As the shining tallyho, which Arthur is driving, approaches, Esther steps forward, and calls up at him, "Arthur!" A look of wild, glad joy came over Arthur's face, followed by a glare of horror. Vivian lashes off the horse with a whip, and a rose which Arthur is holding in his fingers, drops to the dust. Quabba stoops and picks it up, handing it to the heart-broken girl.

Down the road, race goers in other equipages, see a man clinging to the tallyho. "Whip behind," they shout. The lash flies back, and Luke Lovell, returned for blackmail and revenge, drops from the coach. Poor Arthur falls back, fainting, helpless from the effects of the drugs and the excitement. But the diamond from the sky is shoved down that night into the manger of Quabba's pony with a fork full of fragrant hay. Into whose hands will it fall next?

THE CIRCULAR STAIRCASE (Selig—Five Parts—Sept. 20).—The cast: Eugenie Besserer, Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver, Edith Johnson, William Howard, Anna Dodge, Jane Watson, F. J. Tyler, Fred Huntly, Clyde Benson, George Hernandez, Bert Grasby.

Aunt Ray Innes leases Sunnyside House, the country home of Paul Armstrong, and invites her nephew and niece, Halsey and Gertrude Innes. En route, the young people stop at the Greenwood Club to take Jack Bailey, the intended husband of Gertrude and cashier of the Armstrong bank. Halsey appears in time to prevent a fight between Jack and Arnold Armstrong, son of the banker.

At three o'clock in the morning a pistol shot awakens Aunt Ray, who summons her servant, Liddy. They are joined by Gertrude, and the women discover that Halsey and Jack are missing. Investigations disclose the lifeless body of Arnold Armstrong lying at the foot of the circular staircase. Mr. Jarvis, who had been summoned from the club, recalls that Jack and Arnold were bitter enemies because of banking affairs. The next morning Mrs. Watson, the housekeeper, appears suffering from an injured arm, which she explains she sustained in falling down the circular staircase. Frank Jamieson, the detective, on the case cannot trace Jack, and when Halsey Innes returns he refuses to say why he left. Then the newspapers announce that the Armstrong bank has failed; that the cashier has been released under bond; that Dr. Walker, who has accompanied Paul Armstrong to the West, has wired that the banker is too ill to travel; and that securities aggregating a million and a quarter are missing.

Aunt Ray searching for Tom, the butler, comes upon Louise Armstrong, daughter of the banker, who was supposed to be out West with her father, at the Lodge. Dr. Stewart, the family physician, attends to her. Dr. Walker wires that the banker has died, and that his summer home must be vacated as the body will arrive soon. But Aunt Ray refuses to leave on such short notice. Louise is not apprised of her father's death, and as she leaves for her mother's home she tells Aunt Ray to leave Sunnyside House, as she has forebodings for its future. Mrs. Watson's injuries develop into blood poisoning, and she is taken to a hospital. As Tom, the butler, sits in the Lodge one night, he sees an apparition and drops dead of fright. Dr. Walker warns Aunt Ray to leave the house before she regrets it. Again she refuses. Several nights later as Halsey and Alex, the new gardener, are keeping watch over the circular staircase, the stable catches fire, and the men rush to give assistance. Meanwhile the women are terrorized by the movements of a strange object outside. Halsev disappears and a tramp with the missing man's watch on him is caught by Detective Jamieson. Upon being questioned, he says that he found the watch under the freight car into which had been thrown Halsey, bound and gagged.

Mr. Watson, who is dying, tells Aunt Ray that when she was called to the lodge by Tom, the butler, she found Louise Armstrong ill and that she (Mrs. Watson) was struck on the arm by a golf club by Arnold because she refused to give him the key to Sunnyside House. Mrs. Watson returned to the house and when she was ascending the circular staircase found that Arnold was creeping up behind her and shot him. Gertrude learns from Halsey, who is in a neighboring hospital, that Paul Armstrong, aided by Dr. Walker, looted his own bank, and that is why Louise left her father.

Meanwhile the casket containing Paul Armstrong's body is exhumed and when opened it is found that the corpse is not that of the banker. Aunt Ray discovers a secret room and upon investigating she is locked in by the door automatically closing upon her. Here she is found by Paul Armstrong that night. The sight of him frightens her and her cries bring the detective and Alex, the new gardener, who break open the door as Armstrong escapes by another secret passage. He slips down the circular staircase and is killed, and Dr. Walker is taken into custody. Alex removes his disguise and reveals himself as Jack Baily. A cash box containing the stolen securities is found in the secret room by Jack, and as Aunt Ray comes into Sunnyside House she finds Louise and Halsey in a loving embrace, and Jack and Gertrude in a like attitude at the bottom of the circular staircase.

THE DUST OF EGYPT (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Oct. 4).—The cast: Antonio Moreno, Edith Storey, Hughie Mack, Charles Brown, Jay Dwiggins, Edward Elkas, Jack Brawn, Cissy Fitzgerald, Naomi Childers and Ethel Corcoran.

Geoffrey Lascelles arrives home at 3 o'clock in the morning somewhat under the influence of liquor. He has been an honored guest at a banquet which announced his engagement to Violet Manning. Soon after his arrival in his apartment, Simpson, an English sillyass who is interested in archaeology and things occult, comes to his apartment with an Egyptian mummy. Lascelles is very much put out to think of Simpson bringing the mummy to his apartment and Simpson goes away, leaving it there for the night.

In a dream Geoffrey sees the mummy case yield up its body in the form of a beautiful young girl, who steps out into the room in all the pomp and splendor of an Egyptian princess of three thousand years ago. Struck dumb with amazement, Lascelles has to put her up for the night. She has great difficulty getting into his pajamas which she wears over her robes. Lascelles sleeps in the living room. Next morning he takes her to the home of his fiancee.

The adventures of the Princess in this home are very amusing and shows the various encounters with the telephone, matches, cigars and other conveniences of modern times. Angered at Simpson, she decides to poison him. The butler has prepared the poison and after Simpson is informed that he is about to die the butler tells him that the white crystals were only table salt. After a grand row, he finally gets the Princess back to his quarters where he awakens from his dream.

BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT

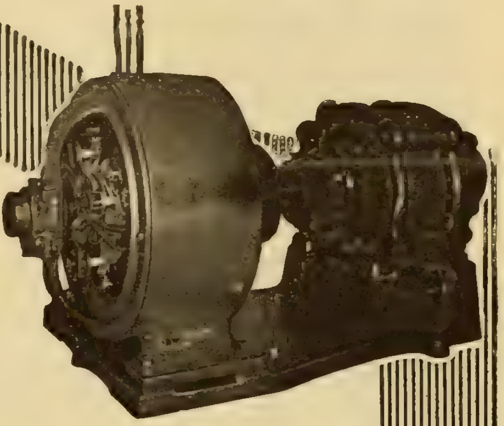
The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have—Alternating or Direct—or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

EDISON MAZDA C LAMPS

Made in U. S. A. and backed by MAZDA Service

Thursday, October 21st, is Edison Day. It will be observed the country over as the 36th anniversary of Edison's achievement of incandescent lighting.

For you this anniversary means the opportunity of making your lighting not only more efficient but more economical. Wherever you need high candle-power incandescent lamps, the new EDISON MAZDA C Lamps will give you more light for each dollar's worth of current than you have ever had before.

They are made in seven different sizes from 100 watts to 1000, the largest giving nearly 2000 candle-power. Buy through the usual channels.

If our lighting engineers can assist you in any way in the solving of your lighting problems, they will be glad to co-operate with you.

The Greatest Expense of Any Theatre is EMPTY SEATS

Money that you lose every day in empty seats proves that the pulling power of your theatre is not strong enough. To pull people 5, 10 and 15 blocks away, with other theatres nearer, requires an EXTRA attraction.

WURLITZER One Man Orchestra

is the strongest EXTRA attraction known

Plays Pipe Organ Orchestra and every Motion Picture Effect, by hand or automatically

Installed in Keith's, Proctor's, Vitagraph and 2,000 other theatres. Makes money. Solves the music problem and provides the music that gives realism to the pictures.

REFLEX

The Quality Carbons of the World.

Specially constructed negative with copper coated core.

This letter comes from an operator a member of Local 280 I. A. T. S. E.

"I have this date tried the REFLEX Carbons. Used them in one machine and tried three other brands in another. Please understand, both machines were in the same house. The REFLEX gave a much whiter light than the other brands even when the other brands had double the amperage. They also burn as long again as other brands. I have followed this line of work nine years and have used all makes of carbons, but never found any to equal the REFLEX."

Have you tried REFLEX carbons? Remember we are basing our claims to your attention on the actual experience of users.

Two More Unsolicited Mirroroid Testimonials. Read the Following:

Manchester, N. H., Sept. 18, 1915.
J. H. Genter Co., Inc., Newburgh, N. Y.
Gentlemen: We have been using a Mirroroid screen since December, 1913, and HAVE BEEN PERFECTLY SATISFIED, etc.
Yours very truly,
THOMPSON & SMITH,
Empire Theatre.

Palestine, Texas, Sept. 19, 1915.
J. H. Genter Co., Inc., Newburgh, N. Y.
Gentlemen: About three years ago I bought one of your Mirroroid screens for the Gem Theatre. IT HAS BEEN IN CONSTANT USE EVERY DAY SINCE IT WAS INSTALLED, AND HAS GIVEN US THE BEST OF SATISFACTION, etc. I remain,
Yours truly, B. C. BELL, Gem Theatre.

Do you find any other manufacturer publishing testimonials received from the exhibitor who has to foot the bills? If their goods produced results don't you suppose they would hear of it from the users, and isn't it natural to suppose that these letters would be published?

Think this matter over. Don't take the manufacturer's word for it, but ask the user.

We will send any exhibitor large free samples of Mirroroid, the Perfect Screen, for tests and comparison with any curtain manufactured.

We give you a 5-year guarantee which protects you, and our patents issued June 9, 1908, and Feb. 16, 1915, protect you from any suits for infringement.

Mirroroid made in three colors, Silver White, Silver Flesh, Pale Gold and two finishes, rough or matte, and sold at the low price of 36 1-9c per sq. foot. Yours for projection contentment,

J. H. GENTER CO., Inc., Newburgh, N. Y.

MAKE'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips of assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

That Distinguished American Character Actor, Frank Keenan in "The Long Chance"

Seventeenth Prize Release
Broadway Universal Features
Released Nov. 1.

Story by Peter B. Kyne. Directed by E. J. Le Saint.

A Western story without a "cowboy chase?" Quit yer kiddin! But you see, George, in the days of '49 cowboys were as scarce as hen's teeth, and besides, the Universal's eleven hundred dare-devil riders were working in another picture. And also, Frank Keenan as an old time man-eater in a boiled shirt and a plug hat with a machine gun handy, can and does furnish more excitement than a regiment of "Rough Riders." Does he get the girl? No. Does he anything like any other actor would do? Again, no. Does he stalk through the picture like an avenging god, taking little bad men's guns away from them and throwing the guys into the alley? He does, and in that inimitable way that has made Frank Keenan one of the most notable actors of our times. You never saw a Western play like this one because it wasn't written according to the rules. It was written by Peter B. Kyne, whose red-blooded stories have made the Satevepost almost as famous as he is himself. It starts with a punch and it keeps going for five fast rounds. It leaves you gasping, and when you finally come to, you know that you have seen one of the biggest actors and the biggest Western play ever shown on the screen. Then you begin writing the Universal that you want more pictures like "The Long Chance." Don't crowd or push. Bookings are made in the order of their receipt. Better send for your booking date NOW.

Hobart Henley in "The Measure of Leon Dubray" With Louella Maxim

Prize Heart Interest Drama
Gold Seal—3 Reels
Released Nov. 2.

Directed by Henry Otto.

If you were as handsome as Hobart Henley, the chances are you wouldn't care whether school kept or not. But if you could act like Hobart, then you'd want a salary larger than the President's and we'd have to consider it. Henley has those wonderful assets, youth and manliness, and the ability to hold any audience in any picture he appears in. So, when the audience is comfortably seated and the slow music begins as "The Measure of Leon Dubray" is flashed on the screen, you can go back and count up, knowing that every mother's son and daughter of them will come back next time you bill Hobart Henley.

"The Idle Rich" With Harry Gribbon and May Emory

Prize Funny Comedy
L-Ko—2 Reels
Released Nov. 3.

Whadda ya laffin' at? Huh? Didn't ya ever hear of a "funny" comedy? My gosh! Where you been at? Why, I think that's perfickly scanalous. Well, all I got to say is, that you'd better take a slant at "The Idle Rich," then you'll have reason to laff without thinkin'. It's a cure for the blues, and good for wat ails you, laffin' gas, and an antidote for too much mother-in-law, and about the surest cure for slim attendance you ever booked.

"A White Feather Volunteer" With Rupert Julian

Prize Patriotic Drama
Big U—2 Reels
Released Nov. 4.

Directed by Rupert Julian

Once upon a screen there was a war. Everybody was all filled up with patriotism and fussed up with emotions. Mothers and sweethearts urged their male darlings to go to war, forgetting what Sherman said about it. Also there was a man 45 years old, with hair grayed at the temples who was rejected when he went to enlist just because of these marks of age. Of course, there was a girl and she loved him, but he was true to the wife at home and side-stepped her amorous advances. So for revenge she sent him a white feather—at the time a popular method of calling one who did not hurry to get shot, a "Coward." Well, he went to war, and he saved the wicked girl's brother's life and—oh shucks, this big play is too good to spoil by telling its story. Get it, and you'll be glad that Rupert Julian is playing Universal leads and directing his own pictures, and so will all your fan friends. Yep, this is Rupert's first as a Universal Director, but watch.

King Baggot in "The Reward"

Prize "He-Won-the-Girl" Drama
Imp—3 Reels
Released Nov. 5.

Directed by Henry MacRae Webster.

Huh, didn't think the girl could resist King Baggot, did you? Not on your life; nor the old man, either. And your audiences won't be able to resist him, either. See if they can. King has a director that just suits him now. He's just as particular as King is about having his sets and scenes realistic, and the way they spend money for pictures is only equalled by the way the fans appreciate them. Good strong stuff, this. A drama of the underworld and of the upper crust as well, and there with the punch that you like.

"The Mettle of Jerry McGuire" With Helen Holmes and J. J. McGowan

Prize Railroad Drama
101-Bison—2 Reels
Released Nov. 6.

Directed by J. J. McGowan.

Well, by gosh! How do they do it? Didja see Helen jump from that automobile onto that runaway freight train, with the little kid alone on the engineer's seat, crying and scared stiff? Gee, but that train was goin' some, too, and the automobile was out for the speed record, too! An' it was just what was needed to make Helen and the little kid's father remember that they loved each other after all. But that train and that automobile and the other train coming head on forty miles an hour. Say, that was a thrill that will last me for some time. A great big beautiful story with the wonderful Helen doing stunts that call for courage, the kind that can't be faked. Don't overlook this. If you got this from a "soak-em" feature concern they'd charge you more money than you could get back in 11 performances. But it is released on the regular Universal Program.

"Such a Princess" With Elsie Alberts

Prize Fairy Tale Drama
Rex—3 Reels
Released Nov. 7.

Directed by H. C. Matthews.

All the court ladies loved the Prince, and all the court ladies happened to be either old or homely. So the Prince yawned and dodged them up to within an hour of the time the law said he had to be married or lose his snap as Prince. So he went hunting, and married the wild woodland girl, and if they didn't live happily ever after it isn't the fault of the picture, because it says they did right on the screen. And the kiddies will eat it up. It's a whale, and for a kid night or matinee it will pack 'em in.

Several so-called film exchanges are offering to the Public the following:

CHARLES CHAPLIN in "THE MIXUP"
(4 Reels)

"AMBITION" and "THE REVIEW"
(4 Reels) (3 Reels)

Charles Chaplin has asked us to announce that he never appeared in any of the above pictures, and in fact that he has never appeared in a four-reel motion picture.

From what we can learn, never having seen these films, we believe that some one who realizes the great demand of the public for Chaplin films, has taken the pains and liberty of getting together scraps of some of his earlier plays and assembling them, and now is trying to foist them on an unsuspecting public.

Mr. Exhibitor, we notify you of this so you may not be misled, and so your patrons are not misled. If we had not advised you we might be blamed. Now that we have told you, if you show the above named as the product of Chaplin's brain and art, you are fooling your customers, but through no fault of ours.

You know Charles Chaplin is producing exclusively for ESSANAY.

We know you do not want to mislead the public.

A RECORD THAT SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

Since the inauguration of KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES, subjects and casts which could easily command fancy prices have been given the Exhibitor on a regular program at no extra charge.

We would respectfully call your attention to such favorites as Lenore Ulrich, "Bird of Paradise" star; J. Forbes Robertson, the eminent tragedian; Alice Brady, the popular Broadway favorite; Florence Rockwell, of "Fine Feathers" fame; Walter Hampden, star of "The Servant in the House;" and other names equally as impressive—all offered in REGULAR SERVICE.

We have established an enviable record for KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES. The high quality of our pictures has gained us the confidence of every exhibitor.

Another Famous Players-Mary Pickford Success!

Another screen triumph has been added to Mary Pickford's amazing repertoire of successes by her latest characterization, "A Girl of Yesterday." The first reviews that have appeared relative to this novel subject are from the foremost newspapers of New York and Chicago—great dailies that represent the highest standards of American journalism, which describe Miss Pickford's brilliant portrayal in this unique production in the following manner:

"It's a charming little theme, this 'Girl of Yesterday.' Little Mary in this picture is just the same little winsome, bewitching, amusing, etc., etc., clever little actress. To try to describe her efforts in her latest vehicle is like trying to paint a picture of a beautiful landscape. It can be done, but it's an old subject with which you are only too familiar."

—Chicago Evening Post.

"The photoplay represents what Mary likes to do best. It allows her to develop a quaint character quaintly, a thing that the little lady has done so many times. It is a good picture."

—Chicago Examiner.

"Mary Pickford in a play that gives her appealing quaintness a new outlet. The story is more like a poem of Swinburne, with settings that are, however, adroitly connected. The theme that is carried through them all is her gentle, charming old-fashionedness. Nearly all of Mary Pickford's versatility is given a chance in 'A Girl of Yesterday.'"

—N. Y. Evening Mail.

We release forty-eight reasons a year for booking the PARAMOUNT PROGRAM. Our current productions, Marie Doro in "The White Pearl," and Mary Pickford in "A Girl of Yesterday" are not only reasons, but incentives!

A Link in the Paramount Chain

SUCCESS

Paramount Service

So says Stanley V. Mastbaum who owns a chain of

19 of the leading picture theatres

in Philadelphia, headed by the Magnificent Stanley. Mr. Mastbaum writes as follows:—

Paramount Pictures Corporation,
110 West 40th Street, New York City.

Philadelphia, September 15, 1915.

Gentlemen:—

Having a few moments of spare time, I thought I would drop you a line relative to the Paramount Program, thinking perhaps the information contained in this communication might find its way to some of the Motion Picture Exhibitors throughout the United States, as I believe the facts stated herein worth a few moments of their time and consideration.

I have found the Paramount Program an excellent asset to the theatres under my direction which are exhibiting same. I am sure that other Exhibitors will have a similar experience provided they exploit fully to the people of their respective vicinities. It is needless to say that the proper care of your patrons, as well as many other incidentals in connection with the theater, are also necessary.

The Exhibitor who is charging an admission of 10 cents and upward and does not try to succeed under the program of the Franchise Plan, is not only losing valuable time but he is not supporting the Motion Picture industry for bigger, better and greater productions. All other statements to the contrary plans are, in my opinion, an error.

The Paramount Pictures Corporation took the first step of correct distribution of the Paramount Program Franchise Plan, which is of inestimable value to any Exhibitor.

THE PARAMOUNT PROGRAM FRANCHISE PLAN.

1st. A dependable program.
2nd. Great plays with famous stars.
3rd. Price of service made with consideration of possibilities.

I don't see what more any exhibitor could expect or hope for. Give it a full, fair trial and I am positive you will be pleased with the results.

Yours very truly,

THE STANLEY COMPANY,
(Signed) Stanley V. Mastbaum.

THE BLOOD OF OUR BROTHERS

No story more intense or of greater depth has ever been picturized. Based on a topic of the day—peace—it is unequivocally proclaimed the greatest argument against war ever advanced. It is treated allegorically and in this way not only retains its intensity and power but is given an added charm as well.

Thousands of dollars have been spent in making this picture. It represents the most ambitious effort ever put forth in producing a picture for regular service. It marks a new era in motion picture production. "The Blood of Our Brothers" is in three reels and will be released

Brooklyn Pays $750,000 for Triangle Plays

Kemble is a big man who knows big ideas when he sees them—which is the reason the Crescent Theatre is due to make money in a big way.

But—

You can't tie a Kemble with big ideas down to little ideas; they don't fit together; so when Kemble looked around for the biggest film idea to make more money, he saw that Triangle blocked everything else out of sight.

Therefore—

Kemble connected with the TRIANGLE in the biggest way he could—in a bigger way than any exhibitor ever tried before. On October 8th, he crossed the Brooklyn Bridge to New York and signed for the exclusive rights to Brooklyn for two years, binding himself to pay in that time nearly Three Quarters of a Million Dollars for the privilege.

$750,000.

Kemble of Brooklyn will go on making big money, but his profits will be greater than ever. He will have the goods that produce the profits.

No doubt there are other Kembles in other cities; men too big for the little ideas. Perhaps YOU are one of them.

After gambling with a customer's stock and losing, Poole, Crane and Bream are completely ruined. They draw lots to see who shall commit suicide. All are insured for amounts sufficient to cover their losses. Bream is secretly in love with Crane's wife, Helen, and he and Poole trick Crane so that he draws the fatal slip. After Bream assures Crane that his wife and child will be taken care of, Crane promises to end his life at 12 o'clock that night.

Instead, he stumbles over the body of a suicide and exchanges identities with the dead man. Helen, cheated out of her insurance money, for the sake of her child, marries Bream. One night, under the glare of a street lamp, Crane comes face to face with Bream and Poole. He follows them and some thrilling adventures take place. Bream and Poole once more try to "frame" Crane, but a burglar's dying confession clears him. Bream kills himself and Poole is "sent up", reuniting Crane and his wife.

Facts and Comments

EXHIBITORS in this state owe it to themselves to co-operate with the Moving Picture World in its campaign against the adoption of the new constitution. The framers of this new constitution had it in their power to extend the freedom of the press to the screen and to make censorship impossible in this state for a period of at least twenty years. A committee of film men appeared before these men, asking that the status of the motion picture in the eyes of the law be properly defined. The film men represented the entire industry, but they met with scant consideration, and the proposed amendment for the freedom of the screen was smothered in the committee on the Bill of Rights. We only escaped censorship in this state by a very narrow margin. It is sure to reappear in the legislature of 1916. The campaign proposed and outlined by the Moving Picture World will create a sentiment against censorship. Slides and speakers are at your disposal, Mr. New York Exhibitor. LET US HEAR FROM YOU AT ONCE.

THE question has been raised in motion picture circles whether the leasing of films will in any way be affected by the decision against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others. We are in a position to declare that leasing films instead of selling them is perfectly legal and there is nothing in Judge Dickinson's decision to affect this aspect of the case. Leasing is only condemned when it is used as a subterfuge in order to establish an illegal monopoly.

THE Moving Picture World is in receipt of many little publications printed by enterprising exhibitors and offered to the patrons for their pleasure and information. Without exception these "house organs" are cleverly put together and intelligently edited. There can be no doubt whatever that these publications serve a useful purpose. They attract people and make a permanent patron out of many a casual visitor. They add to the dignity of the house and increase its prestige. Typographically they are far above the average of publications of this kind. As it is easy to obtain local advertising the cost of publication and distribution is generally covered in part at least by a sure source of revenue.

DUPLICATION of titles is an old complaint. Such confusion is a source of frequent annoyance to exhibitors no less than to the general motion picture patron. In many instances the duplication is the result of ignorance or carelessness, in but very few cases is the duplication deliberate and wilfully misleading. To avoid such duplication hereafter we propose a simple and practical remedy. The Moving Picture World keeps a most careful record of all titles of motion pictures, single reels as well as features. We will be glad to examine the records upon the request of any reader who wants to know about any particular title. In this way duplication will be reduced to a minimum.

ACCORDING to a recent judicial ruling the value of a legitimate star for the motion picture is not obvious enough to warrant an injunction against such a star if he is about to break his contract. On the other hand an injunction would undoubtedly be issued to prevent such a breach of contract in the case of a well-known film star whose success before the camera has been demonstrated and whose popularity with film patrons is generally conceded.

ALL of us are united in the hope that the full penalties of the law will be measured out to the men now under indictment for "duping." For boldness and reckless defiance of the law these men have made a record among "dupers," who, as a rule, do not court publicity. The evidence against the men seems overwhelming, and if there is any force in the amended copyright law it ought to be an easy matter to secure convictions. The new law provides a prison sentence in addition to a fine. It is gratifying to learn that the offices of the United States District Attorney is thoroughly aroused and will make every effort to bring the offenders to justice.

Theatrical Plots

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT source of artifice rather than of art, the stage presentation, has narrowed the broad meaning of story plot from a general plan to a specific complication. The playwright who feels that he must adhere to tradition, another name in this case for imitation, gives his first attention to plotting a plot. He feels that he must "mix those children up" so that they will meet with a snarl of difficulties before they are extricated from the entanglement in which he started them. Such is the theatrical idea of plot, and it has its merits. Once in a hundred times it may work up to an interesting HIGH SCENE, a tense moment, but the author must have that in view from the start and not lose sight of it for a moment. The stage plot is very exacting. Its creator is under the thumb of his audience. He must consider suspense to be of highest value in his problem and he must justify it with a solution at once logical and unexpected.

Does he provide such justification?

"Come sail with me," he says to those who have the price, "on my high tension yacht to Wonder Isle." He projects our minds forward to our destination so that we will not notice the leaky old tub we are in, then, just as land is in sight, he scuttles the ship and escapes in a dory to get another human cargo with the same alluring promises. A close investigation of the plot theatrical may discover that modern authors have been led into an overestimation of plot by superficial knowledge of the old stories they consciously, sometimes unconsciously, imitate. They seek to stimulate curiosity through complication rather than stimulate the emotions by portraying the spiritual side of human nature. "Plot," says one critic, "may be defined as any sequence of events making or marring happiness, success or achievement. It is not necessarily emotional nor spontaneous." He struggles to explain it for a few lines then scuttles his ship as follows, "Plot is capable of such infinite methods of treatment that rules are valueless and instruction of little practical aid." Another says, "Plot is the basis or framework of fiction," "It carries a problem and a solution." "It carries a problem and a solution." "The problem to be solved is of no greater importance than the solution." At last we get light. He takes the trouble to enumerate the hopelessly trite.

"(1) The mistaken identity idea. (2) The rescue with love-gratitude climax. (3) The lost or altered will. (4) The poor versus the rich suitor. (5) The cruel father or stepmother. (6) The resisted temptation to be dishonest, or redemption after dishonesty. (7) Heaping coals of fire. (8) Unjust suspicion. (9) The neglected parent. (10) Reformation of the villain by the little child." These are a few. Closely examined, it would seem as though there was a confusion in this list of plot, characterization and theme. The critic finally reaches a very simple classification, declaring that plots are of three kinds, 1, the ingenious, 2, the detective, and, 3, the problem. He might as well have grouped them all under "problem."

The plot theatrical is virtually a problem, whose solution is the important factor. Brander Mathews says that "the situations a dramatist may use are very few—their ultimate value is that they enable the dramatist to reveal human nature." We are still getting light. The solution counts and revelation of human nature is of greater importance than situation. So many bright minds have been applied to the discovery of what is structurally essential to dramatic success that we may still gain light by investigation of these views. Brunetiere declares that the stage play is for the "development of the human will, attacking the obstacles opposed to it by destiny, fortune or circumstance." Barrett H. Clark comments that it is "dramatic to personify great social or political forces or 'wills' in individuals." "The rights of the individual," says Charlton Andrews, "as against his duties to his environment form the basis of nine-tenths of the successful plays, since Ibsen at least." Still more light—the dramatist must be a thinker.

The rights of the individual! What are those rights. We may not know them well enough to define them, but we feel them. From this feeling has grown a broad sympathy. We become concerned in HUMAN RIGHTS. We revolt against injustice to our brothers in other countries. We detest the oppression under which they are suffering. How can we help them and resist the employment of despotic force against their happiness without resorting to force ourselves? We look about us for a medium of expression, to the printed page, to the stage, to the screen.

Aglow with a live subject, we study our THEME from every advanced point of view, embody ideas in our characters, bring them into romantic relation, develop the human will in opposition to the obstacles of environment, call on creative imagination for interesting situations and formulate a story. The general plan of that story is the plot.

At this critical period of the world's history, when brave men of the most enlightened nations in Europe are battling for liberty against the perpetuation of human servitude, when old confederation of military and aristocratic cliques are baldly arrayed against progress and freedom, our producers are digging like moles into old novels and old plays for "plots" and "situations" and wondering why the people are out of sympathy with their product. While the great forces of society are clashing, while great principles are at stake in the conflict, while we have within reach a new and marvelous instrument for transmitting the virile ideas of our age to countless millions, we are poking around the dusty book-shelves for stories of live interst. This is the psychological moment to develop great themes, not theatrical plots.

We long for a Dante to describe The Inferno of Europe, as he would have done in this age. We long for a Shakespeare to portray us as an intellectual and vacillating Hamlet in the presence of a great wrong. Millions of our brothers abroad are as proud and ambitious as we are, sacrificing their lives, breaking their hearts for the sake of a controlling voice in their own destinies. Themes are within reach that will make the common pulse of humanity bound with sympathetic interest. Yet we are nosing around for theatrical plots. It looks very much as though we needed men capable of grasping what is burning in the minds of those who support the production of human dramas on stage and screen, who are capable of transmitting through popular mediums of expression forms of thought, stories of human insight, dramas of prophetic criticism.

Dealing in "Puffs"

By W. Stephen Bush.

RECENTLY I stood along side of an exhibitor as he was receiving numerous uncomplimentary remarks about the quality of the main feature on his program.

"I couldn't make head or tail of it," said one patron. "I couldn't keep myself from falling asleep," remarked another. A more or less famous star (famous on the speaking stage), had loomed large before the camera in this feature and he was the special target of outspoken hostile criticism. "Is that the best the famous ———— ———— can do?" many exclaimed in pained surprise.

It was a serious thing for my friend, the exhibitor. The good old days when they would invariably come back even if the pictures were occasionally bad are things of the past. Competition is keen. Patrons visiting different theaters in the same neighborhood compare notes. If the nearest competitor had a fine feature on the same night my friend ran the "piece de fromage," the loss of patronage might prove serious.

"How did you ever come to book this dreadful affair," I asked my friend. He said the name of the "star" attracted him. "That alone," he concluded, "would not have moved me. I read an extravagantly favorable review and I thought there must be something to it."

"NO, the review was not in The Moving Picture World. I just happened to get hold of another paper," explained the exhibitor, but now I will never again trust any paper but The World."

The great progress in quality has been due in no small measure to intelligent constructive but always honest and candid criticism for which The Moving Picture World has stood ever since its birth. Do you imagine that any exhibitor can be deceived more than once or twice? The paper which printed a favorable review where none was deserved may, for the time being, instal itself in the favor of the manufacturer. The press agent may with a gleeful chuckle display it before his employer. Something probably will be said about "having put one over" on the exhibitor and on the public. Now, as a matter of fact the paper dealing in favorable reviews regardless of the real merits is rendering no service to the exhibitor. We doubt very much whether it is rendering any but a bad service to the manufacturer. No amount of "puffing" will foist bad pictures on the public. Some one has to suffer whenever the inevitable failure comes. If the manufacturer by the aid of purchasable papers succeeds in selling the poor picture the exhibitor will be the only sufferer. Can he afford to help in the maintenance of a paper which aids in his own undoing? Our friend, the exhibitor, is just a bit too good-natured. He allows himself to be wheedled into subscribing to a paper "to be obliging." If he were to put on his thinking cap he would hesitate and then upon full deliberation he would emphatically refuse. The intelligent and ambitious manufacturer has no use for a paper which guarantees a favorable review or "write-up" upon the payment of the advertisement or even upon the mere promise of payment. One does not have to be an ichthyologist to know for what kind of fish that kind of a paper is angling.

The Moving Picture World with its staff of trained and conscientious reviewers is absolutely dependable. We have scores upon scores of letters in this office assuring us that our reviews are of the greatest constant and practical value to the readers. Everybody knows that these reviews in The Moving Picture World are without bias and that their first object is to benefit the exhibitor. That's the way The Moving Picture World won the friendship and confidence of its readers. That's why its circulation is vastly greater than that of any journal in the industry. That's why its readers, as well as its advertisers, take it seriously.

The Screen Not a Pulpit

By W. Stephen Bush.

OUR friends, J. Louis Breitinger and his Catonian Sages, have reissued their wonderful standards of censorship. There is not much in them that wasn't there before. What surprises us most is the evident assumption on the part of Breitinger and the C. S. that the motion picture screen is a pulpit, that the producer of motion pictures, is or ought to be, a preacher, and that the exhibitor of motion pictures is, or ought to be, a missionary, and if possible a theologian. The English of these "progressive standards" is at times a bit obscure and confusing, but it is perceptibly better than the first edition, which announced the sensational edict that all "comedies must be animated by a serious purpose," or words to that effect. The revised edition of the "progressive standards" no longer requires comedies to be serious.

One of the most comprehensive chapters in the new list of standards reads as follows:

> "Underworld Scenes, Opium Dens, Objectionable Dances, Flirtations, Questionable Resorts, Etc."
> "The Board may condemn these and will require, when scenes of this kind are produced, that it be in such a manner that no one may be stimulated to similar adventure or conduct. When the portrayal of scenes of this type is necessary to the development of a story the Board will require that it be truthful and complete and that it be given no false glamor with the effect of leading any one to misapprehend their true character, but rather know the essential sordidness and shallowness, discontent and commercialism on which these scenes rest. Producers are cautioned against attempting such scenes in pictures, which of necessity are shown to both adults and children. If such scenes are introduced they should be made as far as possible unintelligible to children."

Walking around in this labyrinth of words makes one somewhat dizzy. We tremble for the sanity of any producer who wants to understand this verbose conglomeration and who really thinks he can live up to it. As far as we can get at the meaning of the censors at all it seems that they want pictorial sermons. Neither the drama nor the screen are engaged in pulpit work. We hold the mirror up to nature and to the world. If the reflections in the mirror are true our duty is done. This does not mean that we want to light up all the dark and dirty corners. We must leave something to the imagination of the men and women who go to see motion pictures. We do not control life and we do not pretend to lay the cornerstones of civilization. Portraying and reproducing is our business. Of course, there is an ethical side to it. If we gave one-sided views of life, if we grouped together all the good, and put it to one side, and then gathered together all the evil, and arranged it in a separate and distinct group, we would not be holding up the mirror to the world and the beings that inhabit it. If we did such a thing we would be like the censors, wearing blinders and looking through either convex or concave glasses.

By the way, how in the name of just plain ordinary common sense is it possible to make "these scenes unintelligible to children." Either the children are old enough to understand or they are not. If they are old enough, Breitinger's advice is unnecessary, and if they are not old enough it is simply foolish.

Britishers Puzzled Over Film Tax

Film Men in England See Difficulty Ahead for Government in Interpreting Terms of New Impost.

(Special from the British Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.)

London, September 23.

FURTHER to the first announcement yesterday more detailed information is available this morning respecting the surprising and unexpected provisions of the most momentous budget introduced before Parliament since the day of the Doomsday Book.

I need not trouble readers of the World with even the shortest analysis of the causes necessitating such seemingly drastic impositions by a country that has always stood for free trade. Everyone in America knows that war costs money, just as every one here knew that with a national expenditure of three to five million pounds a day whatever commodities would lend themselves to revenue-raising must sooner or later be made use of.

Since its development upon anything like the present scale certain of our legislators have at times cast their eyes towards the industry and on more than one occasion attempts to provoke a Parliamentary discussion on the subject of kinema taxation have been made unsuccessfully. I traveled north last night with a provincial Member of Parliament, who unhesitatingly assured me the motion picture trade had been dismissed lightly in the provisions of the new budget. As it is, he remarked, the new taxation is confined solely to an import duty on foreign films. Other means for raising war revenue from moving pictures were under consideration until the last moment; at one time the English exhibitor of kinema films was very near paying a substantial tithe from his profits.

The general opinion of the trade in London while not opposed to the measure, regard the proper administration of the new tax as an impossible task. All imported films are to pay a duty of one-third their monetary value and no apparent distinction between negatives, positives or raw stock is mentioned. It is clear from the beginning that Mr. McKenna himself does not realize the formidable obstacles confronting the smooth working of his plan. The following extract from his speech also clearly shows the motive of the measure:

"I will next put forward a list of articles, the import of which may properly be restricted by means of duties in time of war on both the grounds I have mentioned: namely, foreign exchange and luxury. So far as the duties do not put an end to exportation they may be a source of revenue not to be neglected. The articles to which I refer are motorcars and motorcycles, kinema theater films, clocks, watches, musical instruments, plate glass, and hats. Anyone who takes the trouble to consult the returns showing the amount of our imports for the first six months of this year of manufactured articles and their value and the amount we pay in this country to the countries from which the articles came will be able to form a very good reason as to why these particular articles have been chosen. On each of these I propose an ad valorem duty of 33 1-3 per cent. or its equivalent in the form of a special tax, and I anticipate a total revenue from the duties on these articles in a full year of £1,950,000, of which motorcars account for £1,150,000 and kinema films for £400,000. These estimates of revenue are, however, given under great reserve, as we have no experience of the effect of what so high a rate of duty will be upon importation."

The foregoing pronouncement lends itself distinctly to a number of interpretations. We can assume that films will be taxed on the ad valorem principle against a declared value, and this is the one in general acceptance in the trade, or we can assume them to be assessed on a sliding scale (½d per foot for blank film, 1d for positives and 8d for negatives has been published as a basis), or we may assume the government will adopt a special measure as mentioned by the Chancellor to meet the case.

"Observe," said Will Barker, of the Barker Company, "I am a British manufacturer, mostly interested in British films. We are looking for revenue, and I think amusements a fair thing to tax, but in the first place, if the duty is to be imposed only upon imported films, I think it is unjust. The government should also tax the British manufacturer on his raw stock, which nearly all comes from abroad. By that means you obtain a revenue producing tax and not a protective duty. Secondly, the government, in my opinion, is taxing films the wrong way. Films, I think, should be taxed by the foot and not by their value. It would be vastly simpler. The government by the plan it has chosen will require a staff of expert appraisers. What is to prevent a manufacturer, say, in Java, from sending a finished print to his agent in London and charging it to that agent at a rate of 2d. per foot. Accordingly he is able to sell at 2d. plus the duty of 33 1-3 and whatever profit he chooses to put on it. On the other hand a manufacturer in Italy sends his article in at a profit price, say 3d. or 4d. per foot, and has to pay the 33 1-3 duty on that. There must be appraisers, otherwise films will be coming in at all sorts of prices. Another point is this: Who is to judge the value of negatives? If it is coming in with 33 1-3 on it our friend in Java may say it is only worth 2d. per foot; then he may make 100 prints from it. In my opinion anything which will tend to restrict the best of everything in the kinema world from being shown on the screens in Britain will very speedily close up our kinema theaters."

Other opinions aver that the American manufacturer will not be content with this state of things and it will only have the effect ultimately of bringing every firm of note over to these shores to produce. It is a fact that two important American concerns are already here and a third, the Famous Players, is well on the way.

It does not require a great stretch of the imagination to conjure up visions of the planning and scheming possible in order to under-estimate to the lowest concealable degree the true value of a film. At the Customs House the officials express the opinion that it will be very curious if the wit of the department cannot devise a way of fixing the values. It is pointed out that expert opinion can always be obtained in the revenue interest, and any obvious evasions can be approached by the officials in another and more objectionable manner.

On the whole, most of our leading manufacturers, agents and renters are cheerily optimistic over the new measure which comes into effect October 1.

HELEN DUNBAR BUYS HOME.

Helen Dunbar, who is perhaps the best known grand dame and "mother" in motion pictures, and who is now playing important roles with Francis X. Bushman of the Quality Pictures Corporation, has just bought a beautiful home in Hollywood, California. It is a low one-story bungalow, with six rooms, furnished throughout in mahogany and with many new and important home features. The lot is one hundred and fifty by seventy-five feet and is situated on the top of a hill in the western section of Hollywood, overlooking the city of Los Angeles. In speaking of her home, Miss Dunbar says: "California to me is a paradise. I hope I will never have to live in the east again, and when I do retire from pictures I am going to settle down here for the remainder of my days. I had often heard of California being such a wonderful place, but words are too few to describe how beautiful and how wonderful it is."

MUTUAL ADDS TO PUBLICITY SERVICE.

A publicity service to the exhibitor has been established by the Mutual Film Corporation. The plan puts ready prepared advertising for his house in his hands every week, with copy available for his newspaper ads and his house program relating to every release on the Mutual program.

This is accomplished by the issuance of thousands of copies of two "clip sheet" publications, known as the Mutual Masterpicture Ad and Press Sheet and the Mutual Program Ad and Press Sheet.

These carry ad copy, press stories for newspaper consumption and cuts. The cuts and sheets are supplied through each of the Mutual's offices. This makes it possible to put this system of publicity aids in the hands of the exhibitor simultaneously with the films to which they apply.

FINE CAST FOR PATHE'S "AT BAY."

George Fitzmaurice, who is producing for Pathe "At Bay," George Scarborough's fine play, has signed up a splendid cast for the picture. Florence Reed is his leading woman and she is supported by Frank Sheridan, Charles Waldron, Lester Chambers and De Witt Jennings. Fitzmaurice started work on his production September 28.

WELLINGTON PLAYTER LOANED TO QUALITY.

Through the courtesy of Kolb & Dill, Inc., Wellington Playter, who has signed a contract with them for a year to play characters and leads, was loaned to the Quality Pictures Corporation for a period of two weeks to play the role of Jules Blondeau in the production of "Pennington's Choice."

River Film Corporation

Harry Raver Heads New Company—Has Batch of Thomas' Plays.

MODESTLY proclaiming its determination to make high-class pictures and market them on their merits, the Raver Film Corporation enters the arena with a Delaware charter and three hundred thousand dollars capital stock. Harry R. Raver is president and the executive head of the organization, and owns control of the stock. Con T. Kennedy, owner of the Great Kennedy Shows, which has been for years the amusement feature of expositions, fall festivals and carnivals, and who was associated with Mr. Raver in the same business in 1903 and 1904, is vice-president. Walter B. Isaac, builder and owner of apartment houses in Manhattan, is secretary and treasurer. A number of well-known showmen and business men complete the list of stockholders.

Harry R. Raver.

Mr. Raver has acacquired the sole rights for motion pictures of an imposing list of well-known theatrical plays, prominent among which is the valuable collection owned by Augustus Thomas twenty-nine in number, this collection having been kept intact for the past year in spite of flattering offers from prominent feature producers. Mr. Thomas' contract with the Raver Film Corporation calls for a first payment of eighty thousand dollars, subsequent advances to the amount of fifty-eight thousand dollars and further payments from the gross receipts, making perhaps the largest sum ever involved for material by any producing company in the history of motion pictures.

All of Mr. Thomas' great successes will, therefore, be produced under the Raver trade mark. These will include "The Witching Hour," "As a Man Thinks," "Alabama," "The Hoosier Doctor," "Oliver Goldsmith," "The Harvest Moon," "The Ranger" and others well known to every city and town in America boasting of a first-class theater.

The work of organizing the Raver Film Corporation has been in progress since Harry R. Raver and Augustus Thomas disposed of their interests in the All-Star Feature Corporation, one of the pioneers in the production of well-known plays with famous stars in motion pictures. Mr. Raver was the executive head of the All-Star and brought into the field for the first time such stars as Dustin Farnum, Ethel Barrymore, Burr McIntosh, Edgar Selwyn, Digby Bell, Tully Marshall, Cyril Scott, Gail Kane, Jane Cowl, George Nash, Lew Dockstader, William Thompson, Winifred Kingston, George Irving and others.

Mr. Raver also brought to America D'Annunzio's great spectacle, "Cabiria," and introduced the two-dollar motion picture to America in June, 1914, at the Knickerbocker theater, New York. He is secretary and treasurer of the Itala Film Co. of America and has had important connections in the past among which are, general manager Eclair Film Co., Film Supply Co. of America, director Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co., president All-Star Feature Corporation, member Board of Governors United Managers' Theatrical Association and several other companies prominent in amusement affairs.

Speaking of the policy of the company, Mr. Raver said that no stock would be offered the public.

A one reel story by James Dayton entitled "Inside Facts" is occupying the attention of Richard Stanton and his company of Universal players. Myrtle Gonzales, Jack Nelson, Burton Wilson, and Hayward Mack appear in the leading roles in this offering.

Will Head Plimpton Forces

Miss Gertrude McCoy Will Be Surrounded by a Special Cast for Each Subject.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Horace G. Plimpton, president of Plimpton Epics Pictures, Inc., that Miss Gertrude McCoy has been engaged to head his new company. It is the intention to surround Miss McCoy with a special cast for each subject, the players being selected with due regard for their particular aptitude for the role to be played.

Gertrude McCoy.

Miss McCoy has had nearly five years' screen experience. That is the length of time she has been at the Edison studio, in the productions of which she is well known to exhibitors everywhere. She was given small parts in the beginning, but it was a very short time before she was appearing in the more pretentious Edison subjects.

Miss McCoy's activities have not been confined to work before the camera. She has written scenarios which have had marked success. Among these have been the recent releases of "Through Turbulent Waters" and "On the Stroke of Twelve." In these she also played, and to strong advantage. Another one of her more recent pictures is "June Friday."

The head of the Plimpton acting forces is above the medium height, is a hard worker, and has the nerve to do whatever may be required of her in the way of accepting hazards. One of her feats was driving a car alongside of an express train traveling fifty miles an hour and crossing the track ahead of the locomotive, at the same time waving her hand to the engineer, as called for in the script. So, too, she can wear clothes. With the Plimpton company she will be given wide latitude in the selection of gowns—in fact, Mr. Plimpton said on Tuesday that would be one of her specialties.

Miss McCoy has just been honored by having a large Baltimore house named for her. The Gertrude McCoy theater will be the fourth in the chain of the Lord Calvert Theaters Company and will seat 800 persons. It is expected Miss McCoy will attend the opening of the new house.

KALEM AUTHOR-DIRECTOR BECOMES EXECUTIVE.

Hamilton Smith, well known as the author and more recently as a director of Kalem productions, has been made the first assistant of William Wright, the secretary-treasurer, and has assumed many responsibilities requiring an expert acquaintance with technical branches of the industry. Undoubtedly this is one of the most unusual promotions ever received by an employe in the picture business.

Mr. Smith, who is not yet thirty years of age, has been responsible for scores of Kalem successes. In the past three years he has devised plots covering every phase of the art and his two serials, "The Girl Detective" and "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" brought him new laurels. In taking up the duties of a director several months ago he brought to that field the knowledge of an expert story teller, which was apparent in his productions.

The new executive department now so capably filled by Mr. Smith, was necessitated by the changes which took place at the Kalem headquarters following the death of Samuel Long, the former president, and requires an intimate knowledge of the Kalem policies. Mr. Smith will also act as film editor, giving the final approval to all Kalem productions.

Mirror Films Has Studio

Converts Old Dance Hall at Glendale, L. I., Into Modern and Commodious Motion Picture Plant.

THE Mirror Films, Incorporated, the formation of which was announced two weeks ago, with Clifford B. Harmon as president and Captain Harry Lambart as the director-general, has secured for studio purposes a casino and dance hall situated at Glendale, Long Island, near the juncture of Woodhaven and Myrtle avenues, and is within easy distance of Forest Hills, the Russell Sage Foundation development, Forest Park and a number of other places where scenes of almost any description can be taken.

Studio of Mirror Films, Inc., Glendale, L. I., Before Commencement of Alterations.

Captain Lambart heard that the casino and dance hall was for sale and went out to look the property over. He discovered that it was of steel and concrete with a frame hotel attached. There were two acres of ground. The main building contained a floor space of 147 by 90 feet in the dance hall proper. At one end he found a stage and at the other a long bar which could be used for hotel and barroom scenes.

In the basement he found a shooting gallery, which required only the installation of a screen, projection machines and a few chairs to make it an ideal projection room. Back of that was a space which required about five feet of concrete wall to make it a safe film vault of proportions. In addition, the basement presented opportunity for a large printing and developing plant.

On the second floor there were great spaces for drying rooms, dressing rooms for extra people, wardrobe, property rooms and scene docks with north light. With some remodeling, the hotel building will provide plenty of room for executive offices, scenario department and dressing rooms for the principals.

It did not take the Captain and the men who are associated with him very long to decide that the property was well situated and contained such facilities as would require several months to build if a new studio were erected. The property was taken over and the contract for the reconstruction was given out. In the studio proper, the only thing required was the replacing of some tile roofing with glass and the installation of the necessary paraphernalia.

In the other parts of the building the only necessary changes were those which called for the building of partitions. So complete was the whole thing found that a kitchen on the second floor can be turned into a restaurant for the studio force without any trouble whatever.

The ground which went with the studio can be used for intimate outdoor scenes and for those sets which cannot be accommodated on the studio floor. It has been estimated that ten directors can work at the same time with ordinary sets in the studio.

DEATH OF MAURICE G. GENNERT.

Maurice G. Gennert, senior partner of the firm of G. Gennert, dealers in photographic materials, died on Saturday, October 2, at his residence, 448 Riverside Drive, New York. The deceased was 47 years of age and leaves a widow and two daughters.

Mr. Gennert was born in Chatsworth, Ill., and became associated with his father, G. Gennert, in the photographic supply business, now located at 24 East Thirteenth street, twenty years ago.

The funeral services were held at the family home in Jersey City on Tuesday, June 5.

Roland Bottomley with Kalem

BECAUSE of his remarkable performance in the role of David in the three-act Broadway Favorites feature, "The Net of Deceit," Roland Bottomley may never again return to the legitimate stage. His work in that production made so strong an impression upon the Kalem Company that this popular star has been added to the galaxy of players who appear regularly in Kalem features.

Roland Bottomley.

Mr. Bottomley possesses a personality which should speedily make him a prime favorite with photoplay patrons. It was this personality which caused him to take up the stage as a career, in that it attracted the attention of no less a star than Ellen Terry and thus started the train of incidents which had for their culmination Mr. Bottomley's first appearance as a player.

The newest Kalem star was eight years old at the time and a boy soloist at the Oratory Brompton Cathedral, London. Miss Terry was present at the services one Sunday morning and the boy's voice charmed her to such an extent that she sent for him. Before the interview came to an end, the famous actress had decided to add the lad to her company.

The boy's first appearance was in "Olivia," at the famous Lyceum theater, London. Later he played in Irving's productions of "Henry VIII" and "King Lear." Bottomley continued with the famous stars for five years, when he attracted the attention of Sir Forbes-Robertson and joined the latter's company. Among some of the productions in which he took part while with this eminent star were "Hamlet," "Macbeth," etc.

His first appearance in New York was with "The Quaker Girl," which scored at the Park theater. This was followed in turn by "High Jinks," at the Lyric and Casino theaters; a"The Laughing Husband," at the Knickerbocker theater, and "Sari," at the Liberty theater. He also supported Anna Held during her last engagement at the Casino theater and toured in "The Arcadians."

It will therefore be seen that in transferring his allegiance to the screen Mr. Bottomley brings with him a wealth of experience. His next Kalem vehicle will be the spectacular four-act production of the famous extravaganza, "The Black Crook." In this feature Mr. Bottomley will enact the role of Rodolphe.

ROSKAM FILM HOSPITAL BUSY.

Ever since Edward M. Roskam announced that he had opened up a film hospital at 220 West Forty-second street where he personally cuts titles and edits single reel and feature productions for the trade, Roskam has been working steadily day and night, to the extreme satisfaction of his customers. Feature producers as far West as Chicago have wired offering Eddie big prices if he would come to their city and fix up their productions. From present indications Roskam feels that there is enough work for him to handle in the East, as he has cut, edited and improved over 60,000 feet of film in the first two weeks that he has been in business.

POWER'S AT ELECTRICAL EXPOSITION.

For the purpose of graphically depicting the various phases of the electrical industry, four Power's Cameragraph No. 6B motion picture projecting machines were utilized, with the usual excellent results, at the Electrical Exposition, held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, during the week of October 5, 1915.

Buckwalter Joins Kleine

Will Manage the Denver Office—Has Had Wide Experience.

H. H. BUCKWALTER, long and favorably known to the picture industry of the Rocky Mountain states, is the new Kleine manager at Denver. Few, if any, residents of the mountain metropolis have been longer or more actively associated with the film business than Buckwalter, who, prior to the birth of The General Film Company, owned and operated an exchange in that city. When the latter organization was formed, he was given the management of its Denver Branch, a post of unusual importance, carrying with it the development of the picture business in that territory.

Aside from his long experience, the new Kleine manager is a man of rare personality and extraordinary capabilities, endowments which lie close to the hearts of exhibitors whose films must pass through snow-bound cuts and over bridgeless rivers. The older generation of film men still relate that memorable adventure of Buckwalter and the Cheyenne exhibitor who received his show on time, despite a snow-bound train and many miles of almost impassable mountain roads.

Mr. Buckwalter was at that time manager of the General Film Company's Denver office. A Cheyenne exhibitor wired frantically at 2 p. m.: "Train carrying my show snow-bound. Have advertised heavily. What shall I do?"

Buckwalter wired back: "Keep on advertising. Film will reach you plenty of time."

Evidently this satisfied the exhibitor for about thirty minutes. Then back came his piteous plea: "Don't see how you can get film in on time. Railroad closed at least twenty-four hours more. Have advertised heavily. My house new and can't afford to close. What can you do?"

And then "Buck" got on the job in dead earnest. A phone call developed the fact that no hope lay in the railroad. Flying machines were not then in their present stage of perfection. "Buck" looked out of the window, caught sight of his Winton Six and wired back: "Will arrive Cheyenne opening time 7:30 p. m. Post notice."

The exhibitor did. He hastily constructed a bulletin board and announced that all the elements combined couldn't cheat the good people of Cheyenne out of their pictures that night. Then he waited.

Meanwhile "Buck" with a boy from the exchange for company, stepped hard and full on the gas control of the big Winton. He went down the main street in the waning light of a wintry afternoon as no one was ever known to go before in the memory of the oldest corner "cop." He swung into the hilly country road and never stopped until he reached the first big town outside of Denver. Then the boy got out and left a telegram at the railroad station reading: "Arrived 5 p. m. Left 5.02 p. m."

This the Cheyenne exhibitor posted and many more of similar burden until the news spread and a crowd collected about the bulletin board. Every twenty or thirty minutes a fresh message arrived and was duly posted amid the cheers of the populace. Meanwhile the Winton roared through the mountains, tearing through snow and mud, hurtling down grade, careening desperately around dangerous bends with a rear wheel now and then spinning blithely on nothing more substantial than pure mountain ozone. It was a deadly ride, made in the darkness of an early Winter night.

In Cheyenne, the exhibitor prayed between times and the crowd, watch in hand, waited hopefully. But seven o'clock came and seven-twenty and seven-twenty-five, but still no film. And then, just as the town clock boomed the half-hour, the roar of the Winton was heard and into the crowd of excited, cheering people dashed the big touring car with "Buck" and the film in the nick of time!

How "Buck" delivered "The Message to Garcia" made a seven-day sensation in Denver and Cheyenne and may be considered a fair example of the kind of service Kleine exhibitors in the Rocky Mountain States may expect from the new manager.

HESSER WILL REPRESENT METRO IN CANADA.

Edwin Bower Hesser, one of the youngest and most capable publicity experts in the amusement world, has accepted a position as Director of Publicity for the Metro Pictures, Ltd., the new Canadian branch of the Metro Pictures Corporation, at Montreal. For more than a year Mr. Hesser was the special press representative of the old Kinemacolor Company in New York. Mr. Hesser is thoroughly conversant with amusement enterprises and conditions in this country and in Canada. He not only conducted vaudeville and concert tours through Canada, but for a year he had a string of motion picture theaters extending from coast to coast, which he supplied with a special program of films.

Wallace Reid

FOR several years well known to motion picture audiences throughout the United States, Wallace Reid is now one of the valuable players with the Lasky Feature Play Company. Mr. Reid's playing of the role of Don Jose with Geraldine Farrar in the Lasky production of "Carmen" unquestionably will stamp him as one of the best leading men now appearing before the camera. An attractive appearance in the uniform of the Spanish soldier and his acting in the fight scenes of the play will make Mr. Reid dear to the hearts of the women who like their heroes on the screen. Mr. Reid has just completed for the Lasky Company, acting in the picturization of the "Chorus Lady," by James Forbes, a Paramount picture which will be released October 18.

Wallace Reid.

Wallace Reid is a son of Hal Reid, the noted writer of melodrama. Wallace was born in St. Louis, April 15, twenty-four years ago. The Reid family moved to New York when Wallace was ten years old and there he went to the public schools, later going to the New Jersey Military Academy at Freehold, N. J. Young Reid's first appearance on the stage was at the age of four, when he played the role of a little girl in "Slaves of Gold." In 1909 the Reid family moved to Wyoming, the Big Horn Basin district. There Wallace worked on a ranch, ran a hotel and worked on the government survey of the Shoshone Dam. He soon returned to New York and secured a job on the New York Star, as a cub reporter.

He then appeared in vaudeville in "The Girl and the Ranger," a sketch by his father. At the close of his season he went with the Selig Company, where he remained for nine months playing bits, characters, leads and everything that came along. Here he learned to operate a motion picture camera, but becoming tired of the motion picture work he went with the Motor Magazine as assistant editor. While acting in this capacity he secured the motion picture rights to "The Confession" and sold it to the Vitagraph Company, and he and his father appeared in the picture. He was with the Vitagraph eleven months playing leads opposite Florence Turner. He left the Vitagraph to play leads for the Reliance eastern company. He came west with Otis Turner and with the Universal he directed, acted, set up the camera and wrote the scripts. Just before joining the Lasky forces he was with D. W. Griffith.

HOW CLARA WHIPPLE WAS "PICKED."

Frances Marion, the scenario writer who has written many plays for Mary Pickford, and who wrote "The Fisher Girl," in which Clara Whipple and Roy Applegate are working for the Equitable Company, was sent down to Block Island when the company was there last week, to look Miss Whipple over and to talk with her, in view of writing some special dramas in which she should be starred.

When Miss Marion arrived, the company was out making pictures, and the writer decided to take a walk around the place to see what interesting things she could pick up. As she walked along the shore she came across a very beautiful young woman with wonderful hair the color of gold, and eyes which were startlingly green, who was sitting looking out pensively over the ocean.

Immediately Miss Marion was attracted by the scene, and determined to write a scenario about a very pensive young woman with green eyes and golden hair.

That night when she went to the hotel to meet Miss Whipple, she was greatly surprised to learn that Miss Whipple was the very girl she had seen that afternoon on the coast.

Consequently beautiful Clara Whipple will be starred in the very near future in a scenario which calls for all the charming qualities which she possesses.

Coming Broadway Star Features

Vitagraph Company Has a Number of Features Soon to Be Released Under That Brand.

ON EVERY alternate Tuesday and Saturday, the Vitagraph Company releases a three-part film story, which it has collectively named Broadway Star Features. These picture plays, while shorter than the Blue Ribbon features, which run four parts and over, are their equal in story, production and photography, and are enacted by specially selected casts, each individual member being chosen for his or her qualifications to portray the character assigned them. Commencing with the release, on Tuesday, October 26, of the powerful dramatic story, "To Cherish and Protect," and continuing through November, the Vitagraph Company plans to give motion picture patrons five of the strongest three-part features listed under the name Broadway Star.

Scene from "To Cherish and Protect" (Vitagraph).

"To Cherish and Protect" was written by William Vaughn Pettit and produced by William Humphrey. It is a story of tense action, pathos and direct human appeal. The cast includes Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, Bobby Connelly, Harry Northrup, Denton Vane, Estelle Mardo and Gladden James.

In November four Broadway Star Features will be released that combine the best work of author, producer and artists, and embrace subjects that appeal strongly because of their dramatic worth. The first release of the month will be "For the Honor of the Crew," a drama of college life, written and produced by William P. S. Earle. The cast will introduce William B. Davidson, Columbia '09, to the screen with James Morrison, who plays the lead, Edward Elkas and Muriel Ostriche.

Following "For the Honor of the Crew," the Vitagraph Company will release Seymour Galland's dramatically human story, entitled "Heredity," produced by William Humphrey, with an all star Vitagraph cast. It is a story whose rapidly passing scenes depict the lives of two girls, who, starting their careers in a foundling asylum, travel opposite paths in life. Carolyn Birch, Rose Tapley, Thomas R. Mills, Templer Saxe, Katherine Franek, Jay Dwiggins, Denton Vane and Mr. Humphrey were responsible for its enactment.

"Anselo Lee," by Paul Kester, a story of gypsy life, embracing a romance of the Adonis of the tribe, in which a girl of high social position figures prominently, gives yet another angle to the dramatic screen play and offers opportunity for characteristic scenes that combine the wild life of the predatory tribes with the fantastic backgrounds of their woodland home. The players who journeyed to Lake Placid, New York, to enact the outdoor scenes included Antonio Moreno, Naomi Childers, Donald Hall, Frankie Mann and Nellie Anderson, the drama being produced under the direction of Harry Handworth.

The last of this quintet of feature pictures presents Maurice Costello and a star cast in "Saints and Sinners," a story of misunderstandings and jealous suspicions that separate husband and wife, written by Ouida Bergere and produced by Van Dyke Brooke. Associated with Mr. Costello in its enactment are Leah Baird, Adele De Garde, Garry McGarry and Mr. Brooke.

C. B. Price Goes to Canada

Well-Known Film Man Will Be General Manager, with Headquarters in Toronto, for the Mutual.

WORD comes from Toronto that C. B. Price is now installed at the desk of the general manager for Canada of the Mutual Film Corporation, with headquarters in that city. Mr. Price was in New York a couple of weeks ago, and his sudden disappearance is now explained. His new assignment will afford him ample room for expansion, for getting busy—and that's the sort of job he likes.

C. B. Price.

Mr. Price has had large experience in exchange management. For several years he was with the General Film Company. While with the General he traveled much, especially on the Pacific Coast. At one time he was manager of the Los Angeles office, and the present splendidly equipped establishment in that city is a criterion of what he can do when he cuts loose.

Later Mr. Price was special representative for the World Film on the Pacific Coast, with headquarters in San Francisco. In the early days of V-L-S-E he organized the office in the Bay City, and just prior to his arrival in New York had been in charge of the western division of the Big Four.

Mr. Price adds to his film equipment a faculty for making friends. He has a capacity for adapting himself to his surroundings, and we may be sure he will do this in his new home. When he is disposed to be frank, he will not only admit but insist that San Francisco is the biggest town Uncle Sam owns. It's a far cry from gay San Fran to staid Toronto, but Price will like the Canadians—and they'll like him.

ASSOCIATED SIGNS SEVERAL STARS.

The Associated Film Sales Corporation of New York City, which recently launched the Associated program, has just signed up ten of the leading lights of filmdom, to play and direct in their many companies. Tom Moore, the former Kalem leading man and director, has been signed up by the Associated to play in and direct for the National Company. Al. Ray, the young director, who is considered one of the best comedy producers in the business, has been signed up by the Associated for five years. He will direct for the Federal brand. Harry La Pearl, former producing clown with Barnum & Bailey's and the New York Hippodrome, who starred in the MinA comedies, will play leads for Mr. Ray. Charles K. French has left Tom Ince's producing staff and will direct for one of the California companies of the Associated. Will Rex will produce dramas for the Federal Company. Gertrude Bambrick, the former Biograph player; Beatrice Allen, the stage favorite, and Lillian Wiggins, who used to star in Pathe releases, have all been signed up. The Associated is also dickering for the services of several other stars and producers and expects to announce the names of several new additions to its already long list, very shortly.

PATHE TO RELEASE AN AMERICAN DRAMA IN COLOR.

Pathe will release the week of November 3 "The Adventures of a Madcap," a four-reel drama by Balboa, and featuring Jackie Saunders. This picture has been colored by the Pathe process since it was particularly adapted to this treatment, showing, as it does, out-of-door backgrounds of peculiar beauty. Miss Saunders is supported by a good cast, including Frank Mayo, Corenne Grant and Philo McCullough.

New Stars for Equitable

Much Activity Shown by the New Combination—New Subjects in the Making.

EQUITABLE keeps busy. During the past week many engagements of more than passing interest have been consummated. In addition to the procuring of important plays and books, original stories from the pen of Equitable scenario staffs, a great number of highly important fiction works and star players have been secured.

William Courtenay, at present starring in "Under Fire" at the Hudson theater and recently seen as star in "Under Cover" will make his first screen appearance in a picturization of Maxwell Grey's "The Silence of Dean Maitland."

Arthur Ashley.

William Courtenay, during the time he has been appearing in stellar roles, has appeared successively under the direction of Richard Mansfield, Daniel Frohman and the Selwyns. His appearance on the screen for Equitable will be his first. Marguerite Leslie, who made her first appearance on the American stage as Mrs. Ogden in "The Virginian," and who is now permanently with the Equitable Corporation and who will make her first screen bow in "The Green-Eyed God," is one of our most dignified and important stellar artistes.

Her work in "Arsene Lupin," "Nero," "Preserving Mrs. Panmure," "The Concert," "A Member of Tattersalls, "The Witching Hour," "The Gamblers," "The Money Moon" and as leading woman for Sir Henry Irving, brought her international fame. Miss Leslie is a sister of Martha Hedman, and it was through Miss Hedman's influence that Miss Leslie was induced to adopt screen work. Her first work will characterize the Equitable program early in December.

Marguerite Leslie.

William Courtenay.

Supporting William Courtenay and playing very important roles, will be two of filmland's foremost favorites. Mary Charleson, last seen as star of "The Road o' Strife" and previous to that with Vitagraph, will have the important part of ingenue, while popular Arthur Ashley will handle a similarly important male role in the same production.

Mr. Ashley recently appeared opposite Emmy Wehlen while his work in a feature with Alice Brady commended him to the Equitable as an excellent opposite for Courtenay.

Marguerite Fischer, who begins work this week at the Fifty-second street studio, will have beautiful Adele Ray with her under the direction of Harry Pollard in "The Dragon." Charles Seay, who is staging "The Fisher Girl," in which Muriel Ostriche, William H. Tooker, Clara Whipple, Ethel Langtry and Myrtis Coney are appearing, returned from Block Island and leave immediately for Jacksonville, Fla., where the production will be completed. E. Mason Hopper, at work with Gail Kane, who will make her Equitable debut in "The Labyrinth."

Joseph Golden is working on "The Senator," in which Charles J. Ross, another Equitable star, will make his appearance. The company supporting Mr. Ross is now at Washington, where many scenes are being made, with the Treasury, White House, Smithsonian Institute, Congressional Library and Senate Chambers as backgrounds.

Miss Sonia Massell

ONE of the players of more than usual interest in the cast of the Charles K. Harris Feature picture, "For Sale, a Baby," which is being produced at the Kinemacolor studio at Whitestone, is Miss Sonia Massell, a Russian actress who came to this country a few years ago from Warsaw.

In her native land Miss Massell was educated at the gymnasium, and became a revolutionist. After being held a political prisoner for some time, she escaped to this country. It was only after she was safe in the United States that she began her career as an actress. First she played with the Russian stock company on the East Side in New York, the company in which Madame Nazimova first appeared in this country. She learned to speak English readily, but it was some time before she could play in English.

Sonia Massell.

On the American stage, she first appeared in comic opera. "Naughty Marietta" was one of the most charming operettas in which she sang. But the charming little actress believes that she is more adaptable to the screen or the dramatic stage, rather than the singing one. It is her ambition to play great, striking roles. She would like to interpret the Russian woman in a play.

In her role of "Rachel Cohen" in "For Sale, a Baby," Miss Massell has considerable opportunity to display her emotional ability. It is an old Jewish woman, clinging to the ancient traditions of her race and religion, the wife of a pawnshop keeper, that she plays. She displays a wonderful sympathy with the part.

Miss Massell went down to the lower East Side to get color for her costume and the part. She went around chatting with the women who were like her role, and got their point of view. She also purchased the various parts of her costume in the little Jewish stores.

"For Sale, a Baby," promises to be an extraordinary drama.

LUBIN COMPANY AT BLOCK ISLAND.

Jack Pratt, Lubin feature director, with Richard Buhler, leading man, Rosetta Brice, leading lady, and a company of twelve have left Philadelphia for Block Island to begin work on the production of "A Man's Making," to be released through the V-L-S-E offices. From Philadelphia, the company proceeded by train to New York, where they boarded Mr. Buhler's racing schooner "Ben Hur." The outside (ocean) course will be taken to Block Island that many of the ship's deck scenes of the production may be taken en route.

"A Man's Making" is a powerful drama of the rivalry of father and son, a story of the sea and sea life, in which Mr. Buhler will be given excellent opportunity to display his versatility in the role of the son, the sturdy young American. It is from the pen of Director Pratt himself, who collaborating with Anthony P. Kelly, of the Lubin scenario staff, has also prepared the script for a stage presentation after the film version is made. Mr. Pratt and his company will be at Block Island for about four weeks, then to return to the Philadelphia studios to complete the picture.

J. Allen Boone

SCARCELY a month old, the Authors' Associated Agency, with Mr. Jacob Wilk as its guiding spirit, has made itself a power in the illimitable field of the motion picture. If a producing director today wants a good story for converting into a picture—one with a name, a reputation taken from a great novel or a great play, he goes to Mr. Wilk, in the Longacre Building.

J. Allen Boone.

But more than that. If you are making a big picture and want a big star, one of the $2,000-a-week kind, you go to Mr. Wilk. Or maybe you are a big star yourself, and want to be in a big feature. You also go to Mr. Wilk. In short, inevitably deviating from its original program, the Authors' Agency has by force of demand become a recognized focal point for the big doings in motion picture matters.

The organization is visibly growing. It has attracted the services of J. Allen Boone, a brilliant young writer, who will be a busy member of the A. A. A.'s literary staff. Mr. Boone is a young literary man of social standing who has worked on the best newspapers and magazines in the United States and has traveled extensively in Europe and Africa.

Quite recently he held the post of publicity manager for the Lubin Company. He has written photoplays and dramatic sketches, and is a member of many literary and social clubs in Philadelphia, New York and Newport.

This intellectual equipment should be of valuable assistance to the Authors' Associated Agency.

Forrest Stanley

FORREST STANLEY, Oliver Morosco's noted leading man whom Mr. Morosco loaned from his famous Burbank Theater stock company to the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, is one of the latest favorites of the speaking stage who has really made good on the screen.

Forrest Stanley.

As leading man for the Morosco motion picture organization he has immediately become popular among patrons of the Paramount theaters throughout the country as a result of his splendid work in such releases as "The Wild Olive," in which he stars with Myrtle Stedman, "The Rug Maker's Daughter," with Maud Allan, the celebrated dancer, and in "Pretty Mrs. Smith," with Fritzi Scheff.

Few knew that this popular actor started out in life to be a building contractor. After leaving college he became connected with some of the biggest construction enterprises in New York, assisting in the erection of such buildings as the Prudential Life, the Astor Hotel and the Produce Exchange. In a short time he became manager for Thomas Diamond and took personal charge of annual contracts with the firm's patrons, including the Van Rensselaer estate, the Vanderbilts and other wealthy property holders.

In the meantime he had often appeared behind the footlights and when a single appearance began to lengthen into engagements and his periodic excursions upon the road began to last for six months at a time, the young university man decided to forswear the slide rule and T-square and stick to acting.

Forrest Stanley's success the past four seasons as head of the Burbank Theater stock company, has become one of this well-known organization's traditions. Immensely popular and an artist of the greatest diligence, his withdrawal was the occasion for many expressions of genuine regret. He has just finished work in Mr. Morosco's forthcoming release, "Jane," in which Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant make their screen debut and is shortly to appear in support of Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl."

W. P. BARRETT MANAGER OF EASTERN.

The resignation is announced of Elwood F. Bostwick, as general manager of the Eastern Film Corporation of Providence, R. I. Frederick S. Peck, president of the company, has appointed W. P. Barrett, business manager, and George Lessey, chief of productions. Both men have worked under the banner of the Edison Company for several years. Mr. Barrett will have complete charge of the business departments of the Rhode Island organization. Mr. Lessey will be remembered as a director for several years. Mr. Lessey has just completed the production of "Cap'n Eri," a sea story by Joseph C. Lincoln, the famous author, which features George Bunny. The new producer has many plans for the company and is rapidly putting them into effect. Bert Ennis will have charge of publicity and sales for the Eastern Film Corporation.

EDWIN CAREWE'S NEXT SUBJECT.

Edwin Carewe, who produced for B. A. Rolfe the highly successful "Destiny" or "The Soul of a Woman," by Anthony P. Kelley, has signed a new and highly advantageous contract with that management. Before producing another picture with Emily Stevens, his star in "Destiny," and previously in "Cora," by Fred de Gressac, Mr. Carewe will put on for Mr. Rolfe, Frank Dazey's "The House of Tears," with Martha Hedman as the star. The new Stevens feature will follow and then the young director will begin work on a huge feature along entirely new lines, the nature of which is not yet divulged. Three hours after the private view of "Destiny" the management was offered a cash profit of $50,000, but refused it. Offers have been pouring in on Carewe ever since, but he prefers to remain with Rolfe, with whom he made his first big successes as a director.

DAVID HORSLEY SIGNS CUMMINGS.

David Horsley has engaged Irving Cummings to play the leading male roles with one of his companies producing Centaur features, in which the Bostock animals also appear as motion picture actors.

By the engagement of Mr. Cummings Mr. Horsley adds another popular photoplayer to his already long list. As the leading man in the North American Film Corporation's successful serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," now running in many theaters throughout the country, Mr. Cummings scored a hit and as a result is very much in the public eye today. His feats in this serial, which included dashing in an automobile before a swiftly moving train, and deeds of a like character, stamped him, in addition to his expressive powers, as a man of intrepidity, to whom the playing of the most dangerous scenes are only a part of a day's work.

A SCRIPT IN RECORD TIME.

Jasper Ewing Brady, one of the Vitagraph staff, was commissioned by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton to prepare a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's military story, "Colton, U. S. N.," in the shortest possible time to complete a workable manuscript. Mr. Brady was told to select the speediest stenographer at the Vitagraph studio and get busy. Commencing at 10 a. m., Friday, October 1, Mr. Brady began dictating, and at 1 p. m. had completed the story, which included one hundred and eighty-five scenes and filled a book and a half with stenographic notes.

The stenographer began transcribing her notes at 2 p. m. and at 10 p. m. that night, with an hour for lunch, turned in the completed manuscript of forty pages. The dictating and transcribing occupied exactly ten hours of work, a record, so far as is known, for the writing and typing of a scenario.

Screen Will Dominate Drama

So Believes Edwin Thanhouser—Says in Time to Come the Stage Will Adopt Film Successes.

MOTION PICTURE domination of the drama was forecast by Edwin Thanhouser in a recent discussion of his part in the making of films for the Mutual program and the progress of the industry in general.

"The time is near at hand," declared Mr. Thanhouser, "when the speaking stage will be looking to the motion picture plays for material, absolutely reversing the condition which has prevailed."

In the course of his conversation Mr. Thanhouser unfolded plans for the making of films in the southern tropics and the frozen north. He announced that December 1 a new studio at Jacksonville, Fla., would be ready for operation and that near that time at least two companies would be sent into the northland Hudson Bay country. "With the Florida studio as a base we expect to make pictures up and down the coast at Miami, Savannah, through the West Indies and the Bermudas.

"Meanwhile, operations will continue as usual at the plant in New Rochelle, where a great deal of new equipment and many improvements have been made. Our cameras will be working in three zones—the north temperate, the arctic, and the tropical. These important moves represent the persistent effort of the Thanhouser corporation to develop that most vital element of the motion picture—realism.

"There are a few developments in the motion picture to come before we can say that it is a perfect thing. We can, however, expect nothing that is more perfect than nature itself, and the realism of the motion picture as it stands today is beyond betterment, except in minor details. We may see improvements which will result in perfect color rendition; we perhaps shall get better modeling of images through stereoscopic effect, and we may attain certain other refinements of the picture mechanically; but the big field of development in the art of the picture is more broadly defined.

"And I insist that the motion picture is coming to be the dominating form of dramatic expression. We are right up on the time when the speaking stage will come to the motion picture for material, just reversing the process of the time now passing when the motion picture borrows material from the stage and from the novel and short story. We are bound to see the time soon when the stage will be presenting its own version of the productions which have proven great screen successes."

Mr. Thanhouser's view of the relative positions of the speaking stage and the motion picture do not come from a one-sided position. He met success on the speaking stage before the motion picture was born and he adopted the motion picture only after he was fully convinced of its future. His speaking stage experience runs back into the days when he had a stock company in Milwaukee, Wis., and there pulled the old Academy of Music up from failure to a position of remarkable success. For eight years this Thanhouser stock company played there continuously, with a change of bill every week and with but eleven weeks of intermission in the whole period. Another interesting Thanhouser success was in stock at the Bush Temple in Chicago, which for many years was the dramatic center of the North Side of that city. There he built up a following that brought national attention.

Mr. Thanhouser can probably well claim for himself the title of the first theatrical man in America to enter the motion picture business.

WHAT LANG WANTED TO SAY.

New York, October 8, 1915.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir: The November issue of Photoplay Magazine contains an article under my name, entitled "The New Twist," purchased some time ago.

While it is true that every word in the article was written by me, the elimination of certain paragraphs and sentences—doubtless due to the necessity of making the type fit the space assigned—leaves but a portion of the argument I wished to present, and unskillful editing detracts to some degree from whatever literary style the article might have possessed. The latter is comparatively unimportant, but I am asking space in your publication to explain the point I really sought to make.

I have been impressed with the necessity of photoplaywrights devising new styles of exposition, and my article offered examples to show how new methods may be employed in handling plots which otherwise are lacking in novelty. In other words, a story told in the same conventional technical form must necessarily suggest its predecessors. To be new, both theme and method of treatment must be unhampered by convention. At the same time, however, the photoplaywright must have a sound basis for his innovations. The technical novelties which he offers must be as practical as those which he discards.

This point was almost completely eliminated in the condensation. As this was the sole novelty of the article I will appreciate it if you will give space to this announcement that the original article did contain an idea worthy of consideration and not merely a rehash of an old argument.

Very truly yours,
PHIL. LANG.

Donlin Picture Sold

Arrow Corporation Places "Right Off the Bat" with All Feature Booking Agency.

"RIGHT OFF THE BAT," the five-reel comedy-drama which introduces Mike Donlin, the baseball player, as a screen star, has been bought outright from the Arrow Film Corporation by the All Feature Booking Agency, of 71 West Twenty-third street. J. V. Ritchey, head of the All Feature Agency, has reserved for his own organization the booking of "Right Off the Bat" in New England and New York territory, including New York City and northern New Jersey.

A vigorous campaign for the sale of this truly American photoplay has been instituted by Mr. Ritchey. A print of the picture left New York the other day by fast steamer for England, where baseball was put on the map by King George and John J. McGraw, who appears with Donlin in "Right Off the Bat." Mike also was one of the world-touring baseball players who made our national sport popular abroad.

The Donlin photoplay covers Mike's career from the time when he was almost an infant in arms to the day, the proudest in his life, when he became a member of McGraw's pennant-winning Giants. For sixteen years, the longest service of any big league player but one, Mike Donlin appeared in the New York outfield, though he started his professional career as a pitcher

In that time Mike made many a record, including the still unbroken one of seven hits in seven trips to bat in one game. And of these seven hits only three were singles. One was a homer and two were triples. In these days of light hitting, that stands out as a remarkable feat. And Mike was one of the two outfielders of whom it has been said that no batter could "hit them where they ain't." Tris Speaker and Mike Donlin always saw to that.

WE'LL ALL VOTE FOR PETE.

Pete J. Schmid, who writes press notices for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, has broken into politics. Pete was nominated for Sheriff of Grantwood, N. J., by the Socialist Party of that progressive town. Pete claims his election with plenty to spare, and is trying to figure out what will be the best manner of entertaining the law breakers who will be his guests. Pete will undoubtedly run a high brow jail, feeding the inmates on celery, and allowing them to read the press matter he has placed in the trade papers for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company.

JOINS HORSLEY WRITERS.

Miss Theodora Harris, one of the best and foremost professional writers of photoplays, who has had many of her conceptions produced by the leading motion picture manufacturers, has been engaged by David Horsley to write feature scenarios and has joined the regular staff of writers at Mr. Horsley's studios in Los Angeles. Miss Harris has a splendid record of past performances which may be taken as an indication of what may be expected of her efforts in Mr. Horsley's productions.

A. W. WALKER ON VACATION.

A. W. Walker, general manager of the United Film Service of Seattle, Wash., is on a vacation trip and coming East rapidly. Walker's exchange has offices in Seattle, Portland, Spokane and Tacoma and the question of getting suitable pictures for his customers is the occasion of his trip eastward.

HUNT DIRECTING TWO REELERS.

Jay Hunt, who directed "The Protest," a three-reel feature with Crane Wilbur, which was recently released as Centaur Star Feature on the Mutual program, has been selected by David Horsley to direct the two reel Centaur Features in which the Bostock animals make their appearance as motion picture actors.

Charles Brandt

TO HAVE been five years on the screen and yet have seen the inside of but one studio is a record that is unique. That was the way it stood with Charles Brandt on Monday, two days following his resignation from the Lubin forces. When a World man met up with him at the Screen Club, which Mr. Brandt is making his New York address, the long-time associate of Arthur Johnson said he was going to stick to pictures—for this season, anyway; and that in spite of the fact that in the past several years he has had a goodly number of offers to return to the boards.

Charles Brandt.

Mr. Brandt accompanied Arthur Johnson to Philadelphia five years ago, when the two were engaged by Director Harry Salter to support Florence Lawrence. As principal character man Mr. Brandt played with Mr. Johnson until about fourteen months ago, when he was transferred to Barry O'Neill's feature company. His last work was with Director Pratt in the war picture just finished; in this he played General Brun, chief of staff and adviser to the prince. He was particularly well qualified for this part, having for a long time enacted the role of Colonel Sapt in support of J. K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda." It was after a re-engagement to play this role that he left New York on a Monday and played the part of Sapt on Saturday following in San Francisco after one rehearsal—and his last previous performance had been seven years before.

Mr. Brandt had been twenty-five years on the stage before going to the Lubin studio. In that time he had supported many of America's greatest players. His first engagement was in Philadelphia with Mrs. John Drew. His last was in "Madam X." at the Amsterdam theater. In the intervening years he had among others supported Fanny Davenport, Annie Pixley, Sol Smith Russell and Wilton Lackaye. Under engagement by Mrs. James A. Herne he played Mr. Herne's star part in "Sag Harbor" from coast to coast.

It is a splendid record Mr. Brandt has made on the screen. He has been successful in all his undertakings, and it was the success that followed upon hard work and long training. The former Lubin player says it is his intention to settle in New York if he is able to make an agreeable connection—and his friends have no doubt he will.

SOME STARS IN MINA.

During the past few weeks MinA Comedies have been unusually active and several stars have been added to their coterie of leads. To secure comedies out of the ordinary run has been their aim and the company have been receiving much complimentary criticism on their recent efforts.

Several of the subjects, such as "Alone in the City of Sighs and Tears," tend to burlesque and poke fun at more serious pictures and, in doing this, present something novel in filmdom.

A glance over the personnel of those who have joined the MinA forces bespeaks the quality of these comedies.

Constance Talmadge, who makes her first MinA appearance in "Beached and Bleached," is well known to film fans. While with the Vitagraph Players Miss Talmadge established a screen reputation for herself, specializing in comedy roles.

"Smiling" Bill Parsons, who needs no introduction, has also been recently added to the MinA forces.

Rena Rogers, a former Universal favorite, played the lead in the MinA, release, "The Honeymoon Roll," and because of her big success in that subject has been retained for future releases, making her next MinA appearance in "Alone in the City of Sighs and Tears."

Joseph T. Kilgour

LIKE many another successful actor on the speaking stage, Joseph Turnbull Kilgour, now one of the Vitagraph stars, received his stage training and developed an enthusiasm for the theater through association with amateurs and amateur productions. He was born at Ayr, Ontario, Canada, of Scotch parents. He received his schooling in the public schools of Ayr. When eighteen years of age, he came to the United States, making his home in Chicago, Ill. His first money-making position was as clerk in a stock-broker's office. It was during this time he became interested in amateur theatricals and even when he became a member of the Chicago Board of Trade and Stock Exchange, he played in numerous local productions that gave him the training so necessary to the development of an actor.

Joseph T. Kilgour.

In 1892, through the short-sightedness of a business partner, it became necessary for him to seek a different line of business and he turned to the stage. His first professional appearance was in Chicago, and as Jefferson Tompkins in "Niobe," which he played for one season. Then followed a long period of sucessful dramatic work following him down to his latter successes in New York when, in 1908 and 1909, he appeared in "The Easiest Way" and "Captain Barrington."

It was during his impersonation of President Washington in "Captain Barrington," Mr. Kilgour received his first taste of motion picture acting. The Vitagraph Company at that time was producing a series of incidents in the historical life of Washington, and almost despaired of finding an actor to successfully play President Washington, when J. Stuart Blackton, one of the Vitagraph heads, saw Mr. Kilgour, and immediately engaged him. His advent as a screen actor was successful. This was in 1909. When Mr. Kilgour decided to become a motion picture star, it was natural he should become identified with the Vitagraph Company, and unless all signs fail, he will register a bigger success with motion picture fans than he has with the followers of the legitimate drama. A few of the most important picture play productions in which Mr. Kilgour has appeared include "The Turn of the Road," "The Writing on the Wall," "Thou Art the Man," "My Lady's Slipper," in which Mr. Kilgour will be seen as Louis XVI, etc.

Quality-Metro Companies in East

Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Marguerite Snow Will Make New York Their Permanent Headquarters.

"CALIFORNIA is just as good as ever it was for motion picture making, and I like it immensely, but New York offers facilities for producing elaborate features which outweigh all the considerations of climate and consistent atmospherical conditions which are the Golden Gate State's biggest assets."

This declaration was made by Francis X. Bushman at the Metro offices in the Heidelberg building early this week, in announcing the fact that he intended making his permanent headquarters in the east. Mr. Bushman arrived in New York from the Quality-Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal., last Saturday, bringing with him the first print to reach this city of "Pennington's Choice," the latest production of the Quality Pictures Corporation for the Metro program and the first Metro release starring the beautiful Beverly Bayne with Mr. Bushman.

Mr. Bushman was accompanied by Miss Bayne, Lester Cuneo and Helen Dunbar. Other members of the Quality-Metro company in which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are the stellar attractions, reached New York early this week and will at once begin work on two important screen productions for Metro.

The first of these will be a picturization of "The Yellow Dove," a stirring romance of the international secret service by George Gibbs, which was accepted in manuscript form for screen production before its publication by D. Appleton & Company. The other production in which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will be featured is "Richard Carvel," the great Winston Churchill historical romance.

Both these productions are planned on a scale somewhat more elaborate than the average high-class feature, and in both Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will divide stellar honors. The interiors for both pictures will be taken in New York, while for the exteriors of "Richard Carvel" Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will go with their company to Maryland and Virginia to obtain the requisite historical settings demanded by the Winston Churchill novel.

Mr. Bushman's latest picture, which will be released by Metro on November 8, a print of which he brought on with him from the Coast, is "Pennington's Choice." This is a drama of physical prowess and is a distinct contrast to Mr. Bushman's last picture, "The Silent Voice," in which he starred with Marguerite Snow. In "Pennington's Choice" Mr. Bushman battles with J. J. Jeffries and performs many other feats of manly endeavor.

Marguerite Snow, the other member of the triumvirate of stellar talent under contract with the Quality Pictures Corporation, will remain at the Hollywood studio until her newest picture, "Rosemary—That's for Remembrance," is completed. Then she, too, will come east.

Until arrangements for a studio in New York for the Quality-Metro companies are completed, Mr. Bushman will use the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., quarters at No. 3 West Sixty-first street. With Miss Bayne he will probably begin work there early in the coming week. Negotiations are already under way for a big Manhattan studio and will probably be concluded in the course of the next fortnight.

After Marguerite Snow's departure for the east, the Hollywood plant will be maintained by the Quality Pictures Corporation for such pictures as the Metro may deem it expedient to have produced there. The three Quality stars, however, Bushman, Bayne and Snow will be permanently located in the east.

ROTHACKER MAKES SPECIALS.

W. R. Rothacker, of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, Chicago, Ill., writes that he has made special pictures of Miss Anita King, the Paramount girl, on the occasion of her visit to Chicago for the Famous Players Company; a series of scenes of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle to be used in a production being made by the Cort Film Corporation, and that he has done all the photography on the Ring Lardner baseball comedies for the World Film Corporation.

LARRY McGILL TAKES VACATION.

Larry McGill, having finished the six-reel production, "How Molly Made Good," for the Kulee Feature Film Co., is taking his first vacation in five years. Larry owns a pecan grove in Florida and has gone down to see how things are progressing. Several propositions are open to him on his return, ten days or two weeks hence, but he has not fully decided on his future connections.

Maude Fealy with Kleine

"Bondwomen" Is First Kleine Subject Featuring This Popular Actress.

KLEINE studios are working at capacity night and day since the acquisition of Maude Fealy. "Bondwomen" is the title of the first big feature in which she will be seen, a story built along original lines and one certain to awaken the interest of all women and a number of otherwise good and dutiful husbands whose chief weakness lies in the tightness with which the purse-strings are held.

Maude Fealy.

"Bondwomen" is the story of a successful business woman accustomed to handling money, self-reliant and capable, who marries a surgeon obsessed with the idea that no woman is fit to become his confidante in financial matters. The theme is one of much human interest and one sure to hit home in all audiences.

Miss Fealy will be supported by a sterling cast which includes Ira Shepard, Mildred Gregory, John Sainpolis, Jr., David Landow, Harmon McGregor, Harry Knowles, Maurice Stewart, Jr., Shirley De Me and Frederic Sumner.

Miss Fealy is well known to the amusement-loving public of two continents. During her career she has supported such stars as Sir Henry Irving, E. S. Willard, William Gillette, Nat Goodwin, Richard Mansfield, William Collier, Robert Hilliard, Holbrook Blinn and others whose names are household words in America.

Her first success came in the play "Quo Vadis?" and instantly attracted the attention of William Gillette, who promptly engaged her to support him in "Sherlock Holmes." This was followed by an engagement to support Sir Henry Irving in the roles enacted by Ellen Terry, in which she completely captivated the London public.

Under the direction of John Cort, Miss Fealy has been starred in a number of great successes, conspicuous among which are "The Illusion of Beatrice," "The Stronger Sex" and "The Right Princess."

PAUL GILMORE HAS PRIVATE STUDIO.

The first moving picture studio built entirely for personal use ever erected in the middle west or in the United States, for that matter, is now being constructed on the roof of the Gilmore apartments in Milwaukee, Wis.

These apartments, which are just being completed, were built and are owned by Paul Gilmore, the well-known photoplay star who plays the role of "The Commandanta" in the newest Griffith production "The Penitentes," which will be released shortly.

The studio was constructed for Mr. Gilmore's own use and when completed will be one of the best equipped in the country. It is not large as studios go, but no expense has been spared to make it modern throughout; in fact, it has been Mr. Gilmore's idea to make it a "vest pocket edition of the Griffith studio at Los Angeles" as he puts it.

It was with the idea of carrying out certain ideas and experiments that he has long had in mind that Mr. Gilmore had this studio built. They are located near the shores of Lake Michigan, an almost idea location for a studio.

Developing, printing and drying rooms will also be located in the building. The apartments which, when completed, will be known as "The Gilmore," is costing well over $100,000 and is the second to be erected in this city by Mr. Gilmore.

When George Kann, the new business manager of Universal City, reached Salt Lake City, Utah, he found a good sized reception waiting for him prepared by Manager Clegg at the new offices of the Universal Corporation in that city.

German Advertising Film

Some Novel Ideas Marked Out by Manufacturers of Various Products.

By Clarence L. Linz.

THE Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, is in receipt of a report from Consul Harry G. Seltzer, at Breslau, Germany, wherein he states that a previous report from his consulate, made public on April 3, called forth so many letters of inquiry from this country that further particulars as to the advertising slides used—that being one of the points on which interest centered—would seem to be desirable.

"Most of these slides are plain," he states, "steady advertisements in print and picture, similar to program or high-class magazine advertising. They may be in black and white or in colors. It is not at all uncommon, however, to see such advertising on regular motion picture films, and a few examples will perhaps be in order.

"The Dorndorf Shoe Stores recently used a kind of puzzle picture in which the letters D-o-r-n-d-o-r-f were made to appear in irregular order, but each letter, after more or less confusion, finally arranged itself in place. This was followed by a display of shoes, which were made to walk out upon the screen, arrange themselves in military style, and then parade around the picture, doing the famous 'goose step.' In another instance a customer was made to appear in one of their six stores in Breslau, the shoe boxes came from their places on the shelves, opened themselves, the shoes came forth, placed themselves upon the customer's foot one after another until the customer showed by his happy smile that he was satisfied. Clerks were not in attendance at all. The motto was 'Dorndorf shoes sell themselves.'

"Another very clever reel shows a Turk in the harem with his favorite, surrounded by luxuries of all descriptions. After a very interesting love scene, which lasts a few minutes, the favorite brings a small tabouret into the room. Upon it is a package of 'Salem Alikuman cigarettes,' which she presents to her lord and which are the 'favorite,' of course. This reel is used in a number of theaters as an extra.

"Perhaps the boldest and most elaborate advertising film which has been going the rounds of the Breslau theaters is entitled 'Who is she?' This is a two-reel play in which the attention centers upon a pretty girl temporarily, but the mask is so skillfully withdrawn that the audience is rather pleased after all to know that the two reels have been advertising an automobile."

In his previous report Mr. Seltzer stated that the Tauentzien theater, in Breslau, displays several advertising slides at the end of each program. They are, in the main, the advertisements of local dealers. He states that these slides are left on the screen long enough to be read from beginning to end and are well received. Upon one occasion he states he counted 27 of these, while on another occasion there were 31.

BORZYKOWSKI HAS IMPORTANT INVENTION.

Benno Borzykowski, a chemist of international repute who has recently come to this country from Germany, visited Washington last week for the purpose of endeavoring to secure through the British Embassy a permit which will enable him to bring to the United States certain machines and models used in the production of certain of his inventions.

He is the inventor of boroid, a non-inflammable substitute for celluloid; artificial silk, and color photography on paper. He has two factories in Berlin. Having many friends there, although he is a Russian Pole, he enjoyed considerable freedom in the German metropolis.

Mr. Borzykowski has been in communication with a number of American manufacturers for some time past and he has been invited to cross the ocean to explain his several wonderful inventions. He requested permission from the German authorities to leave that country for the purpose of establishing factories in the United States for a group of prominent financiers. This permission was granted him, but he will not be able to rejoin his family, sixteen members of which are now in Berlin, until the close of the war.

HARRY S. ELLIS WITH ASSOCIATED.

Harry S. Ellis, the "corpulent" comedian who has been engaged by the Pike's Peak Photoplay Company as principal comedian of their comedy company, is probably the heaviest acrobat in pictures. He will be remembered for his excellent work, playing the fat boy parts in "The Fortune Hunter," "Strongheart" and "Classmates" and the lead in "The Travelling Salesman." His most recent work on the legitimate stage was with Dave Lewis in "Don't Lie to Your Wife," in which play he created the part of Dillon, the horseman, playing the role for three seasons.

Charles Hill, Factory Manager

EIGHT years ago the late Samuel Long, of the Kalem Company, advertised for a man with photographic experience to manage a motion picture laboratory. Several photographers answered the advertisement and the lucky applicant was Charles Hill, who was engaged as a working foreman of the Kalem plant. As Mr. Hill was thoroughly familiar with his trade, having learned it from the ground up, he rose rapidly to the position of factory superintendent. This position he held with the Kalem Company until very recently, when he resigned to seek other connections.

Charles Hill.

Speaking of his knowledge of the business, Mr. Hill said that he was one of the very few, if not the only man in America who had been regularly apprenticed to the photographic trade. In his early days he learned the secret of emulsion making in France and spent some years in photographic manufacturing works. He was for five years prior to joining the Kalem Company a portrait operator on Fifth avenue, New York, and had mastered the business in all its branches.

One of the achievements of which Mr. Hill is justly proud is that he can show a record of eight years clear of violations from the New York Fire Department. He has also been very successful in the management of employees in his department.

At present Mr. Hill is taking a vacation, during which he will complete plans for a new home in Jersey.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN COMEDY.

When the other day at the Reliance studios in New York Douglas Fairbanks vaulted out of bed and began taking morning exercises, with a water pitcher in one hand and a valise in the other, a start was made on the filming of the first big Griffith feature ever made in the east. For this was the first scene in "His Picture in the Paper."

Mr. Fairbanks, who receives a salary much larger than that of the President of the United States, worked under the immediate direction of John Emerson, formerly stage director for Charles Frohman and now D. W. Griffith's assistant.

Mr. Fairbanks' methods are interesting. He is a great deal of a boy in disposition and full of fun. Consequently, in comedy his bubbling good humor and inventive wit are constantly devising unusual comedy effects. Mr. Fairbanks in the first scene was to register that he was an athlete, so that his defeat of a boxing champion later in the photoplay would not be illogical. Hence the morning exercises.

After Director Emerson had told Mr. Fairbanks what he wished him to do in the scene Fairbanks added thirty per cent. more "stunts," and he vaulted over the high foot of the bedstead into the bed. He interjected a comedy scene with a slatternly, boarding-house maid.

Fairbanks goes at his comedy work as though it were play. Perhaps this accounts for some of the instant success of "The Lamb," the first Griffith feature in which Mr. Fairbanks starred.

REMARKABLE WAR PICTURES IN THE PATHE NEWS.

Some of the most realistic war pictures that have ever been taken will be shown on Saturday, October 9, in the Pathe News. As a matter of fact, those who have already viewed them say they leave behind all previous war pictures.

The first installment shows actual scenes in the trenches during an assault by French grenadiers. General Joffre's forces are seen throwing hand grenades into German trenches, and the resulting explosions with terrific loss of life and property are clearly shown. Following one of the explosions, a horse is seen blown into the air and landing in the topmost branches of a neighboring tree. The pictures show more clearly than anything else could do the horrors of war.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.

New York Exhibitors Ask the Mayor to Modify "Standee" Ordinance—Picture Theaters as Safe as the "Legitimate."

CONCENTRATED effort is being made by New York exhibitors to secure the passage of an amendment to the city ordinance which prohibits persons standing in picture theaters. In the course of this effort the following letters have been addressed to Mayor Mitchel and to Fire Commissioner Adamson, which state the case of the exhibitors in exact terms:

New York City, Oct. 6, 1915.

Hon, John Purroy Mitchel, Mayor, New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Recalling with a feeling of pleasure the occasion when a committee of the Motion Exhibitors called upon you, and your expression of good-will towards our interests at that time, I wish to call your attention to a proposed amendment of the present Standee Law, which we desire to present to the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday next, Oct. 12th, providing the same meets with your approval.

We feel that the motion picture theaters are being discriminated against in this respect, for the reason that at the present time this privilege is extended to the dramatic and vaudeville houses, and we feel that equal rights to all should prevail. Knowing that this is the basic principle of your administration, we trust that you will see your way clear to grant our request and sanction the proposed amendment.

The following are a few of the facts, on which we base our request, and it must be acknowledged that we are fully within our rights and our demand is reasonable:

1. All modern motion picture theaters are absolutely fireproof, and equipped with all equipment and devices as recommended by the Fire Department to ensure the safety of the public.
2. Smoking is absolutely forbidden, thereby eliminating all danger from this source, which is always present in theatrical houses.
3. Exits in such numbers and so placed that a motion picture theater can be emptied in at least three minutes.
4. Unjust discrimination, as proven by the fact, that by taking out a $500 license standees and smoking is allowed, while under a $100 license neither is allowed.
5. In the majority of cases men ushers are employed, who are more valuable in case of emergency than women ushers.
6. Time for giving moving picture exhibitions limited from 7.45 to 9.30, generally speaking, it is essential to have the same privilege as the theatrical and vaudeville houses to obtain a fair return on the money invested.

In conclusion, I would respectfully ask that you grant an appointment to a committee of exhibitors to go over the matter with you, and if you can consistently do so, would appreciate the fact if this conference could be granted before Tuesday next.

Anticipating a favorable reply, we remain very respectfully,

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA,
New York Local No. 1 and State Branch No. 11.
LEE A. OCHS, President.

New York City, Oct. 6, 1915.

Hon. Robert Adamson, Fire Commissioner, New York City.

Dear Sir: I wish to call your attention to the proposed amendment to the present Standee Law, copy of which is enclosed herewith, which we desire to bring before the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday next, Oct. 12th. Before doing this, however, it is necessary that it should receive the sanction of your department to ensure the approval of the Board of Aldermen.

In asking your co-operation in the passing of this proposed amendment, we feel that we are only petitioning for rights to which the motion picture exhibitors are justly entitled, and we know that you, as a broad and fair-minded official, will concur with us that our claim is not unreasonable.

As you are aware, the late Mayor Gaynor ruled that the motion picture theaters should be allowed to have standees, providing that the aisles were kept free by tape lines. This ruling proved to be a great success, and this, in a few words, is all that is asked in the proposed amendment.

At the present time theatrical and vaudeville houses are allowed to have standees, and we naturally feel that the motion picture theaters are being unjustly discriminated against. Motion picture theaters have kept pace with the industry and at the present time the great majority of the houses are strictly fireproof and are equipped with all the modern devices and appliances for safety as recommended by your department. In addition to this, the exits are in such number and so placed that a motion picture theater can be emptied in less than three minutes, a much shorter space of time than it would be possible to empty a vaudeville or theatrical house.

In this connection, a matter of great importance must also be taken into consideration, and that is, that in motion picture theaters, smoking is absolutely forbidden, while in the theatrical and vaudeville houses permits are given, and there is ever present the danger from smoldering cigar butts and the carelessly-discarded cigarette, a source of more danger and the cause of more conflagrations than film has proved to be, according to the records, since the motion picture industry was born.

While we do not like to harbor such a thought, the discrimination against the motion picture theaters in this respect seems to be a matter of the cost of the license, and to bear out my argument I will cite the case of the Tuxedo theater. By taking out a theatrical license at a cost of $500.00, this theater will be permitted to have standees, while, if they only take out a motion picture license at $100.00, this privilege is forbidden. Now, if Safety First is the basic principle of the Standee Law, how can we reconcile ourselves to the fact that this theater is more secure to the public under a $500.00 license than it is under the $100.00 license. I do not cite this instance in order to create an argument, but to show that I am honest in my belief that there is unjust discrimination.

Another matter that should not be overlooked, is the fact that all the ushers in motion picture theaters are men, while women are employed in this capacity in the theatrical and vaudeville houses. It is a well-known fact, borne out by all records, that, except in a few exceptional cases, men are always better in cases of emergencies than women.

Last, but not least, kindly take into consideration the fact that the business of the motion picture theaters, generally speaking, takes place between the hours of 7.45 and 9.30 P. M., and to make the enterprise profitable and to give a fair return on the money invested, it is absolutely essential that the motion picture theaters be extended the same privilege in regard to the Standee Law, as is now extended to the theatrical and vaudeville houses. Equal rights is not an unfair request and that is all we ask.

We can assure you that we will, in the future, as we have in the past, at all times be ready and willing to offer the screens of the motion picture theaters to give publicity to any "Safety First," "Fire Prevention" or any other matter to which you desire to call the attention of the public.

Trusting that you will look upon our request as fair and just, and hoping that you will extend to us the co-operation within your jurisdiction, and that we expect a favorable reply, we remain

Very respectfully yours,
MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA,
New York Local No. 1 and State Branch No. 11.
LEE A. OCHS, President.

YONKERS EXHIBITORS ENDORSE WORLD PLAN.

The Slides Against Adopting the New Constitution Will Be Shown in All the Yonkers Theaters.

MATTHEW HANSEN, the secretary of the "Yonkers Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association," called at the office of The Moving Picture World on Monday, October 11, to tell of the action of his organization, which has fully endorsed the plan of this paper to have the exhibitors everywhere in the state of New York help in the defeat of the new constitution which is to be submitted to the votes of the people at the coming election. Several sets of slides were ordered by Mr. Hanson. These slides will be displayed in every motion picture house in the city by the Hudson. Mr. Hanson said that the sentiment against the adoption of the new constitution was growing every day. He thought that Westchester County would give a decisive majority against the new instrument.

LAST CALL FOR OHIO CONVENTION.

This is the last call to Ohio exhibitors for the convention Tuesday and Wednesday, October 19 and 20.

As president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League I am more than pleased with the response and the prompt attention given the call by the boys of Ohio, and we are assured a grand turn-out, as every mail brings in the return postal cards as sent to the exhibitors, and every one has signified their intention to attend the convention.

And I also wish to state that many of the exhibitors from other states have written me that they are going to be with us at the Cleveland convention, and I wish to make a special appeal to the Ohio exhibitors to be there in large numbers and with bells on. So let our slogan be On to Cleveland for one Big Organization of Exhibitors. Yours for success,

FRED J. HERRINGTON,
Pres. M. P. E. L. of A.

SALE OF NOVEL STIMULATED.

That the filming of a new novel does much to aid in the sale of a book is declared by the publishers of "The Man Trail." Henry Oyen's latest novel, "The Man Trail," originally appeared in one of the magazines as a serial. The photoplay rights were purchased by the Essanay Company and made into a six-reel feature, under the direction of E. H. Calvert. It so happened that "The Man Trail" photoplay was released about the same time that the story came out in book form. The publishers received many inquiries from persons all over the country, who had witnessed the picture. Already thousands of copies of the novel have been sold.

The Two-Dollar Moving Picture Program.

THE two-dollar admission at the Studebaker for "Triangle" programs, in all fairness to the management and to moving pictures, requires a word of explanation. Many people are of the opinion that most of the seats are held at the price quoted; but it is not a fact. Indeed, during the last week the "Triangle" advertisements in the Chicago dailies have announced that there is a certain number of seats at 35, 50 and 75 cents; also that there are better seats at $1 and $2, without specifying the number of the latter seats. If a patron wants a $2 seat he can get it, and if his pocket-book can afford only the cheaper seats he can get them, providing they have not all been sold.

The scale works just the same as in the case of dramatic or other high-priced attractions. The backers and the management of the attraction take the risk of having a paying or a non-paying house. We all know that a "top-heavy" house means a loss; also that a full gallery means "all profit," when other parts of the theater are well filled. We also know that the wise showman will reduce the number of the high-priced seats, if he finds that they are nearly always empty, on the simple reasoning that "half a loaf is better than no bread."

I cannot rid myself of the opinion that it was not quite good showmanship to herald far and near that the Studebaker moving picture program was a "two-dollar" program. It created a false impression and, what was much more serious, a certain antagonism against such high-priced picture shows. True, if the public knew as well as do our great producers and directors of the vast amount of money that can be swallowed up in the production of a great photoplay, they would be more reasonable and less likely to suspect that they were being exploited.

The great mass of the people must be gradually educated on these matters. It is on the great mass that the certain financial success of costly moving picture productions must depend, and the admission prices must be regulated so as to win their patronage.

How many grand opera seasons in this country have been a financial success? These seasons exist only in our great cities, and the masses are excluded, not because they do not love and appreciate fine music, but for the good reason that they cannot afford the price.

The moving picture is the plain man's entertainment. The plain man has made it what it is by his nickels and dimes. He will be willing to pay a little more than this as the moving picture rises to greater heights, both of conception and technic, and whether the highest price of admission be $2 or $5 there should be sufficient low-priced seats to include him among the spectators. It will be interesting to read in connection with the foregoing, the following opinion of David W. Griffith, for which I am indebted to James Warren Currie's column in the Chicago Examiner:

"Will Chicago permanently pay $2 for our comparatively new form of expression in dramatic art? I would answer that question in the affirmative without qualification except for one other possibility. It will be a permanent change only until motion pictures are placed on a par with grand opera. The motion picture does not differ from any other branch of art or business that I am acquainted with. The old fundamental law of supply and demand will always regulate it, and the other law of the survival of the fittest will take care of the price question.

"This statement is made conservatively, and only those who started in at the beginning and know the inside facts are capable of forming any correct estimate. It was only a few years ago that we all thought $1,000 was an extravagant price to spend on the making of a picture. In less than seven years I have seen the business climb from that lowly station to the present triumph of 'The Birth of a Nation.' This cost a half million dollars. The time is at hand when some producer will spend a million to produce some story that cannot properly be expressed for less. And he'll get $5 a seat for it."

A Moving Picture Faker in the Toils.

Nowadays, the faker, in whatever department of the moving picture industry he may choose for his fraudulent exploitations, is doomed to certain, if not speedy, exposure and conviction. The dupe may be ever with us; but, in the fierce limelight of publicity furnished by the leading dailies and the moving picture trade press of the country, he or she is well safeguarded. At least if all the great dailies adopted and carried out the policy of the Chicago Tribune, there would be little chance of a culprit's escape.

Two indictments were returned Thursday, October 8, in the Criminal Court, this city, before Judge Brentano, against one Charles Heatherington, on charges of obtaining $5,100 on false pretenses. The Tribune's story of the case and its announced policy to pursue to the bitter end any person who deceives it into accepting fraudulent advertising follows:

> On Oct. 11, 1914, Charles Heatherington offered The Tribune an advertisement for a girl to take a part in a motion picture. The advertisement contained nothing fraudulent on the face of it, and was printed. Miss Mary Gorecki, a daughter of Stephen Gorecki, 1121 Noble street, a steamship agent, responded, and, according to the father, her eagerness to appear in "Heatherington's Child Film No. 1" was used as a lever to pry an investment of $5,000 from Gorecki. William F. Gillmeister, an acquaintance, says he contributed $100. When returns on these investments failed to materialize, the two men communicated with the police. The result was two indictments, returned by the grand jury before Judge Brentano, charging Heatherington with obtaining money on false pretenses. Heatherington's bonds were fixed at $10,000.
> The Tribune policy is to prosecute any person who uses its advertising columns for any illegal purpose. It attempts to safeguard its readers and legitimate advertisers in every way, but leaves nothing undone to punish those who deceive it into accepting fraudulent advertising.

It was shown during the court hearing that Mr. Gorecki, father of the young woman who pined for the halo of a successful moving picture star, mortgaged his home and gave Heatherington $5,000 to do the trick.

Heatherington is under arrest in Hamilton, Ont., and a detective left Chicago Monday night, October 11, to arrange for his extradition.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Chicago branch of Metro Pictures Corporation, and Phil H. Solomon, assistant manager, are boasting of the fact that they have signed up the three hundredth contract in their territory, and that up to the time of writing not a single cancellation has been received. The new Castle theater, State and Madison streets, which will open shortly, will use the Metro product two days each week. This, together with the Ziegfeld, Fine Arts theater, Star theater, Madison street; Boston theater, Clark street, and the Bijou Dream, on State street, will make a total of six "Loop" theater runs for the Metro product. Albert W. Howell has been appointed traveling auditor for Metro in Pittsburgh, Chicago, Des Moines and Kansas City. Herman Merensky, formerly head of the shipping department of the World Film Corporation's office in this city, now fills a similar position with the Chicago office of Metro.

H. A. Faltz, formerly owner of the Elite theater, Somonauk, Ill., and M. J. Bieschke, have leased the Florence theater, 2407 Chicago avenue, for a period of eight years. The house seats 289 people. Universal service is used, and admissions are ten and five cents.

Harry P. Bartlett, manager of the West Chicago theater, in the town of that name, called at this office last week. This house, seating 200 people, has had various managers, but Mr. Bartlett claims that he was the first to make it a success. He resigned from the management Sunday, October 10, owing to the fact that the new owner of the building will operate the theater himself. Mr. Bartlett charged admissions of five and ten cents for four-reel programs of Mutual, Pathe and General Film service. On Mondays an admission of fifteen cents was charged for a feature program consisting of Kleine productions. Mr. Bartlett spoke highly of "Stop Thief," which he ran on Monday, October 4, to crowded audiences. On Thursday, October 7, in accordance with his annual custom, Mr. Bartlett gave a free matinee to the small school children, a treat that has always been looked forward to by them with great interest.

The management of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Colonial theater, this city, has announced in advertisements in all the leading Chicago dailies, that the spectacle will not be seen in any of the smaller houses in this city. Attention is directed to the fact that it is impossible to present the famous feature in the smaller regular picture theaters, not only because of the duration of the presentation, but for the lack of room to house the large orchestra that would be required in accompaniment. The run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial still continues unabated. Many of Chicago's prominent society leaders are known to have viewed the big spectacle three and four times.

"Vanity Fair," the seven-reel Kleine-Edison feature, is making a big hit in Chicago. All the photoplay editors of the Chicago dailies have criticized its merits in words of praise.

Perry E. Grosse, president of the Premier Film Comany, 143 North Dearborn street, this city, was arrested Friday, October 8, on a charge of taking money under false pretenses. Miss Auriel Yost, 6052 Kenwood avenue, this city, was the complainant. She alleges that she gave $35 to Grosse on the promise that he would transform her into a successful moving picture actress and find her a good position. This promise he failed to keep. About a year ago Grosse was connected with the Pioneer School of Motion Photography, with offices in the Fort Dearborn Building. At that time he announced in advertisements that he would train applicants for the position of cameramen, and obtain positions for them, at a fixed consideration.

A sub-committee of the Chicago city council's buildings committee, at a meeting last week, approved of an ordinance that will permit the use of moving picture machines using non-inflammable films, without the usual safeguards required in moving picture theaters. The adoption of this ordinance by the council will open the way for the exhibition of moving pictures in schools, churches and other buildings.

Francis G. Bushman, Miss Beverly Bayne, Miss Helen Dunbar and Lester Cuneo, passed through the city Friday morning, October 8, on their way to New York City from the Los Angeles Metro studios. This well-known quartet of photoplayers will take part in the production of a new Quality-Metro feature, "Richard Carvel." During their brief stay in Chicago they were greeted by quite a gathering of admirers and friends at the Northwestern depot.

A private presentation of "Damaged Goods" was given at the Ziegfeld theater Friday morning, October 8, by the Mutual Film Corporation. The house was well filled by exhibitors and representatives of the city press. Richard Bennett, well known in dramatic circles as the leading man in the play production, and who also appears in the leading character in the photoplay, was present. He took the stage and said many things about the moving picture version, among them that he considered the subtitles might be better. The presentation created a vivid impression on all present.

The second program of the Triangle Film Corporation was offered at the Studebaker Sunday afternoon, October 10. The bill included "A Favorite Fool," featuring Eddie Foy; "Stolen Magic," with Raymond Hitchcock in the leading role; "The Coward," with Frank Keenan as the star, and "Old Heidelberg," in which Dorothy Gish appeared in the dominating character.

The screen attractions at the Fine Arts theater for the current week are "The Price," with Helen Ware, and "Emmy of Stork's Nest," a Metro feature in which Mary Miles Minter, of "The Littlest Rebel" fame, appears as the star.

"The Battle Cry of Peace," Vitagraph's spectacle, will be given its first presentation at the Olympic on Sunday, October 17, not on the 18th, as was originally announced. Wallace Monroe and C. E. Cook are on here from the east, making all preparations for the opening, and L. J. Coffey is attending to the publicity end. The prices are: Evenings and Saturday matinees, 25c., 50c., 75c., $1, $1.50; other matinees, 25c., 50c., 75c., $1. Great expectations have already been formed among the moving picture theatergoing public of this famous war spectacle.

"The Coming of Columbus," Selig's well-known, three-reel feature, was the last offering of the Strand Theater Company at the children's special presentation at Orchestra Hall, Saturday morning, October 9. The final presentation by this company at Orchestra Hall was given Sunday, October 10. On Friday, October 15, the Strand Theater Company will open the New Strand, on South Wabash avenue, at 8.30 p. m., with "Carmen." The regular New Strand prices will be the same as at Orchestra Hall; namely. 15, 25 and 50 cents; matinees, 15 and 25 cents. The run will be for seventeen days. Arthur Dunham and his 25-piece symphony orchestra will accompany the pictures and play classical selections. Noted vocal soloists will also appear.

Gilson Willets, well-known novelist and photoplaywright, is now planning a strong multiple-reel photoplay to feature Miss Grace Darmond, leading lady of the Selig's Chicago stock company. Miss Darmond is a Chicago girl. She has won high favor within the past two years by her pleasing screen personality and artistic acting. It is claimed that she is the youngest leading woman in photoplay work, as she is not yet 18 years of age.

For the first time, Tyrone Power and Miss Kathlyn Williams have played opposite each other. The photoplay is "Sweet Alyssum," a Charles Major story, in five acts, that will be released November 15. Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman are also in this Selig "Red Seal" production.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

"The Chorus Lady" at the Strand.

JAMES FORBES' drama, "The Chorus Lady," which, for the past five years, has endeared itself to the American public, is the main attraction at the Strand theater. Cleo Ridgeley is appearing as Patricia O'Brien, the leading role, and her headstrong, stage-struck younger sister, Nora, is played my Marjorie Daw, the clever little fourteen-year-old protege of Geraldine Farrar. Wallace Reid is seen as "Danny" Mallory, the detective, who is sincerely in love with "The Chorus Lady."

The Topical Review this week contains interesting foreign and American news pictures and also a newly arrived lot of European war pictures. A new comedy, travel pictures and educational studies are also shown. The musical program this week is an especially attractive one.

"Blackbirds," at the Broadway.

Laura Hope Crews in a film version of "Blackbirds," a drama in which she scored a success at the Lyceum theater, New York City, several seasons ago, is appearing in her old role at the Strand theater this week. The picture was produced by the Jesse Lasky Company, and is filled with engrossing situations. Miss Crews is supported by an excellent company, including Thomas Meighan, George Gebhardt, Raymond Hatton, Jane Wolf, Florence Dagmar, Evelyn Desmond, Edward Harley and Frederick Wilson.

The Pathe News, South American Travel Scenes, and new cartoons and comedies complete the program.

"The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Vitagraph theater, and "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty, continue their triumphant engagement.

NEW BALBOA SERIES.

Balboa is getting ready to produce its new series of continued stories, which will be known under the title of "Who Is Guilty?" Pathe Freres will probably be the releasing agency. As the finishing touches are now being put on the "Neal of the Navy" serial at the Long Beach studio, the decks will soon be cleared for taking up the work which was planned some time ago, by the Horkheimer Brothers.

"Who Is Guilty?" will consist of twelve individual stories from the pen of Will M. Ritchey, Balboa's chief scenario editor. He wrote all but one of the stories which made up the "Who Pays" series, recently produced by Balboa and exhibited the world over with such success. Mr. Ritchey has already completed half of the "Who Is Guilty?" stories. The remainder are well in hand.

EDDIE FOY VS. KEYSTONE.

Comedian Breaks Contract, According to Allegator.

EDDIE FOY is no longer rollicking about the big Keystone studio. He has left. It is said that he broke his contract with the company. It is known that the Keystone Company has never before been a party to law suits of any kind. Their players have always had fair treatment and always left the employ of the Keystone in a happy frame of mind. This time, according to rumor, the company did everything in its power to please Mr. Foy, even going so far as to have three different feature scenarios written for him by staff writers.

Eddie Foy and Eight Little Foys.

Mr. Foy refused to work, according to the story, and flatly turned down Mr. Sennett and his directors who were to produce the stories. It was upon Foy's refusal to do the third story that the break occurred, and it was "the straw that broke the camel's back," so to speak.

It is said that Foy would go home at night greatly enthused over each separate story, and in the morning he would return and say he would not play it at all. What happened at night is not known—whether he talked to competitors of the Keystone or rivals, or what influence was brought to bear on him, no one knows—anyway, the next day it is said that Mr. Foy would turn up at the studio in an entirely different mood.

It is claimed that the company allowed Mr. Foy consideration and in every way gave him the best of the deal, even realizing that he was wrong.

Upon interrogation, Mack Sennett, Triangle producer of feature comic plays, said: "I regret very much to say that Mr. Foy has broken his contract with this company—it is the only contract we have ever had broken by any of our players at any time since this company was first organized. Likewise, we have never broken a contract, and we have yet to experience our first suit over such a matter. We have not even had trouble with anyone—this is the first time. We feel much pained and sorry that anything like this should ever start with us."

According to local papers Mr. Foy has started proceedings to recover salary that he insists upon receiving from the Keystone company. Already one week has passed and he has applied to the auditor for his week's check, but the pay man only informs him that as he has broken his contract he naturally has no money due him, according to the terms of the contract.

As the matter stands there is no telling what will happen, only the attorneys for the Keystone firm are preparing to contest the suit of the comedian, who is not at present working before the camera.

TELLS OF LONDON ZEPPELIN RAIDS.

John Mackenzie has returned from London to the Balboa studio, after witnessing the recent German air attack on the British metropolis. In his time as a cinematographer, Mackenzie has seen so many highly spectacular stunts staged that the "real thing" looked tame.

Nearing London in a train, about ten o'clock one night, Mackenzie says he heard an explosion that sounded as if all the guns in the world had been discharged. Looking out the window, he saw a monster dirigible slowly maneuvering over the city, at a height of a thousand feet. Powerful electric searchlights were trained on it, to assist the marksmen to bring it down. "The light was so bright," said Mackenzie, "that we could watch every detail of operation of the bomb-release at the front of the Zeppelin. In ten minutes, twenty-nine charges were dropped. For a short distance, one could see a thread of fire as the fuse burned. A second later, there was a deafening explosion and more destruction had been done. But the people were unterrified, contrary to the reports in the sensational newspapers." Mackenzie says 200,000 Londoners looked on that night, from the place where he was with the curiosity of a crowd viewing a Lord Mayor's show. "People watch the stunts in a moving picture," he continued, "with more tensity than they manifested on this occasion. The Zeppelin raids are not intimidating the British, as the Germans had hoped. On the contrary, they are stimulating the enlistments."

When the Allies were not giving such a good account of themselves a while back, John Mackenzie obtained leave of absence from the Horkheimer brothers, his employers, to go over and see if his services might be needed. Satisfied that they were not, he has returned to work at the Balboa studio. Mackenzie has an international reputation as a moving picture cameraman. He turned the first crank in Scotland many years ago. Since then, he has taken pictures for the British government in the Orient, the Balkans, and many other localities. "While the war is exciting," he says, he is "glad to be back and engaged in work that is more fascinating."

THOUSAND-DOLLAR LONG DISTANCE 'PHONE CALL.

Lasky Hears Applause in Boston Theater.

"Carmen," the big Lasky play which features Geraldine Farrar, went over big in Boston according to a message received here by means of direct telephone connection between the Symphony Hall and the Lasky studio, in Hollywood, a distance of four thousand miles, Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille and local members of the cast were able to tell how the Geraldine Farrar production of "Carmen" was being received in the eastern city.

A special diaphram was attached to the transmitter of the telephone in Boston under the supervision of Mr. Samuel Goldfish, and a similar instrument attached to the receiver in the projecting room at the studio.

The cast was assembled and the instant the picture was started in the Hub city, it was thrown on the screen in Los Angeles.

With their ears close to the megaphone attached to the receiver and with their eyes on the screen, Mr. Lasky and Mr. DeMille were able to catch the feeling of the vast audience in Boston. Those a little further removed from the receiver could faintly hear the strains of the orchestra. The applause sounded like the sharp beats of hundreds of typewriters which swelled into a steady roar as the picture ended.

After the noise had subsided, Mr. DeMille and Mr. Lasky were personally congratulated on the success of the picture over the phone by Miss Farrar, Mr. Goldfish, Mr. Morris Gest, the Governor of Massachusetts, the Mayor of Boston and Mr. H. H. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount.

J. PARKER READ, JR., IS NOW WITH INCE.

J. Parker Read, Jr.

J. Parker Read, Jr., the well known promoter and producer of features, has joined the staff of Thomas H. Ince in capacity of advisory director. Mr. Read will be remembered as recently associated with J. Searle Dawley and Frank L. Dyer in Dyreda Art Films, also as producer of "Victory," "The Garden of Allah," and a number of other big feature productions.

Producer Thomas H. Ince engaged Mr. Read over the long distance telephone. It happened like this. Mr. Read was in Chicago, and preparing to leave for New York. Ince had wired him the day before and received the reply that Read would leave for the Metropolis and engage in another project. When Ince received this telegram it was too late to make another proposition by wire so he called up Read at his hotel in Chicago over the long distance telephone and got hold of him just as he was going to jump in a taxi for the train. An agreement on terms was soon reached and J. Parker Read got a ticket on the Santa Fe instead of the Twentieth Century Limited.

TIGER HUNT NEAR LOS ANGELES.

Wildest India had nothing on the harbor district one day this week, for valiant persons were abroad bulging with more kinds of artillery than Flanders had seen in a year. Timid individuals lingered indoors and felt a vague fear of what might lurk in the family garage. The bearers of firearms beat the swamps and bush clumps of the hillsides and stalked calves and other queer beasts in the farmyards. Alarms kept telephone wires a-quiver and motor cars scurrying hither and yon. And all the time a very badly scared lady tiger lay under a lumber pile and quaked.

Very soon after Princess, the four-year-old Bengal tigress, escaped from her cage at the waterfront, a furore spread from Point Firmin to Long Beach. The home guards turned out, armed with everything from .22 Derringers to Springfields of Civil War vintage. Alarms sounded with great monotony throughout the afternoon, but still the tigress was at large—under the lumber pile, a few rods from where she had disappeared.

Night brought the real thrills. Searchers on top of a remote hill saw two baleful eyes at the bottom of a deep hole. Men with nets hurried there and bagged two empty beer bottles on which the moon shown brightly.

A switching crew, keeping a sharp lookout for the tigress, saw a giant cat leap through the glare of the locomotive's headlight, and promptly turned back the other way.

Daylight did not abate the excitement until mid-afternoon when Director General Henry McRae, of the Universal Film Mfg. Company invaded the yard of the San Pedro Lumber Company, overbalanced a pile of scantlings on which he was standing and almost stepped on the fugitive's ear.

A snarl caused a hasty retreat, then the home guards were called in, and reinforced by men with nets and a cage, they waited expectantly in the trenches for the cat's great offensive. It did not develop. Thereupon "Curley" Stecker, animal trainer, crawled under the lumber pile and put a rope around Princess' neck.

Still as badly scared as any man in the crowd, she was hauled into her cage and the home guards were mustered out.

HAZARDOUS HELEN HALTS HOLDUPS—KALEM'S PLUCKY ACTRESS DARES DEATH.

"The Race With Death" is the newest Kalem Hazard story and it is to be a "peach," full of thrills and punches. Helen Gibson playing the lead with a detective is chasing two crooks who have released a car of dynamite and sent it down hill towards a line of freight cars. The detective leaves the speeder in which they are giving chase to get the crooks and Miss Gibson continues in the speeder to stop the car of dynamite before it reaches the freight cars. The speeder struck the car of supposed dynamite, throwing Miss Gibson to the tracks before she could grasp the ladder of the car, and on the rebound the speeder crashed into her bruising her severely and inflicting several bad cuts on her arms and face. The following day Miss Gibson made the scene successfully, refusing to be doubled.

TO BUILD A VILLAGE AND THEN BURN IT DOWN.

To build an entire village and then burn it down is what Producer Thomas H. Ince is going to do this week to get atmosphere and realism in a current Triangle production. The buildings will be twenty-six in number and be erected on top of the big plateau at Inceville. There will be a dance hall, saloon, laundry, livery stable, boarding house, etc., all substantially built so that they will look real when they topple over in the flames. The fire which destroys the little village is the climax of the picture story in which William S. Hart is starred, supported by Clara Williams and Jack Standing.

CARL LAEMMLE ON WAY WEST.

The Pacific Coast is to be honored soon by the presence of Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. He is en route to Universal City and will arrive in a short time. He comes West to inspect the big city and note the great improvements which have been made by Henry McRae, the well known director general of the Universal's Western branch. Since McRae assumed control of the city there have been many improvements noted and Mr. Laemmle may well be surprised when he enters the portals of the picture metropolis. President Laemmle will remain on the coast for several weeks.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

An even dozen famous stars will each have an acre of land in the new Ince lot at Culver City at the ground breaking ceremony to be held soon. On the tract will be built a $50,000 studio. The unique feature of the event will be that it will be attended by one of the greatest galaxies of stage stars ever assembled together at one function. At present there are exactly twelve eminent figures of the footlight realm at Inceville and each will be present at the ground breaking. They are Billie Burke, Bessie Barriscale, Mary Boland, Truly Shattuck, William S. Hart, Frank Keenan, Bruce McRae, Frank Mills, Willard Mack, William H. Thompson, William Desmond and H. B. Warner.

That moving pictures are to be the all interesting amusement of the twenty-first century, as well as the main event in the twentieth, was proved this week at Long Beach where baseball fans have no further interest in the national sport. As a consequence Business Manager Manning of the Balboa Company is wrecking the local grandstand and bleachers. The lumber will be used to make further enlargements at the studio. Thus it is seen that everything finds its way into the picture, sooner or later.

As soon as Wm. D. Taylor completes the last chip of "The Diamond from the Sky" for the Flying A he will start producing for the Morosco Company in Los Angeles.

Myrtle Gonzales is being featured in a powerful heart interest story at the Universal under the able direction of Dick Stanton, who plays the lead opposite Miss Gonzales. The story shows how a man, at one time prosperous, goes to the lowest level and rises again, a very powerful piece of character drawing. Stanton is using some splendid "sets," and has the assistance of F. M. Wells, Hayward Mack and Gretchen Lederer, who was the star in "Business is Business," featuring Nat Goodwin.

Mr. and Mrs. Rollin S. Sturgeon gave a most delightful party recently in the Ocean Park Pavilion de Danse, where the entire studio force was in attendance and had a glorious time. The hit of the evening was an old-fashioned quadrille, in which some of the most dignified members of the company romped around in the good old way. "The Rye Waltz" was a close second in popularity, but the good old 1915 one-step took first honors. The event reminded us of a certain similar party given Edith Storey, when she was in the west working in a big picture. We all remembered the party, even if Edith forgot it.

At the Kalem studio James Horne is directing "Stingaree," adapted from the novel by that name for scenario form by Mr. Horne, and who in "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" series established a standard for elaborate and harmonious settings which had never before been attained in the production of any series, is surpassing this standard in "Stingaree." Mr. Paul Hearst, technical director, has made a special study of period furniture of the English type, and his knowledge is doing much towards making unusual settings, most of which are laid in England and Australia. Australian saddles were imported for this series, as sufficient number could not be obtained here which were genuine, and of the type required for the story. Mr. Horne will leave shortly in a special train with a company of nearly a hundred people, and as many horses for the Mojave desert, where he will film scenes for the series, which will consist of twelve episodes of two reels each.

There is a bunch of farmers, landscape artists, painters, and decorators in the ranks of the Western Vitagraph studio for discussion as to relative merits of the various bungalows and houses owned by members of the company recently led to a novel scheme. The chief boasters of the aggregation agreed to have photos taken of their much beloved properties, put each photo on file and then set to work to see how much more beautiful their own could be made inside three months. The decision on the matter will rest with a committee of three. The improvements are to consist of flowers, lawn, and paint,—but especially flowers. Already we have discovered three of the contestants on their knees on respective lawns—trying to decide which end of the seed goes in the ground first, and how many seeds to put into each little hole. The outcome is watched with interest. In making the decision, the one who has done most will be favored —rather than the one who started with a slight edge in the way of a newly built, beautifully painted domicile.

Thomas H. Ince has just been insured for $250,000. Such is the announcement that was made this week from Inceville studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation—an announcement that marks a new epoch in the taking of precautionary measures against financial loss. The beneficiary named in the policy is the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and the step has been taken, it is learned, to guard that concern's interest in the Triangle Film Corporation, for which Ince is now making his multiple-reel photodramas.

Six big American companies, representing combined assets aggregating $1,934,911,165, share the responsibility of compensating the Kessel and Baumann organization in the event of loss to it, by death, of the great producer. They are: Mutual Benefit, of Newark, N. J.; Pennsylvania Mutual, of Philadelphia; Mutual Life, of New York; Travelers' of Hartford, Conn.; Prudential, of Newark, N. J., and Equitable, of New York. The Mutual Benefit assumes $75,000 of the burden, Pennsylvania Mutual $50,000, Mutual Life $50,000, Travelers' $50,000, Prudential $25,000 and Equitable $50,000. The latter amount was taken out only to cover a contingency, which might arise through a possible hitch in the proceedings.

Unusual in the extreme was the gathering, at the Ince home in Hollywood, last week, of the physicians and representatives of the various insurance companies for the purpose of putting the noted producer through the customary physical examination. Under the direction of Bertram P. Rouse, Southern California General Agent of the Mutual Benefit of Newark, a schedule was prepared with a view to eliminating the annoyance of crowding the Ince residence.

That Ince required very little close scrutiny is evident from the fact that the entire ordeal consumed only 1 hour and 20 minutes, an admittedly small length of time for such a comparatively tremendous task.

Helen Ware who has been starred by D. W. Griffith in "Cross Currents," is considering an offer for permanent engagement with the Fine Arts Film Co. Miss Ware appears to great advantage in "Cross Currents" as this picture play was made to suit her personality and methods of acting. The scenario was written by Mary H. O'Connor, and the cast includes Courtney Foote, recent star of "Hypocrites," Teddy Sampson and Sam DeGrasse.

The palatial East room of the White House in Washington, D. C., is reproduced in one of the scenes. Recent photographs of the East Room and descriptive matter served as models and reference for the carpenters and decorators. In this elaborate setting transpired an assembly ball which was attended presumably by President Wilson and his staff, Wm. Jennings Bryan, the Ambassadors and other prominent men and women in the political world.

Eliott Dexter who played "Wainright" with Edmund Breese in "The Master Mind," and was starred with Nance O'Neil in "The Lily," and other Belasco productions, has been engaged by the Fine Arts Films studio to appear in Triangle feature plays.

Norma Talmadge, formerly Vitagraph star and lately with the National Film Corporation, has been recently engaged by D. W. Griffith. She will make her first appearance with Robert Harron in a multiple reel drama, for which title has not yet been decided. Constance Talmadge, her sister, has also been engaged by the Fine Arts Films studios.

Frank Campeau has purchased a two hundred acre lot in Maryland, not Maryland, California, or anywhere round Hollywood, but in the state of Maryland, way down East, where he will build a sixteen room bungalow. Mr. Campeau will take possession of his new home as soon as his contract expires with the Fine Arts Films studios. He has now finished "Jordan is a Hard Road," and is working on a new Triangle feature play.

Among the recent visitors to D. W. Griffith's Fine Arts Films studios were Thomas Dixon, Jr., author of "The Clansman." The eminent novelist found much pleasure in visiting the maker and home of "The Birth of a Nation."

May Allison who is playing leads with Harold Lockwood in Mutual Masterpictures of the "American" brand has returned from San Diego where the company went some time ago to take scenes for "The Buzzard's Shadow," a five-reel "Flying A" feature. Little May won many new admirers and thoroughly enjoyed the trip.

We notice in a recent issue of "The Arrowhead" a monthly magazine of Western travel and development, published by the Salt Lake line that Kenneth A. O'Hara tells at length of "The Call of the Camera," and Inceville. We must compliment Ince's young and clever publicity manager on his working up so interesting an article.

Carl Offer, the Eastern correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt, and of the Deutsche Post und Eisenbahn Zeiting published in Berlin, visited recently the Fine Arts Studios with a party of German friends. They were shown scenes from the Fine Arts Films production, "Old Heidelberg," and complimented Mr. Griffith and his directors for the realistic manner in which they had presented a true German atmosphere.

Scene from "Old Heidelberg."

They confessed that the picture play made them homesick for Germany, and particularly admired the characterization of "Kathie," which part was taken by Dorothy Gish, who is starred in this feature production.

A Pullman coach exact in dimensions, was built at the Fine Arts Films studios in which scenes of "Double Trouble," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, were staged by Director Wm. Christy Cabanne. This coach was constructed under the supervision of the Los Angeles District Manager of the Pullman Co., who devoted several hours to the drawing of the detailed plans. Several humorous scenes were photographed in the interior of this Pullman car, in which Douglas Fairbanks took some very amusing parts.

"Neal of the Navy," has brought to light the real and only Neal of the Navy in the person of a true sailor, W. C. Neal, N. S. N., a chief petty officer on recruiting duty at San Francisco. Not that his career resembles the thrilling life of the hero of the serial, but because of his last name this man is known in the service as "Neal of the Navy." Neal is a chief yeoman, and has served his country eight years. He is one of the most interested followers of the big Balboa screen play and says it gives a true picture of navy life.

Director Charles Giblyn, Shriner, clubman and good fellow, who is assisting Producer Thomas H. Ince in the production of the Ince-Triangle feature in which Billie Burke will be starred, is in grave danger of gangrene poisoning, according to statements made this week by his physicians. About a week ago, Giblyn stepped on a rusty nail. It pierced his shoe, but he thought little of the mishap. Inflammation soon developed, however, and now he is confined to his bed, under the care of two physicians and a nurse.

Charlie, the big elephant, at the Universal Zoo, went on a strike this week, and made things quite exciting for a while round Universal City. Nobody knew just what troubled Charlie. However, the big pachyderm was evidently peeved about something and snapped the heavy chain that bound him to an iron ring in the concrete floor and off he went on a regular stampede. Small trees were pulled up by the roots or snapped in two; then a bath in the muddy waters of the Los Angeles River. This latter luxury evidently restored his good temper as, when an hour or so later, he was routed out of his comfortable mudbed by the animal keepers he quite docilely marched back to his ring and chain in the Zoo.

Jacques Jaccard, former director of the Kerrigan-Victor company, has started production on a series of five-reel Western features, starring Harry Carey. The first of the series was written by Carey himself under the title, "A Knight of the Plains." Olive Fuller Golden, daughter of the founder of the White Rats, is to play feminine leads opposite Carey.

Agnes Vernon, who has been working under the direction of Leon Kent, has been transferred to the William Worthington Company, where she is to play leading roles opposite Herbert Rawlinson in the production of two and three reel Universal releases.

Two hundred and fifty people were engaged at Inceville this week for a masquerade ball scene in a current Ince Triangle feature in which Bessie Barriscale is being starred. A mammoth ballroom setting has been erected on the main stage and no such elaborate decorations and costumes have been seen at the Imp studios since Ince staged his big fairy stories last winter.

Mr. J. Leggett arrived in town this week from Douglas, Arizona. He is on a vacation trip with his wife and two children. He owns and runs the Hippodrome theater which was formerly known as the Airdome. J. A. Quinn, one of Los Angeles best known showmen, originated the theater and later sold it to Leggett, who formerly ran the Princess. The Arizona man will visit both expositions, returning home via Portland and Seattle.

Here is a drink that will be sure to "get you" even if you take a sip! Coroner's Cocktail! According to Kenneth McGaffey of the Lasky Company one of the players has evolved this drink in explanation of the large number of automobile wrecks here. In the big mixer: "Take three girls and three men; soak in champagne until midnight; squeeze into an automobile, add a dash of joy and a drunken chauffeur; shake well and serve at seventy miles an hour. A speed cop is the chaser, and the coroner's inquest will follow for bitters."

Manager Frank Egan of the Little Theater here has booked "Snow White" and opened on October 11. The city publicity is in the hands of Miss Mabel Condon of New York City who has been on the coast for some time studying the film business. An extensive repertoire is planned for the new season and Miss Condon is especially interested in the opportunity offered well known people of the screen to appear in night performances at the Little theater and yet allow of their picture work in the day time, thus permitting the screeners to maintain their grip upon the speaking stage and to add an extra salary to their exchequer.

A three-flag run, from Mexico, through the United States to Canada, was the unique stunt of an endurance run for an automobile made this week. The car made the long distance in 127 hours without stopping the engine or machine from the time of starting till it reached its destination. The car was manned by Don Smith, the agent at Los Angeles; Al G. Waddell, auto editor of the Los Angeles Times; Joe Waddell, cameraman at Universal City, and C. H. Hunter and Jack Griffith, both veteran drivers. The car left Tia Juana Sunday morning, and arrived in Vancouver Friday about noon. Cameraman Waddell made a number of scenic pictures of various picturesque points along the route which will be released through the Universal program.

Since the inauguration of the big Triangle plays the producers are trying to outdo their previous efforts and at present building complete villages seem to be in vogue at the Fine Arts Films studio. This time C. M. and S. A. Franklin, co-producers of the Jane Grey picture, "Mother of Seven," have ordered a large Mexican village to be constructed, to be used for scenes in their feature picture which is fast nearing completion.

The Planet Moving Picture Company has been incorporated and offices have been opened at No. 628 Title Insurance building. It is said that the scenario for a feature picture dealing with the Boer War is being finished by the producer and writer, Albert Kiralfy and Miss Maud White, respectively. Special music is being written to supplement Boer songs which will be used. The story is "Under the Vierkleur," and will be published serially in The Times so the public may more easily follow the action.

Arthur Shirley, who appeared in the two reel Universal picture, "The Pine's Revenge," directed by Joseph DeGrasse, and written by Nell Shipman, featuring Cleo Madison, says that the author is his mascot. It was Nell Shipman's first picture story sent to Australia in which he appeared, playing the role of the shepherd in "The Shepherd of the Southern Cross," and which gave him his start in pictures. Incidentally, this was the first scenario imported into Australia for local manufacture, a tribute to American authors in general and to Nell Shipman in particular.

Since being in Los Angeles for some time, Dorothy Gish, star of "Old Heidelberg," and "Jordan is a Hard Road," is looking forward with great anxiety to her trip to New York. She left the gay Manhattan over two years ago to come to Los Angeles, where she has played the leading female roles in approximately one hundred film comedies and dramas.

As usual the Universal, with Director General Henry McRae at the helm, did another good turn this week when more than two hundred girl students of the Los Angeles Polytechnic high school visited Universal City. Together with their chaperones (teachers from the same institution) they were shown throughout the plant and allowed to watch a number of the producing companies at work. Later it happened that Otis Turner was staging several scenes in which they could be used, and they were granted permission to work in them. This was made even more of a treat by the fact that J. Warren Kerrigan was playing the leading role in the production. The story was taken from Meredith Nicholson's serial, "Pennington's Legacy," and will be released in five reels.

Two extensive building improvements on Vermont avenue, in the southern section of the city, have been planned by F. W. Braun.

One of the buildings will occupy the frontage of an entire block, 240 feet in length, extending from Slauson avenue to Fifty-eighth street, and is to be the largest and will contain stores and a moving picture theater on the Vermont avenue frontage. The upper story will be devoted to apartments.

The total cost of the two buildings will be approximately $75,000. The city is now completing, on Budlong avenue, just south of Fifty-ninth street, a large school building. It is not yet known how the playhouse will be run or what sort of a program will be featured.

"LIVE AND LET LIVE" NEARLY COMPLETED.

The Cleo Madison Company is completing production of Adele Farrington's three-reel story of society life entitled "Live and Let Live." Irma Sorter, Tom Chatterton, Douglas Gerrard, Lule Warrenton, Marguerite Gibson and Alfred Allen support Miss Madison.

Any time you imagine the Theatre Specialty Company doesn't possess an expert shop man in its president, G. W. Armstrong, go down to his plant on Long avenue, Cleveland, and convince yourself. It seems the head brass worker was laid up, and in order not to disappoint exhibitors who had ordered frames Armstrong jumped in with a big apron and cut and laid brass like an expert. Even Mrs. Armstrong is there with the hammer and wallop.

BLACHE ENLARGING STUDIO.

Work is being rushed on the large additions under construction at the Popular Plays and Players' studios at Fort Lee, N. J., and it is hoped to have the improvements completed before bad weather interferes. The work is being done under the personal supervision of Herbert Blache and Mme. Alice Blache, who have their own ideas about motion picture plants and studios, as well as their own ideas about directing productions. "My Madonna," the five-part feature in which Mme Petrova was starred, was completed in the old studio, and will soon be released on the Metro program.

"Barbara Frietchie," a five-act feature based on the Clyde Fitch dramatization of the famous war poem, in which little Mary Miles Minter is starred, and Guy Coombs is featured, is now under production at the Popular Plays and Players' plant.

MOSS TO MAKE "ROSEDALE."

"Rosedale," the charming play which brought fame and fortune to the late Lester Wallack, a decade ago, will shortly be given a screen production under the direction of the B. S. Moss Moving Picture Corporation.

Mr. Moss promises, not only an all-star cast, which will interpret the principal roles, but a scenic production, conceded to be the most gigantic yet attempted in the film world.

A corps of scenic artists, carpenters, electricians and costumers are busily engaged at present on this production, under the personal supervision of Mr. Louis Flatto, technical director of the firm.

Footage Presswork

An Analysis of What Constitutes Good Press Work and Poor Publicity.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

PUBLICITY campaigns, as applied to the actual sale of motion picture film is something so comparatively recent that the demand for good press workers far exceeds the supply. More than that, too many of the employers estimate the value of their press man as they estimate the value of their directors—by their footage.

Even in the dramatic field this mistaken estimate too often obtains, and miles of press work are turned out yearly that do not influence one penny in the direction of the press worker's employer. It is not length, but placement that counts, but the other standard seems to obtain with most employers. Men who would never dream of trying to make up ten gallons of developer with the chemicals sufficient for a single gallon, will look at padded press books and tell themselves that their employee is a jewel, where he is a very bad quality of paste.

There are three kinds of press work; the kind the press man writes to show the boss, the kind he gets printed to show the boss and the kind he gets in to sell film. If the footage standard were replaced by intelligent judgment, there would be more of this third class.

Press work written to show the employer seldom gets beyond the manuscript stage. In this class belongs the write-up of the employer in which the entire array of commendatory adjectives are applied to the head of the concern. It is not an appreciation; it is not even a laudation, it is merely a mass of sickening rot that pleases the subject, but that would not be set in type by any regular paper at other than line rates. The subject of the story reads it in the typewritten page. It warms the cockles of his heart and destroys his perspective. Surely a man who can write stuff like this must be a man of rare discernment and matured judgment. If he says, later, that an opposition clique is holding the story out of the trade press, he is believed. A man who can write such stuff must tell the truth. Why else should such a fine story be put into the discard?

In the same class is the story that extravagantly praises every release of the employing manufacturer. It is explained that jealousy, and jealousy alone, prevents publication, and the press man holds his prestige in the studio if not in the newspaper offices. There have been men in theatrical employments who have held their positions for years, not on the strength of what they got in but on the strength of the stuff they showed their employer in manuscript. The same condition will presently obtain in pictures.

Of course, this stuff is sent out, but it is not used as written. It is either rewritten or blue-pencilled to an approach to sanity. The employer complains of the weakness of the stuff in print, he is shown the originals, overloaded with superlatives, and he damns the papers instead of the incompetent writer.

But some of this stuff does get into print by ways that wily press men know. In every town there are hanger-on sheets, issued primarily for their advertising possibilities. They must carry copy of some sort. They welcome film gossip as they used to welcome theatrical "dope," and they print it precisely as written. The sheet may have a distribution of a few thousand in a certain city or town or even a section of a city. In its real value to the manufacturer it may be less than nothing. It will not and cannot influence the sale of a single print, it cannot create a demand for a certain brand in more than two or three houses at best, but it is the fulsome story in print and it swells the press book just as surely as would an item in the trade papers or a paragraph in some nationally circulated magazine or weekly. In the book it looks just as good. By the unitiated it is accepted as being just as good. The press man obtained 362 inches of publicity last week. He has it pasted up to show. He must be a star. The employer cannot realize that these 362 inches of stuff in total do not do the brand one tenth of one percent. as much good as would a single paragraph in a running story in, say the Saturday Evening Post or any popular magazine. One paragraph in such a medium may reach a million people. An entire column in the North Side News or the Town Talk may not be read through by a single person, and at best will influence only those who live in a limited territory. It is not footage, but quality that counts.

This does not mean, of course, that efforts should be concentrated upon the half hundred national mediums. It does mean that results should be judged by some other standard than footage. The clever press man will work all possible sources of publicity. He will not alone try for the big magazines, but he will see to it that the smaller papers are supplied with material and even with cuts. He will provide local theater managements with the material for press work and arrange to supply cuts if not at cost, at least at but a small advance in prices. Many are following the Selig lead in offering an entire photoplay department in matrix form to papers willing to use it. Others issue live press sheets that are worth while clipping from, but they do not point with undue pride to several hundred reproductions of the mat stuff when they know that the combined circulation of the papers represented is not one-fifth of the circulation of the national publication, while the territory covered represents a still smaller percentage. The real value of press work consists, first, in the number of readers reached, then in the class of readers reached, and lastly, the extent of the distribution. Unlike the theatrical attraction, attention to a film may not be concentrated upon a single town. The entire country must be covered and interested at the same time. Local press work can only supplement the national campaign; it cannot replace it. A thousand papers in a thousand towns may interest—really interest—but five hundred renters of film. The same amount of time and money spent in getting into the trade press will reach all exhibitors in all parts of the country if the proper mediums are employed. The display in the press book many not be so great, but the results will show on the ledger.

And it is not sufficient to get matter into the paper. It must be matter that will "pull." It must be stuff that will interest; that will give the reader either a desire to see the production or to book it or else form and strengthen the belief that Dash films are the best because the company is the most alert and progressive, has the foremost players and the best writers. It must be cunningly written by an expert and not dashed off by any word-slinger. Herein most press campaigns fail. Even when the desired medium is reached the stories are not planned to interest.

No longer can the fact that Miss Dashie Blank fell a thousand feet down the face of a cliff, "and though badly injured pluckily insisted upon finishing the scene, the last in the five-reel production of 'Home at Last,' which Director Jones is finishing for the Smith Company" influence persons in either Miss Blank or the production. Too many ladies have fallen over cliffs. The exception is the lady who does not.

The real press work must first of all be readable, free from an excess of adjectives and praise through inference rather than through direct statement. It must be calculated either to support the brand or to rouse interest in a particular production (which indirectly benefits the entire product of the firm), and the less it looks like an intentional puff and the more it resembles the bona fide news items of the publication the better the effect and the stronger the drawing power of the paragraph.

There are few really great press agents; there are not many good ones, but they may be measured by results and not by the yardstick and the factors of results are:

Mediums.
Pull.
Interest.

The best press man is born, rather than made, but he still must be educated and if possible he must have served on both sides of the fence. As a press agent he must have learned to write. As an editor handling the press work of others and passing or refusing copy he should have learned what will and will not go. Such a man will cut out the excess of adjectives himself and let the copy run through uncensored instead of trying to find out just how much he can get through. The two-inch paragraph that gets through as written will do a firm more good than the half column that has been cut down in a hurry from a page story. The real press agent writes for publication. The footage man writes to please his employer.

In production the director who makes ten reels in five weeks and never makes a good one is costly, where the man who turns out four good reels in the same length of time, each of which helps to build the reputation of the brand, is a good investment. It is the same in press work. Disregard footage, do not over-value column stories in the Backwoods Bugle and the Crossroads Eagle. Look for results, not footage.

PATHE ACQUIRES "ARSENE LUPIN."

Pathe has acquired the picture rights to "Arsene Lupin," the famous Frohman play which enjoyed such a long run on Broadway several years ago. The cast and producer will be announced later.

Competition Keen at Fort Bragg, Cal,

Town of Three Thousand Inhabitants Supporting Three Motion Picture Theaters.

FORT BRAGG is one of the most interesting of the small seaport towns in northern California and has a history that dates from the early days when a fort was maintained there. It is in the center of a great redwood lumbering region and is almost entirely dependent upon this industry for its existence, the "back country" being but sparsely settled. Business is conducted there in a big way, lumber being sold largely in cargo lots; and, while the population is probably less than three thousand, there are twenty-eight thirst-quenching emporiums, not counting the soda fountains, and three moving picture houses—all striving eagerly for business. The managers of the latter confide individually to the visitor that the other fellow is losing money rapidly and must soon quit, and each makes it plain that there is room for not more than two houses.

UNION THEATRE

Union Theater, Fort Bragg.

Sequoia Theater, Fort Bragg.

The Union theater, conducted by Phil. Brubeck, is the most centrally located and has been established for five years, having been conducted all the time by the present owner, who at various times has conducted shows in nearby towns in conjunction with the one at Fort Bragg. This house is named after the lumber company which virtually controls the destinies of the town, and has a seating capacity of about four hundred. At the present time a regular Mutual service is being shown at ten cents. Mr. Brubeck is cooperating with the management of the Sequoia theater and "transfers" are given from one house to the other, reducing the price of admission. A Powers Cameragraph No. 6A is installed in the operating room, which is especially well equipped for a theater of this size.

The Sequoia theater, at Laurel and McPherson streets, is conducted by W. E. McFaul, a man with wide experience in the amusement field. Mr. McFaul was formerly in business in Fort Bragg but left for a time and only recently opened the Sequoia. This theater is well named, being in the great redwood or Sequoia timber belt of California. The house has been conducted almost steadily since 1908 under different managements, and not long ago was remodeled and enlarged. It has a seating capacity of four hundred and boasts a small balcony, a ladies' rest room and a commodious office in front with a fireplace that assists in heating the house in winter. A motor-driven Simplex machine is installed in the operating room, where there is also a mercury arc rectifier.

Mr. McFaul is showing the serial, "Who Pays?" featuring Ruth Roland, and is meeting with great success with this as Miss Roland was a former resident of Fort Bragg, residing there for several years. Some of her relatives live directly across the street from the theater and she is known to almost every resident of the town.

The Dreamland theater is the largest house in Fort Bragg and was used originally as a skating rink. Seating facilities to accommodate about four hundred persons are regularly installed, but at times as many as eight hundred persons are cared for. It is conducted by Tom Kuhn, who has been in the amusement business for the past ten years and who has the assistance of his wife and daughters when it is desired to put on vaudeville sketches. A regular program service is being used most of the time, supplemented by choice features. Mr. Kuhn attends to his own operating, using a Power Cameragraph No. 6A, and is an expert in this work.

Considerable advertising is done by the managers of each of these houses through the medium of billboards and handbills, as well as by personal solicitation, each having a wide acquaintance. Films are now secured without difficulty, the completion of a railroad to Willitts some time ago making shipments more frequent. Formerly they had to be sent by steamer or by stage from San Francisco. The local license fee is considered reasonable, being $30 a year.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR VITAGRAPH DANCE.

Although the monster ball and entertainment to be given by the Vitagraph Players at McLaughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Wednesday, October 27, for the benefit of the Hospital and Sick Fund, is over a week distant, everything is in readiness for the occasion. The committee, headed by "Vic" Smith, report that over a thousand tickets have been disposed of, with the prospect of doubling this number before the 27th. Besides the Vitagraph Players, members of other prominent film-producing firms will be present, as well as a number of well-known stars of the speaking stage. In addition, there will be a contingent of the players' friends from a number of the surrounding towns. The completed arrangements include vaudeville acts by Vitagraph stars and a program of old-time numbers to which the players and their friends will dance the Lancers, old-fashioned waltz and barn and round dances in vogue twenty years ago.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Before It's Too Late.

UNLESS you live in one of those places where flea catching is one of the favorite indoor sports, you cannot realize that the present efforts of the Keystone and Essanay companies to prevent pirate editions of their Chaplin films is not going to cut much ice unless the exhibitors themselves work with them, and the exhibitor who wants to stay in the business needs to help these companies in suppressing this nuisance because it seems that we are coming back to first principles and the time honored game of "duping" is going on again.

"Duping" is an excellent descriptive word; for both the exhibitor and his patrons are duped. The exhibitor thinks he is saving money when in reality he is losing business and the patron thinks he is going to get something that he does not. Last night we dropped into a theater on Market street, Philadelphia. Probably by the time this gets into print the name of any theater will do, for they will probably all use A Mix Up just as Ambition traveled about the whole route from the ferries to the City Hall. A Mix Up is like Ambition in that it is made up from cuttings from Chaplin comedies, but the point is this. Some of the scenes had been duplicated and re-duplicated to the point that the scenes in Dough and Dynamite in which the baker prints a floury hand on the back of the dress of the boss' wife had lost so much color that you could not fairly see the imprint of the hand. A friend with us, who traces back far enough to know such things, said it must have been about a fourth print. In other words a duplicate negative had been made from a Keystone positive. From a print made from this a second fake negative had been printed and from a print of this another negative had been made. Whether it was second, third or fourth it was unfit for exhibition.

The stuff is announced as a Chaplin "revue" and the man who made it declares that he can use 997 of any thousand foot print and defy the copyright law. If he gets away with it, the country will probably be flooded with dupes. If an honest manager pays $50 for the use of prints from the original negative, his opposition can pay ten for a junk copy, run it the day before and get not only the first business but create the impression that the subject is a poor one. And we shall have Pickford revues in which Rags and The Eagle's Mate and all the rest will be presented in such a jumble as will turn the mental stomach of any right minded picture enthusiast and you'll have to educate your public to the knowledge of dupes. It will put the general business on too great a handicap. It will put many houses out of business, if permitted. Help to keep the business clean by refusing to book dupes and also by helping to locate pirate prints.

This is not written at the instance of either Essanay or Keystone. They will not know about it until you have read it, too. It is written as a word of warning against a condition that presently will become intolerable.

Who Wants the Autogobile?

It will be remembered that the Autogobile advertising wagon was started from Gardner, Mass., in a general westerly direction last spring. Steve Farrar took so long to use it that it was almost forgotten. The Autogobile, which eventually is to reach Charles Chaplin, is now in the custody of Joseph C. Hewitt, Casino theater, Mt. Carmel, Ill. It will be turned over to the first exhibitor promising to pay the freight, use it and pass it on to the next in line. Write Mr. Hewitt direct, please.

Incidentally Mr. Hewitt sends three issues of The Photoplay News that were run before a smallpox scare shut things up. He says he is going to revive the sheet presently. The foreign advertising is all complimentary and he says that this made a lot of friends for the house as well as paying for past favors. The sheet was issued by "M. A. Nager." If you'll take away the periods and run it together you'll get the idea. It was run much on the lines of Steve Farrar's paper for the two sets of theaters are sister houses, but they are not the same stuff worked over and there seems to be a pleasant rivalry between the two managers. We hope to see both weeklies started up with the cold weather.

Things to Be Done.

E. C. O'Keefe, of the Regent Theater Company, Billings, Mont., sends in his first program and this comment:

> I am sending you herewith a copy of our house program, "Feature Facts," for your scrutiny. You will recall, I sent in a few bits of advertising matter when I was running "The Luna." Since then, we have closed "The Luna" and have the Regent and Majestic theaters, both new.
> This is my first attempt at a regular program and we intend to issue it every week regularly, for the two houses. No doubt you will find many errors or places where a decided improvement could be made and we will appreciate any suggestions you may offer.
> This first one covers 12 pages but our next and those following will be only 8 pages. Do you think the ads we have put in are well placed? We did not want to overdo it, although we could have placed several more pages. We run only features in both houses and I figure that the best way to do is to pick out the one feature that looks like the winner of them all for the week and boost it strong. Do you think this a good idea? Of course, I would not neglect the balance of the program. You will note I have boosted "The Rosary" strong in this issue, as we are raising our prices on it to 25c. and want to boost it all we can. We get 25c. quite often, whenever a feature warrants it. Our regular price is 15c. straight.
> Thanking you for your opinion regarding this and hoping we will be able to work up a house program that will even make George Carpenter of Real Reels take notice, I remain.

Since we've been asked, we think that it is a mistake to have started with twelve pages knowing that a cut to eight would come the following week without at least a very prominent explanation. To go back in size the second week is to suggest a failure, and there is no reason why Feature Facts should fail. As can be gathered from the last paragraph of the letter, Mr. O'Keefe is one of the live wires in the Carpenter territory and he has gotten out a mostly good program.

It must be confessed that here and there the days are not dated as they should be and probably will be when the more important matters are straightened out. More importantly, there is no resume of the program. If you read all of the program you know what they will have, but you cannot see at a glance that they will have a certain subject on a certain day. In an eight page form, it would be an excellent thing to take pages four and five (the double middle page) and give the classified programs here. The double page is suggested in order that the two house programs may be linked together by a rule border that encloses the two pages and not a rule border for each house program. This will lead the man who turns to page five to look at page four as well. This program should be run by dated days in regular order, and with features it is possible to give each title a big display type line, then give the cast and a couple of lines of information about the film in eight point "run in," which means as a single paragraph and not as tabulated cast and separate paragraph. On the lower half of page eight divide the space between the two houses and give the underline for the next week. Above that give the underline as far ahead as possible but without specific dates and with an introduction of perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty words. Keep the editorial talk on page three as it stands at present, then use the rest of the paper for film notes and comment on the week's releases at the two houses as their relative importance may seem to warrant.

And by all means pick the strongest subjects for the biggest boosting not alone because it pays to center on some definite object, but because there is less danger of slopping over on a mischance. It may be that there will be two of equal worth some weeks, but do not boom more than two and if you cannot get your people in every night, try to get them in on the advanced admission nights, not so much because you'll get more money as because then the occasional visitor will see your best offering and be more apt to become a regular.

But two foreign advertisements are used; one page in all. Two more pages of advertisements would probably permit the size to be raised to a sixteen and if the patrons are made to realize that these advertisements pay for the extra space in which chat is given they will not object. We want to see coming issues. Meantime Mr. O'Keefe might write R. B. Wilby, Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala., for a copy of the Post. It is worth study.

A Syndicate.

The Movie News (which we like except for the name) is growing. It is now supplied to seven theaters in Virginia and the Carolinas, only a few pages having to be lifted to get the local stuff in, the rest being general matter that runs in all editions. This is a capital scheme where the management, as in this instance, is sufficiently generous of space for the local house matter. Too often the syndicate paper gives only a single page of local matter. In the News each house gets what it needs.

Another Newspaper.

The Duluth (Minn.) Photoplay News, published by Thomas Furniss in the interest of his Rex and Lyric theaters, is the newest Vol. I., No. 1. It has a page fourteen by twenty-one, which is rather too long for the width, as so many of these special newspapers are, principally because they print on calendered paper and the paper does not fold well. Good news stock is both cheaper and better. There is a half column appeal for a local charity, but the rest is all film stuff, the only house stuff being a sound double column editorial. There should be more local talk. That is what interests most. People want to read about film, but they find themselves more interesting than the best films and want some gossip, too. There should be more local advertisements, too, both display and classified. The paper makes an excellent start, but more variety should be given the reading in a newspaper form.

Book Marks.

W. N. Allen, of the Vaudette, Tacoma, sends in some book marks These are slips of thin card 2½ by 6 inches. At the top of a U shaped cut is made an inch wide and two inches deep. This is to be slipped over the left leaf to hold the marker in place. The stock sent is red card printed in black with the advertisement of the house and the slogan "Where friend meets friend," which is printed on the cut out tab to give it greater prominence. It is handy for the school kiddies as well as others, and does nicely for a novelty.

Elaborate.

One of the most elaborate programs is that put out by the J. H. Kunsky houses in Detroit. With eight houses contributing, naturally there would be a liberal outlay, but even at that a twenty page magazine form issue is something to be proud of. Each house gets one page for program and house chat and the rest is general stuff, well written and illustrated.

A Good Creed.

It would pay if a recent issue of the program for the Regent, Buffalo, had contained nothing but this:

> Not alone are we responsible for your > entertainment while within
> THE REGENT
> but your comfort, health and safety
> as well

That's a creed that will cover every factor in any house. The Regent used it boxed in as part of the inside front cover. We would run it every issue on the outside cover and make it part of the trade mark. It comes in the first anniversary issue of the house. It is a year old in age, but a century experienced in showmanship.

Visiting with Mr. Bleich.

It pays to advertise. We wondered what had become of George A. Bleich and his always interesting advertising and right away he bobs up to tell us that he is still running the Empress in Owensboro, Ky. He adds:

> There isn't any "coming back" to it; I haven't "gone" to the rear that I know of, the best proof of which is the biggest season I have ever yet experienced.
> Every man, woman and child in "Giles" county knows the Empress and patronizes it freely, for which I am most thankful. I attribute a good deal of the success to the fact that I am now working nineteen hours (about) in the day, to where seventeen or less sufficed in former times.

We would point out to Mr. Bleich that there are people outside of Kentucky who are interested in his stuff, but that we cannot tell them about it unless he thinks to send it along.

Mr. Bleich is dropping to some extent his personality advertising, contending that it has been done for some time and that something else can be found to replace it, but we are not so certain about that. There was something to each advertisement that had a tang to it; that meant something more than a mere polite announcement. Now and then it shines through as when he announces that a fewer number of performances will be given on a certain day because it takes longer than usual to run the film properly. That is the Bleich personality, though it is not signed.

Favoritism.

A midwest manager is up against a peculiar proposition. It is a law of the State that any person attending an amusement on Sunday shall be fined $10. In the downtown section are seven houses that have run without opposition seven days a week. This manager has a suburban house about a block from a certain church, the pastor of which threatens to invoke this law, which has been on the statute books since 1854 but which has seldom been observed. The minister doesn't care about the other seven picture houses that stay open. He is interested only in closing this one house that he thinks will interfere with his own attendance, and therefore the contribution plate. He knows that pictures are vicious because he has read so, but his knowledge seems to be all hearsay. He is very evidently sincere in his statement that he will cause each person attending the theater to be arrested and fined and naturally no one wants to pay $10.10 to see pictures and then get arrested before the program has been run through. The manager wants to know what to do

We think that we would get the other theaters to interest the powers that be in convincing the minister of the error of his ways. If they refuse to act, we think that we would open some Sunday with a small audience hired to be arrested. Then the next week we would require the city authorities to arrest the audiences of all other theaters or sue to compel them to do their duty. We would make what is inelegantly termed such a "stink" that public opinion would require the law to be held in abeyance until repealed. Seven theater owners can come pretty close to putting on the political screws if they want to. Make them want to.

Unfair.

We do not know what the Canadian rulings may be as to trade names and common law, but there should be some way of getting after a Victoria, B. C., exhibitor who advertises a Universal program and announces his house a "The Home of Paramount Pictures." One of the bills at this house (the Victoria) does even worse. It says:

> Don't fail to see Carl Laemmle's
> FAMOUS PLAYERS
> in
> AN ALL FEATURE PROGRAM.

In the original advertisement the first line is in eight point roman and the second and fourth in about 40 and 36 point respectively. Here in the states we believe that an action in common law would hold as "Paramount" and "Famous Players," are the well known and firmly established names of business concerns and this is palpably an effort to profit at the expense of those companies.

Growing.

The monthly program of the New Family, Adrian, Mich., has gone from twelve to sixteen pages to get in all the facts about coming attractions and yet it does not print a calendar that will show the monthly list at a glance. They give plenty of detail, but a single page program giving the dates and titles would be worth a few facts less scattered through six pages of program. The management writes frankly and convincingly of its more ambitious plans for the coming season but it does not mass the program where the value of many of the offerings can best be seen at a glance. No matter how much space may be devoted to the detailed program, whether you offer the program for a week or a month, put it prominently where it may all be seen at a glance and then more will read for details. That is what counts because it is more apt to "get" the man who gives but a casual glance. If he has to read too much, he will not, but if it merely means running down a column, he will read through curiosity and perhaps keep on through interest.

Well!

The Third Street theater wants to speak real cross to the house cartoonist. He shows the interior of the theater with just one patron in the seats. It is a libel.

We spoke of a house in Buffalo that warned its automobile owning patrons when it started to rain. Before the paragraph was printed the Third Street had started to run this:

> MOTORISTS—ATTENTION!
> If any patrons arriving at the theater in an open motor car and with the top down, will leave their number with the ticket taker he will see that the top is raised and the car protected in the event of its raining during the time they are attending our performance. No charge.

That is even better and will be appreciated by those who do not want to hurry out into the rain to put their own tops up. The auto as a rival of the pictures must be counted upon and anything that will get the auto trade is helpful.

Starting in.

A formal invitation to attend the opening of the Toy theater, Milwaukee, is printed on a marbled yellow paper in a rather difficult type. A solid color and a shaded letter would have been preferable. The shaded copperplate Gothic works more than nicely for invitations. The house takes its apt name from the owner, Charles Toy.

Another Debut.

The Camden theater, Parkersburg, W. Va., has changed from a program to a "magazine" of the same five by seven size. The program is run on page three in a very neat arrangement, made possible by the fact that they use not more than two titles a day and generally only one. The second page of the first issue carries the poem that suggested one of the coming attractions and the back page gives film gossip. With the second page for house talk the arrangement is well devised, compact and eye-pleasing. It will stand watching.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00.

Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Ave., New York

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Comfort.

THE GREEN writer stands a better chance than he realizes," suggested a close observer the other day. "He stands a better chance than ever because most of the good writers have tried photoplay, either openly or under a pseudonym, and have given up the game because the profits were too meagre."

There is much logic back of this argument. Many established writers are more than discouraged; they are disgusted and they will be hard to coax back. The man who keeps coming along is the man who will be around when the prices shoot up. The trouble is that too many of the promising beginners have also become discouraged and disgusted. The time will come when the man who can write stories in photoplay action will command the top prices rather than a man who once wrote a best seller. It's a long and weary wait and few are patient waiters, least of all those who got into the business merely because, as one correspondent expressed it, they want to make more money with less physical labor.

Hunting Names.

Honest and true, the use of an editor's name instead of a company name does not help the sale of a script one particle. Sometimes it even hurts where the editor has left his connection and the company refuses to open letters addressed to him personally. Many writers are constantly fishing for names to write to. One company had an office boy who used to sign the rejection slips for the fun of the thing and he not only got a lot of letters, but one offer of a percentage if he would take the writer's scripts. Only lately we mentioned Daniel Ellis of the Lubin company. He definitely and specifically stated that he was not the editor, yet within three days of the publication of the item scripts began to come in addressed to him personally as editor. As a matter of fact the Lubin script room is under a commission form of government and there will be no editor, but each time any member of the Lubin staff is named scripts will be addressed to him direct and he will open them feeling that they have been sent in by boobs—and most of them are.

Foolish.

If you are told that certain things should not be done and are done only by boobs, and if you are doing those things yourself, don't get sore and decide that the man who writes such stuff is a pup. That will get you nowhere at all. Argue that perhaps there really is some truth in the statement as wonder if perhaps this is not one of the reasons why you do not get ahead. We get all sorts of anonymous letters and clipings from persons whose feelings have been hurt by home truths. It does not bother us any save that mostly the letters are written by hand and take a long time to read, but we are sorry for the persons who blindly kick out because facts are at variance with their own practice. Don't get sore. Be open to reason if you want to get ahead.

"Highest Prices."

Not long ago a new editor announced—as all new editors do—that his company would pay the highest prices for the right sort of material. We printed the note suggesting that the company had previously entertained some rather peculiar ideas as to what a high price was. Now the editor, already an "ex," writes:

> Since I was editor, I paid $50 for one 3R, $40 for a 3-Reel, the highest prices ever paid. $25 was next highest, and $10 the common price.
> I hope the time will come when the decent writers of this country will band themselves together in a trust that will make the producers wear strong glasses. But, as you say today, if men will take Editor's jobs for $25 what is the hope for men who have made serious study of the business for years?

And there you are. "Highest prices" in this case does not work out at $25 a reel. And then some readers of this department want to know why we do not have more market notes! They want names to send out to, and when they get stung by these addresses they raise wails that disturb the fiends in hell.

The time will never come when there will be an author's trust. No such thing is possible. But right now there are corners in brains and originality.

Pick out the magazines that have the best stories and you'll have a list of the magazines that treat the author best. Pick out the film companies with the best releases and you'll have the companies that offer the best pay or as good pay plus decent treatment.

Payment is not always made in money. Sometimes the author would rather sell where he gets the best treatment and a fair price than tie up his story for six months in the hope of getting ten dollars more a reel when he does get it.

Time was, in fiction writing, when a story would be paid for on publication. It might be a year or more before the accepted story was published, but it was the same way all over and there was no use in making complaint. But some did make complaint and some editors were clever enough to realize that there was something back of the kick. They were shrewd enough to realize that a check today was twice as big as a check a year from now. By the time the old line men woke up, they were getting the seconds, the rejections of the live wires, and the reputations of these live magazines had been made. They not only got stories reasonably cheap, but they got the pick of the lot.

It is getting to be the same way in the film business. The companies that pass on stuff within two or three weeks, that pay promptly and with fair generosity are getting the pick of the market. The companies that pay from five to fifteen dollars a reel are mostly getting from second to tenth grade stuff. Authors can never manipulate a trust, but the companies can get corners on brains and some of them are doing it while the others sleep. They are paying $50 and upward for stuff, and they are paying it promptly. Other makers who pay the same prices but who take from six months to a year to make up their minds get the stuff that authors have tried elsewhere and have failed to sell. They are willing to let it lie for a year.

Today "highest prices" are in the vicinity of $100 for one reels and from $50 to $75 for additional reels. Few are paying those prices, but a good average price hangs around $50 a reel and the author who takes less for a reasonably good story is not only spoiling business, but he is cutting his own throat. And a lot of times $25 a reel is taken where more would be given were a demand to be made.

Right at the present time two great faults menace the business. One is overproduction and the other is a dearth of good stories, particularly in the shorter lengths. Overproduction will care for itself presently, but there will be no more ample supply of good stories until the people who really can write good stories are assured a proper and renumerative market. No man who can get $50 or more for a short story of less than 5,000 words is going to write plays instead. With a fiction story he can offer to perhaps a hundred good markets and still have several hundred lesser markets if the story fails there. If he writes a play there are about six good markets, perhaps a dozen uncertain ones and some others about which there is no uncertainty whatever.

The law of supply and demand is inexorable. In time the demand for better productions will create a demand for better scripts that inevitably bring an era of better prices, but authors can help things along by not taking $25 for stories that are worth more. As the editor quoted in the begininng of this article writes:

> I am done with ——— Company—thank God! I will no longer be mailing letters to my fellow playwrights,—
> I am pleased to say your drama is excellent, but would require rewriting. We send you herewith $10 for the story. Should you have more, we would be delighted to read them—etc.

Not Wholly True.

Remarks a correspondent:

> In a recent issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, one correspondent had the nerve to say that the directors and inside men were supplying all the stuff. Where did that party get that idea? If they were filling the demand, why is it one of my photoplays was accepted? Will they answer?

No. Staff and inside writers are not writing "all" the plays, but they are writing more than half and for no other reason than that the free lance writers seemingly cannot fill the bill. If the free lance writer could fill the bill, there would be few staff writers, but authors who really can write photoplays, even the sort of photoplays that get on the screen, are so few that when a studio finds a man who can write to their style, he is likely to get a job or a guarantee.

The manufacturer would prefer a wider ranger of stories, but he cannot get them and if he must accept the old themes, he prefers them to be written by a man who can at least give him a good working script, and who can be depended upon to deliver the scripts on time, when they are wanted and just how they are wanted. The staff writer knows the little tricks that save money without letting it show on the film. He knows the director he is writing for and shapes the story to his particular fancies. He can, at a pinch, deliver a story in three or four hours. It might be weeks before such a story would come in and then it would have to be reconstructed.

The staff and inside writers are not trying to "hog" the game. Some of them would prefer not to be staff writers, for that matter, but they are necessary until such time as the mass of outside writers come to realize that every mess of drivel they evolve is not a masterpiece. Either the generality of "outside" writers do not know how to write or have such a contempt for their game that they do not half try.

Just this afternoon a man who was put into an editorial job over night wrote in a personal letter:

> One of my duties is to go over the stuff that piles in, though we have never advertised for scripts. It is all new to me and such a disappointment. Now and then we get one that is splendid, but on the average I did not believe that such a > mass of absolute rot could be written. I know you've told me time and again that not one author in a hundred could write what was wanted, but I never supposed that they wrote such awful stuff as they do. Before this I've seen only studio scripts and I never realized how much they must have been changed to make them producible.

That's the point of view of a man who has been writing for forty years, who has been familiar with produced scripts but who never, until lately, had seen the stuff that comes to the editor's desk day in and day out. And that is why, still, a majority of the stories screened are written by insiders. The rejections are written by those who approach their work in a spirit of overconfidence and who accept the statement that script writing is easy. Just this morning a man wrote that he has been doing editorial work for various newspapers but wanted to do something "easier and more profitable." All he wanted to know was the form in which scripts were to be written. He knew the rest. He is one of the reasons for the studio writer.

The Earmarks.

"I got one out of this bunch," remarked the editor of one of the licensed companies. "Sent her $75 for two reels. I could see from the synopsis that there was a story there, so I did not read it all but turned to the action. She writes pretty good action, too. You can see she has had experience."

There you have it in a nutshell. The first few lines of the well written synopsis proved the story, so the action was read. The action was good, so it was seen the author had had a lot of practice. There were probably more than a hundred scripts in the "bunch." One looked like a real script and proved to be such. Get the experience and you'll get the checks, but let experience teach you, also, what not to write.

The Wrong Idea.

Every now and then someone seems to take an especial glory in the fact that he is a self-made author. One such writes:

> It was in the spring of 1912 that I made my first venture into the field. At that time Lubin sent me a form sheet, consisting of four pages. May God bless the man who sent it, for I don't know where he got my name and address.

Then he tells how it took him three years to write twenty plays, the last of which he sold to the American. Later he says:

> Many ask you if such and such a book or school will help them or better still, show them how to sell plots. I have never favored any of these as aids to success. I look upon them as a stumbling block. Never have I gazed upon a book on photoplay writing, and I'll be ——— if I'm going to start now. Not since I have been able to sell a two-reeler and receive such encouraging letters from men and women like Reynolds, of Fox Features, or Grace Everson, of American, or the editor of the Coquille Film Co. The old Lubin sheet has been my only guide and shall be for some time to come.

Here is the usual contradiction. The author says he has had no help and needs no help, yet he admits that he was started by the old Lubin form sheet of 1912. More than this, he is proud to say, he does not need. Books and schools are alike useless.

Our correspondent is wrong. Photoplay writing cannot be taught, but the rules for that writing can be imparted, and he who would write must, in some manner, come into possession of those rules, either through experiment and study or by reading or taking a course.

We do not object to "schools" of photoplay writing because they are schools. We object to them because they are not schools in the true sense. We object to them because they teach the hurtful belief that "anyone" can write photoplays. We object to them because they lie to their pupils as to their progress and assure them they are making advance in order to coax further remittance from them. We object to them because, once they have obtained their pupils' money, they turn loose upon the studios a mess of untrained writers some of whom hold "diplomas" and all of whom have been personally assured by their "teachers" that they have graduated and are now fully competent. We do not fight the schools because they are schools but because they are mostly conducted by lying grafters.

We do not object to text books. To the contrary we not only have written a text book but we recommend the books of others that are really helpful and informative, and worth their price. We do not recommend a sixteen page book that sells for two dollars or a few staple-bound typewritten mimeographed pages that sell for two dollars when there are better and more authoritative books on the market. We do recommend books; not alone recommend them but declare them to be essential to success, but we do not endorse the methods of those who seek to sell their books through false and misleading statements. Such books as those written by Esenwein and Leeds, Philips or William Lord Wright are helpful and necessary. They make easy the path of the novice by pointing the way, but they make it easy only in the degree in which the author can understand and assimilate the advice and suggestions therein contained. And in mentioning above certain authors we do not mean to suggest that these are all of the good books. To the contrary there are several others, but these are the leaders because they are planned as text books [illegible] own and the Esenwein-Leeds [illegible] in use as text books in certain general colleges and schools having this course in their section of English Literature.

Some text book or guide of some sort is absolutely necessary to rapid progress and valuable in proportion to the degree of exactness of statement and extent of information. To argue that it is praiseworthy to ignore the teachings of books is to class with the man who learns to spell from the newspapers instead of from a spelling book.

The correspondent quoted above admits that it was the Lubin form sheet that led him to take up photoplay writing and gave him his initial instruction. This was two pages and a third of suggestion and a page and two-thirds of a sample script. The much larger Technique of the Photoplay by the same writer he disdains. Why? If the form sheet was helpful surely a book of 176 pages of information and illustration should be of greater aid. No single book has ever made a writer out of an incompetent, but any good work on photoplay writing will aid a person possessing the necessary mental qualifications to shorten the term of his apprenticeship and at the same time produce a better grade of work.

We have found success in photoplay and came to the work from fiction writing, but so late as last year we were still able to be helped by other books and found in Professor Neal's work on short stories many new and helpful ideas and others that while not new were so clearly expressed that we gained new and more ample understanding. Other trained writers have said the same thing. They knew the facts of which Professor Neal wrote, but they never had so clearly expressed them mentally. The real writer is the man who accepts all the aid he may receive and looks for more.

Time Jumps.

Lots of stories that might otherwise be good are spoiled because there are so many time leaders required. They are bright and clever, but a time leader must come every four or five scenes if the story is to be intelligible. Few stories can survive this handicap.

And many of these stories can be twisted around to escape a majority of these leaders if only they are told in another way. We saw a story the other day that had eleven time leaders. Slightly changing the story itself and rearranging the sequence gave a story with but two intervals of time requiring leaders, and sometimes whole runs of two or three scenes each can be condensed into a single leader.

Take for instance the old story of the Irishman in the cigar store. It might run something like this:

1—Cigar counter—Jim behind counter. Pat comes in—lights his pipe—exits.

Leader—The next morning.

2—Cigar counter as in No. 1—Pat comes in—lights his pipe—exits.

Leader—The next morning.

3—Cigar counter as in No. 1—Pat comes in—lights his pipe—exits—Jim shows surprise and interest.

Leader—The next morning.

4—Cigar counter as in No. 1—Pat comes in—lights his pipe—Jim about to speak—changes his mind—Pat exits.

And so it might go for fifteen or sixteen scenes and then—

Leader—The next morning.

18—Cigar counter as in No. 1—Pat comes in—lights his pipe—about to exit—Jim stops and questions him—Pat blows smoke in Jim's face—Jim coughs—Pat says—

Cut-in—"I'm a regular customer. I light me pipe here every morning." Jim faints—Pat exits unconcernedly.

On the other hand this might be drawn in and handed in this manner:

1—Cigar counter—Jim behind case—Tom on other side—Pat enters—lights his pipe—exits—Tom looks at Jim inquiringly—Jim says

Cut-in—"I don't know who he is, but he comes in every morning to light his pipe."

Tom laughs—exits—Jim looks puzzled.

Leader—The next morning.

2—Cigar case as in No. 1—Jim at counter—Pat enters—lights pipe—about to exit—Jim grabs him—rather rough—Pat indignant—says

Cut-in—"Tis a fine way to treat a regular customer!"

Jim taken aback—slightly apologetic—wants to know what Pat buys—Pat blows a puff of smoke in his face—says

Cut-in—"Sure, I light me pipe in here every morning, regular."

Jim staggered by the announcement—falls back—with much dignity. Pat relights his pipe—exits.

Here the leader gives the same suggestion of repetition, but not only that. It saves footage for the real story which now can be built upon the incident. Suppose you try to see what you can build on that starter, just as an experiment, but please do not send it in.

Profitable.

It is better to be a success than an unappreciated genius. Be practical.

Pedigree.

The editor does not care who your grandfather was, so don't tell him. Show him what you are.

Commercial.

It is hard to see your brain-children slaughtered, but didn't you raise them to sell?

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 107.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose you had a steep pitch in projection and your manager wanted the keystone effect eliminated. What would you do? Would the elimination of the keystone effect correct all the other defects due to steep pitch? What are the other defects?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 101.

The Roll of Honor on Question 101 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; T. Glucksman, New Orleans, Louisiana, and Bert Meester, Hobatd, Indiana.

Brother Smith set forth with considerable detail a plan of his own, which, while it has considerable merit and covers some things very well, still it does not, I think, take care of the breakage matter in the best way.

I have selected the reply of Friend Larmour as most completely covering the whole proposition.

Reply to Question No. 101.

By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

What, in your opinion, is the best form of condenser mount? Operators will please be careful in answering this question, as I intend presenting the replies to machine manufacturers, if there is a practical unanimity of opinion.

The Answer:

In my opinion the best form of condenser mount is one made heavy enough to act as a heat reservoir, and thus prevent the uneven expansion and contraction of the lens, which will very largely tend to reduce breakage. It should be so constructed that the lenses will be in line with the remainder of optical system and square with each other, and should be adjustable, so that the distance between the lenses may be varied. Another important item is that it should be so made that the lenses may be easily and quickly removed for cleaning, and that they always be held square with the rest of the optical system, as well as the two condenser lenses being held square with themselves. It should be well ventilated, but all vent holes should be masked so that no light can escape. Another decided improvement in condenser mounts would be one so constructed as would enable the use of either two or three lens combinations; also lenses of different diameters. These two things would greatly aid operators in suiting their lens combination to local conditions. With a suitable three lens condenser combination a great deal of chromatic aberration can be eliminated, and with an arrangement to swing the slide carrier out of the way while projecting motion pictures, as with the motiograph, one is able to utilize a larger percentage of the light.

Tampa, Florida.

M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida, says:

> Enclosed find copy of law which will be in effect January 1, 1916, under the provisions of which operators will be examined. And now a few words concerning conditions in this city. We have eight motion picture shows, and a fifty thousand dollar house under construction. Six of these theaters charge ten cents, and two charge five. Seven of the houses employ union men, and the other theater, the Kinedrome, employs two non-union men. In the other houses, except the Grand, the union slide is shown at every show. Projection is fair in all the theaters. We recently organized a school for members of Local 321, and every operator member has a set of Hawkins Electrical Guide, and the last edition of your Handbook. In conclusion let me say that I can heartily recommend the Handbook and the Hawkins work to those who wish to improve in the art of perfect projection. It may be of interest to you to know that the recent contracts of Local 321 have been favorably received. We, the members of Local 321, wish to express our best wishes to you, and the Moving Picture World, and trust that you will continue to boost for improvement in projection.

Now here is a local that takes the right view of matters. It does not sit down on its tail and howl at the moon. It has no particular fear that the non-union man will absorb all the knowledge, because its members have equipped themselves with the Handbook and the Hawkins work, and therefore have at their finger ends the technical end of things, the study of which, combined with practical experience, will keep them far ahead of any fear of competition by outsiders. I cannot too heartily commend the course of the local in establishing a school for its members. It is the right thing to do. Up to date the surface of projection possibilities have hardly been scratched. The operator who thinks he has mastered his calling has several more good, big, large, life-size thinks coming. The business is new. We are learning every day. As to the contracts being favorably "received," I could not be quite sure of the brother's meaning, but I presume he means that the contracts have been favorably received by the managers. My compliments to the members of 321. As to non-union men, if they are real operators—that is to say—if they know their business sufficiently well to be admitted to the local (I am informed that this is not the fact), it is to be hoped they will see the foolishness of their course, and mend their ways. The lawyer who remains outside his union (Bar Association) would not be alowed to practice in the courts at all. We cannot apply this sort of thing to the operators—more's the pity. As to the law (it is a state law) it provides for an examining board to be composed of three members, "one of whom shall have some knowledge of electricity, one to be an expert on moving picture machines, and the third an electrical inspector or building commissioner employed by the city." The mayor of each city in the state is directed to, within sixty days of the passage of the act, appoint such a board. Applications for license must be accompanied by a fee of one dollar, and is made directly to the examining board. The board will designate the time and place for examination. The examination may be in whole, or part in writing, but shall be practical and elementary in its character, though sufficiently strict to test the qualifications of the applicant as to his knowledge of electricity. If the applicant fails to pass the fee to be returned, and his employer notified by the board. It is to be unlawful to employ any but a licensed operator, or assistant operator. The minimum age is eighteen years. No license will be granted to anyone who has not had at least one year's practical experience on moving picture machines, and in order to get an assistant's license, one must have served under an experienced operator for one year prior to making application for assistant's license. All machines shall be under the care and supervision of one person holding an operator's license, and this person shall be responsible for the proper handling of the plant, and the acts of his assistant. The penalty for any infringement of the law is a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding ninety days. There is to be an inspection of theaters not less than three times a year.

If the copy sent the editor is a complete copy of the law it certainly is remarkably complete for its length. It will be observed that the examination fee is only normal, and that is as it should be, though I see no reason why the dollar should be returned to the one who fails. He should be willing to take his own chances in passing. I would rather the minimum age limit be twenty-one, though, of course, in this day and age we have got to take into consideration the fact a boy is all too often forced out into the world to make his own way a considerable time before his moustache has sprouted. The qualification of applicants with regard to the optical end of projection is, in its way, equally important with knowledge of electrical matters.

With Apologies to Brother Sargent.

Crockett Brown, Nashwauk, Minnesota, says:

> Enclosed find photograph of the float I rigged up for our Fourth of July celebration. This picture doubtless really belongs in the advertising for exhibitors' department, but I send it to you, as I have mentioned the plant several times in the projection department. As you will see by the photograph, I mounted the Brush plant on a one-horse wagon, dressed up a bit and drawn by a little Hudson roadster which was also decorated. I used sixteen, 60 watt lamps on the float, and two large ceiling fans, one at either end. We were on parade two hours in the forenoon and I left the lights burning and the fans running all the time. It made quite a hit. I got first prize, as well as some mighty good advertising. I gave away five hundred wooden whistles, three-fourths of an inch square by three inches long, which had my advertisement printed on all four sides. They certainly were popular with the kids. I let the plant standing in front of the theater during the evening, running until 11 o'clock, and it was, by a large margin, the brightest spot in town. In the picture the writer is seen standing with his brother's twin girls. The reason for the uncomfortable looking pose is, I wished to get my picture took without being on crutches, and thought I had them out of sight. You will note, however, that > they loom up in the picture just back of the Hudson top. I will add that all I have accomplished for the past two years has been done from a wheel chair, having been unable to move a limb in all that time. This spring I took a turn for the better, am steadily improving, and hope soon to be able to walk again with some degree of comfort. I have never written the Advertising for Exhibitors' section, but will say that all I know about advertising I have learned from Mr. Sargent's department. I am not a natural advertiser, but depend strictly on the World and its departments. However, I am using a book ticket stunt, which I thought out myself and believe to be different from any other. It certainly has been a hum-dinger for me during dull times. When I find time I am going to send Mr. Sargent a sample, and thank him for his splendid hints on advertising.

Gee! Here I will have Sargent swelled up like a toy balloon. There will positively be no living in the same house with him for the next two weeks. Well, Brother Brown, you try and dig out time to send Sargent that stunt P. D. Q. According to your own admission he has helped you; moral: one good turn deserves another, and I am not a bit jealous. The float is certainly unique, but, above all things, the success Friend Brown has achieved ought to point a moral to others. Here is a man who, hampered physically, has achieved undoubted success in a small town motion picture show business. While some of the strong, healthy managers have sat on their haunches and howled about "poor business," this man, with his wheel chair and active top piece (no solid ivory there) has been doing things. My compliments to Brother Brown. I hope his expectation of complete recovery will be fully realized. By-the-way, there's real class to those twins. If that is the kind they raise up there, the girls ought to be all married before they are seventeen.

Law Overturned.

And now with regard to the law prohibiting members of the I. A. from contributing to newspapers, periodicals, etc. In the report of the By-Laws Committee of the Chicago Convention, page 246, second paragraph from the bottom, appears the following:

> "We further recommend that Section 41, on page 36, continuing on page 37, be eliminated, for the fact that many locals have been denied the use of the press to carry on successfully their various controversies."

Section 41, pages 36 and 37 of the By-Laws refers to the law in question. The recommendation of the committee was adopted, and the law is no longer in existence. This is official, and can be thoroughly depended on. If you have any doubts, look in the new green-covered, 1915, constitution and by-laws. You won't find it there, because it is no longer in existence. Individuals or unions may now write to whom they will, but circular letters sent out to other unions are, as I understand the matter, barred from publication in any paper except an official paper, which the I. A. may (or may not) itself publish later on. I believe it is but right and just that I publish this matter, since the Moving Picture World is directly affected and, therefore, directly interested.

Several Questions.

T. Hoskins, Hancock, Michigan writes:

> Good operators being conspicuous by their absence up in this direction I would like advice on the following: (1) Are Gundlach-Manhattan 5-inch lenses the proper strength for a picture 130 inches high, 168 inches wide on a 77-foot throw? (2) What size and make of condensers would you recommend? (3) What is the proper distance between the aperture plate and condensers? (4) How far apart should the condensers be? (5) What is the proper distance between condensers and arc? We have two new Simplex machines, just installed, and use A.C. through two new Bell and Howell 110 volt, 60 cycle compensarcs. I am not an operator, but am absorbing knowledge as fast as I can, because, as I say, we have not first class men here. I see reference to your Handbook in the projection department. Kindly advise as to price and I will remit by return mail.

The second edition of the Handbook is entirely exhausted. No more Handbooks before the first of the year, I think. Cannot tell you what the price of the new book will be, but as low as we can possibly make it. As to high class operators, why, Brother Hoskins, possibly you are not paying salaries that will attract that grade of men. I am sure if you are willing to pay the money necessary to secure high class men they will be forthcoming. As to your questions. (1) Proceed as follows: first carefully measure the exact width of the aperture of your machine, using an inside calliper and a machinist's scale for the purpose. Then multiply the distance from the lens to the screen in feet by the width of the aperture in fractions of an inch, and divide this result by the width of the picture in feet. The result will be the E.F. of the lens required to project that size picture, as near as it can be figured. I could not figure the thing without knowing the exact width of your aperture, though presumably it is one of the new style, which are 29/32 of an inch wide. (2) For the length of lens you will have I would recommend one having a 2-inch opening, if you can get it. When you get your objective lens match up your condensers as per the table I am sending by mail. (3) Answered in the table. (4) 1/16 of an inch. (5) The distance will be determined by the size of spot and the necessary condenser combination.

General All Round Boost.

G. L. McCann, Enid, Oklahoma, says:

> I have been sick for the past two weeks and the projection department was one of my friends who called to see me every week, while confined to my bed; in fact it was the only friend the doctor would allow me to see. Well, I climbed out of bed just in time to get a good job under a fine manager. In fact the boys here have a fine bunch of managers to work for. The members of Local 312 put on good projection, and I might add that projection is good in Oklahoma City, where Local 380 holds sway. I was over to that metropolis a few days before I went to the hospital, and found the Oklahoma boys to be a fine bunch. My brother recently visited Sherman, Texas, and speaks very highly of the men he met there. He went to stay a week but remained three, and he is talking about going back again, for he likes the men and likes the town. I am anxious for the new Handbook when it is ready. I have the old one and its great.

Brother McCann evidently is not exactly a knocker. I like reports of this kind much better than the other, but unfortunately I know the other kind are often all too true. My compliments to the Enid and Oklahoma City men. Let the good work go on.

Omaha Universal Exchange Inspection.

A. R. D. Summerman, operator Star theater, Sioux Rapids, Iowa, says:

> Enclosed find thirty-eight patches made in the first installment of the Diamond from the Sky film received from ——— exchange, Des Moines. I think this is a very poor way for an exchange to do business. It is either a mighty poor excuse for inspection, or a kid's work—maybe a little of both. We run thirty to sixty-day Universal service, taken from Omaha, and do not receive that kind of junk. I have only made three patches in five months of this service. Have broken two sets of meniscus-bi-convex condensers in one week. Am pulling 40 amperes, 220 volts D. C., through two 220-volt rheostats hooked in multiple; Powers Six A. It is the first condensers I have broken in nine months. Could you give me the reason for the breakage? Enclosed find picture of the Star, also twenty-five perfectly good cents for a smoke—burn 'em up, old man.

STAR THEATER
SIOUX RAPIDS IA
STAR

Well, Brother Summerman, I don't smoke—doctor says I must not. I appreciate your good intention, however, and will purchase twenty-five cents worth of enjoyment in some other form. The thirty-eight patches have been referred to the head of the corporation controlling the offending exchange, with the suggestion that the manager be brought to book. The Universal exchange manager certainly is to be highly commended. If you have only made three patches in five months he is evidently sending his films out in good repair. My compliments to the gentleman; may his tribe increase. As to the condensers, if you have been using meniscus-bi-convex and they have just started to break, why there has been some condition changed. Possibly when you put in the last set they were of a focal length which brought the arc closer to the lens—just near enough to cause the breakage. I would suggest that in using high grade lenses you should by all means get an Elbert or Preddy condenser mount. They will fix the breakage proposition for you, and you ought to have one. In the picture of the Star Friend Summerman is seen just at the end of the billboard; probably the cloth in his hand signifies clean machines.

A Caller.

W. H. Jayne, New York City, dropped into the office recently on the quest of information concerning South America. Brother Jayne had an idea that South America might be a good field for the motion picture operator. I have no direct or authentic information regarding conditions in South America with relation to the moving picture operator, but, in general the report is that, while that country offers a most excellent field for the man with a bank roll, it offers a mighty poor field for the English-speaking North American who goes there with only his two good hands and a trade or profession.

While in the office Friend Jayne suggested that operators who are troubled with cuts received while inspecting films could avoid this by putting a strip of adhesive plaster ½ inch wide by 1 inch long lengthwise on the ball of the thumb, and other strips on the fingers where cuts occur. This is one of the practical little things that help. Brother Jayne also sugested that instead of using a glass in the table top with a light underneath for patching film, the same purpose is accomplished by using a cigar box with one side out and a square glass in its top, the inside of the box being lined with white paper. I cannot vouch for this, but it looks reasonable, and the brother says it works fine.

Projection in Nashville.

T. A. Denton of Jackson, Tennessee, writes from Nashville, Tenn., as follows:

> Am an operator in the Palace theater, Jackson. Recently visited Nashville and "took in" all the moving picture theaters. Here is what I found, and, Brother Richardson, what I say is real fact, and a statement of things as they are. The boys are trying very hard to get organized. They already have three theaters signed up and, I understand through one of the non-union men, are working one union man and one non-union man at the Crystal. The projection seems to be fair in most of the theaters, but in the Crystal they run Universal and Mutual program, five reels for five cents, and I must say they have the best projected picture in the city. During the entire five reels there was not a discoloration of light to be seen, and, moreover, it was one of the most brilliant pictures I have ever viewed. The house was packed to capacity, and I understand is the most popular theater in Nashville. At the Fifth Avenue theater projection was fairly good, except that the picture flickered badly. At the Strand there was a great deal of jump to the picture, and at the Electric the speed was too slow. At the Vendom theater projection was fairly good, but the picture overlapped the screen by about one foot. The local here is 626, I. A. T. S. E. I certainly do hope the boys will win out, because Nashville salaries are something awful, ranging from ten to fourteen dollars a week, and most of the operators putting on a good picture at those figures. The union men are most of them good operators.

Well, this is somewhat mixed praise, but the general verdict seems to be good, so far as projection be concerned. I wonder what the Nashville moving picture theater managers would think of the manager of some other business enterprise in which an equal amount of money is invested, the success of which depended to a large extent on the work of one man, who employed a ten-dollar-a-week-man to fill that position? Sounds rather absurd, doesn't it gentlemen? An investment of five, ten, fifteen, twenty-five or fifty thousand dollars, the income largely dependent upon the excellence of the picture upon the screen, and, in turn, the excellence of the picture dependent, to a large extent, upon the efforts of a ten-dollar-a-week man. Some class to that proposition all right. If operators' salaries in Nashville are only ten to fourteen dollars a week, I certainly join Brother Denton in hoping that the Nashville union will be able to, if necesary, force Nashville managers to increase that figure very materially—say to twice the amount, at least.

Mr. Ghost.

W. W. Cardell, manager Princess theater, Wauseon, Ohio, says:

> Of late I have been troubled with a ghost in my titles—about the first three words in each line. Have lined my screen with the machine by placing a string on the lens and drawing it tight, and it measures the same distance at either end of the screen. My shutter cuts square, but still that ghost is there. On other side of sheet find diagram of throw and position of ghost. Kindly advise me as to how I can locate the trouble.

Presumably you mean travel ghost, but you have not told me what make machine you have. It looks as if your shutter was just a little bit off. Try moving it one way slightly, and if that makes it worse, move it the other way. I cannot tell you how to do it without knowing the machine you are using.

Condenser Breakage.

Harry Fraser, Quincy, Illinois, says:

> Excuse my breaking in, but I am up against a snag, viz.: "condenser breakage." I am sure my condensers are not too tight in the mount, and watch for draughts, but still they break. Put in meniscus-bi-convex combination, and the meniscus broke within the first week. The machine is a Powers Six-A, and the condenser holder is the old style russia iron. I understand the Power Company has a new holder. How is it? Will the Preddy mount be guaranteed to stop breakage?

No, the Preddy holder is not guaranteed to stop breakage, but I think you will find it will come pretty near doing it just the same. I strongly advise its purchase. The new condenser mount of the Powers is much better than the old one. The breakage may be due to several causes. Possibly you are using a condenser combination of focal length which brings the arc a trifle too close to the lens. Possibly the ventilation in your lamphouse is stopped up, which creates excessive heat in the lamphouse, and therefore in the lens. Cannot very well tell you what the reason is without first knowing all conditions. Would suggest that you get an improved condenser holder, either an Elbert or Preddy, and examine into the other points mentioned.

"Optic Projection."

Some months ago I had occasion to review a book, "Optic Projection," by Profesor Simon Henry Gage of Cornell University and his son, Henry Phelps Gage. From a somewhat hasty runing through of its contents I was not particularly impressed with the practical value of the book, though I could see it contained many excellent things.

Recently, however, in the preparation of my new book I have had occasion to consult various authorities on different subjects, among them "Optic Projection," the Professors Gage being recognized authorities on matters optical. A more searching investigation of that work disclosed the fact that, in some instances hidden in rather technical language, hampered by the metric system of measurement, and placed in isolated groups, instead of in connected form, there is much exceedingly interesting information of decided value to the moving picture operator, and I can recommend the addition of "Optic Projection" to the library of him who wishes to study the higher end of his profession. Its cost is $3.00, and, to the operator who really wishes to learn, the book is well worth its price.

THOSE LIGHT RAY EXPERIMENTS*

Some Interesting Data Worthy of Further Study.

Part VI.

REMEMBER that this table should be considered in conjunction with remarks which have preceded it, as to working on the back focus under certain conditions.

We have the relative distances of conjugate foci and the amount of enlargement of the image of the object.

The object being the crater or source of light, and the image the spot on the aperture or the enlarged image of the crater.

Diagram A shows the points from which the distances are measured with plano convex combinations.

Diagram B shows the points from which the distances are measured with a meniscus-bi-convex combination. With the plano convex combination, X equals the distance from the crater to the curved surface of the back condenser, and Y equals the distance from the curved surface of the front condenser to the aperture.

With the meniscus biconvex combination X equals the distance from the crater to a point ⅛ of an inch in front of the convex face of the back condenser, and Y is equal to the distance from the center of the biconvex condenser to the aperture.

The essential difference between the meniscus biconvex and the plano convex is that there is less enlargement of the spot on the aperture with the former when the E F is the same in both cases.

The enlargement with both sets is equal to distance Y divided by distance, both in inches

When meniscus bi-convex condensers are substituted for plano convex we increase X by ⅛ of an inch and decrease Y by the thickness of a plano lens because the center of the bi-convex occupies the same position as the plane of the plano convex.

Example.—Plano convex X = 4, Y = 16, therefore enlargement equals 16 ÷ 4 = 4 times, so that the spot will be 4 times the diameter of the crater. Meniscus bi-convex X = 4⅛ and Y = 15, therefore the enlargement equals 15 ÷ 4⅛ = 3.83 times.

To use table No. 1, the enlargement we need will depend on the amount of amperage we use, knowing the distance Y, which is the distance the objective calls for between the condenser and the aperture, see table 2, we look for that distance under the enlargment head that we need, but we must choose it in conjunction with X, remembering that X is the distance between the crater and the condenser, plus the thickness of the lens, and that with the meniscus biconvex the enlargement will be a little less than what the table calls for, therefore the figures we need will be under a bigger enlargement. If with plano convex we needed four times enlargement, then with meniscus biconvex we could choose about 4½ times enlargement. A little examination of the tables will make this clear, and will show the advantage of using the meniscus bi-convex set where it is difficult to obtain a spot small enough and still keep the arc at proper distance from the lens.

An important point that the experiments have demonstrated is that a large diameter or aperture lens is the most suitable type of lens for use with a projector.

With reference to the difficulties that may be encountered with the large aperture lens and the revolving shutter the following facts will be of interest:

The diameter of the beam of light at its narrowest part in front of the objective is in proportion to the distances between the condenser and aperture and the equivalent focus of the objective lens. That while it is the equivalent focus of the objective lens that determines where the crossing point of the rays in front of the objective will be, changing the distance between condensers and aperture changes the diameter of the narrowest part of the beam considerably. Increasing the distance between the condensers and aperture decreases the thickness of the beam at its narrowest part, and vice versa. So that increasing the diameter of the objective lens, thereby calling for a shorter distance between condensers and aperture indirectly increases the diameter of the beam at its narrowest part; but if we increase the diameter of the objective lens without altering other conditions, the width of the beam at its narrowest point does not increase.

Diagram A.

Diagram B.

The crossing point of the beam light will hardly be discernible when the distance between condenser and aperture is short.

In this connection it is interesting to note that increasing the distance between condensers and aperture may be used to eliminate travel ghost when the shutter blade is too narrow. The effect of withdrawing the lamphouse from the machine head has the same effect on the narrowest part of the beam of light as withdrawing the arc from the condenser has on the spot at the aperture.

In conclusion: Until such times as objective lenses and condensers are brought up to our requirements the following points should be observed: Always have the crater as near as possible to the condensers, say between 3½ and 2½ inches, according to the amperage used, and always have the greatest possible distance between the condensers and aperture.

These two conditions conflict with the present apparatus in use in some cases. So it may be necessary to compromise between the two. But a compromise means loss of efficiency.

For convenience in the use of these tables the decimal equivalent for fractions are given. I believe this is at least reasonably clear—sufficiently so that the table can be readily applied by any operator.

CAUTION: In measuring the back focus of your lens be very careful that the end of your rule is PERFECTLY CLEAN, because otherwise it might leave a faint mark on the lens which would injure the definition on the screen.

These tables do not appear very imposing, but you may take it from me they represent a vast amount of labor. I would not presume to claim perfection for them. In fact I think it would be quite possible they may be subject to improvement, or even to entire revision, but I do think they are at least a good, long stroll in the right direction, and the first really intelligent step in advance, in this particular direction, since the optical projection system was first evolved. I am inclined to believe that Brother Griffiths should have used the wide diameter of the aperture instead of the narrow one, but this is a detail, and a matter which I think could be very readily set right if it can be shown that the wide diameter is the proper thing.

In closing, for the present, I wish to say that I firmly believe this to be a matter of huge importance, and I would very much like to have operators make careful test of these tables and report results. In making such a test, however, one must use a little common sense, and understand thoroughly what it is one wishes to determine. It seems to me the one most important thing to settle at this time is the matter of lens diameter best suited for different back focuses. I believe a great many operators are now losing a very considerable percentage of their light by reason of the fact that the diameter of their objective lens is too small for the condition under which it works. You will observe, too, that the smaller the diameter of the lens the further away must the condenser be from the aperture, and Table 1 will show you that under certain conditions the arc will be a great distance from the lens, thus involving excessive light loss. If you are obliged to locate the arc more than 3½ inches from the condenser in order to have a normal spot 1½ inches in diameter, and still meet the condition in Table 2, why you may instantly conclude that something is wrong, and that something can only be one of two things, viz.: wrong condenser focal length or diameter of the objective. Table 2 gives objectives up to 3 inches. Personally, I believe 2½ should be the limit. But right here another proposition enters, and that is the optical difficulties encountered by reason of the revolving shutter.

I think it is impractical to finally settle all the various points at one time. It would require an immense amount of labor and experiment, and an entirely unreasonable amount of expense. I feel it is better to put the matter out in this form, feeling perfectly assured that we have operators such as Griffiths, Armstrong, James, La Grow and hundreds of others, who are perfectly competent to and who will check up and correct any errors we have made and that we shall thus accomplish the final details without prohibitory expense.

And now one thing more before closing.

Fig. 17 is a photograph of two light rays obtained by placing a metal diaphragm, containing in its center a hole ¼ inch in diameter, against the front condenser, so that the hole comes in its center. You will observe that the light ray comes down to a fine point, and the least diameter of the ray indicates the point at which the shutter should be set. In very long and very short focal length lenses it is impossible to set the shutter at this point because in one instance it comes inside the hood of the lens barrel and in the other it is so far away that the shutter cannot reach it, and if it could it would be intermingled with the set of rays A, C, Fig. 8, carrying the aperture image, and hence the total ray should be so wide that travel ghost would inevitably result.

Fig. 17.

With regard to this latter point I suggest that operators drill a ¼ inch hole in a metal slide and place it in the carrier, whereupon the correct, or at least the best, position for the shutter can be plainly seen.

The matter contained in the foregoing article will, in carefully corrected form, be incorporated in the third edition of the Handbook.

Supplementary.

After this series was completed Brother Griffiths sent in four drawings which, I think, ought to be reproduced as a supplement. I think these drawings will go a long way toward enabling students to yet more clearly understand the action of the rays through the lens system, and it particularly seems to me that diagram 4 is of much value in showing the precise effect of spherical aberration as applied to the lens system.

Diagram 1, shows the general course of the rays through the objective from the front condenser to and beyond the crossing point in front of the objective lens. In this particular instance it shows that the image, as a whole, is crossed at the center of the objective lens. narrow to permit the image of the picture, as a whole, to be crossed at This is owing to the fact that the angle of the incident light is too a point on the first surface of the objective lens, as would be the case if the light were going in all directions from each point of the film.

SHOWING EFFECT OF SPHERICAL ABBERATION

Supplementary Diagram 4.

Diagram 4, shows the effect of spherical aberration. All these diagrams conform with the tables. In diagram 4 rays 1, 2, 3 and 4 are emerging from one point in the crater. Rays 1 and 4 suffer greater refraction than rays 2 and 3, owing to the greater angle at which they are incident upon the plane of the back condenser, therefore they focus at a point nearer to the condensers. Rays 2 and 3 being in focus at the film against focus at the screen, but rays 1 and 4 entering the film at two different points also reach the screen at their respective different points, so that the result of spherical aberration at the screen will be loss of illumination at point B with corresponding added illumination at points A and C; also it does not in any way interfere with the focusing of point B of the film on the screen. In the same way that B loses some of the illumination so will all the other points lose some of their illumination, and if B is not gaining sufficient to make up for the loss there will be a dark ghost in the center of the screen. Therefore the total effect of spherical aberration is uneven illumination of the screen and not poor definition, provided, of course, the objective be fully corrected. I think also that spherical aberration has a considerable effect on the color of the light on the screen owing to the introduction of the dispersed rays from the outer edges of the condenser being conveyed to the central portion of the spot.

Note: In studying these diagrams the student should carefully remember that the rays shown are only typical of millions of other rays which are not shown. That is the stumbling block encountered by most students who undertake to study light ray diagrams. Remember that the same thing is taking place at every infinitesimal pin point of the lens, but to show all that would make a drawing just one black smudge.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.00.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances have been demonstrated to its editor.

Getting a Job as Cameraman.

MORE THAN half of the letters which come to this department are from young men who wish to obtain jobs as cameramen, and the majority of the inquirers seem to think that there must be some magic formula like the "Open Sesame," of the old Arabian Nights Tale, which will admit them at once to a fat job with some moving picture concern. Very few of the queries seem to indicate that the writers have any idea that there is any special training or capability necessary to get such a position.

Motion picture photography is a very restricted profession.

There is a decided limit to the number of reels of film that the film market can absorb and still give a profit to the producers. The average production of usable negative is about one-thousand feet a week per cameraman, therefore, the weekly release of new pictures in reels about expresses the number of cameramen who are at present earning their living by camera work. There are about one hundred and seventy-five reels of new subjects released every week, which means that there are about two hundred men in the hundred million population of the United States who make their living by taking pictures exclusively. Of course this does not include a considerable number of persons, mostly camera owners, who make an intermittent income from odd jobs at camera work. There are several thousand workers outside of the producing and directing end whose work depends very directly upon camera production; they are the factory workers and it is, or should be, from them that the competent camera operators should be drawn. This is not written to discourage anyone who wishes to become a cameraman, it is only to give to the would-be operators a better understanding of the difficulties that they must be prepared to overcome before they decide to devote their time and energy to acquiring the rigid training necessary to the attainment of such a position.

The limited nature of the calling practically makes it impossible for any school or college to provide any course in cinematography which would give an adequate training. There are a few, a very few schools, only two, in fact, known to this department who advertise to teach motion picture camera operating, and they are commercial propositions pure and simple. They teach you just what they advertise—to operate a motion picture camera, but they do not teach anyone to become a cameraman. That can only be learned by actual experience in the studio and in the field. Unless you can afford to go and apply in person to different film factories until you get some sort of a minor position and then work up by study and application, you had better give up the idea of becoming a cameraman.

Besides these advertising schools there is a course offered by the University of Syracuse in the use of the motion picture camera. This course would probably be of great value to any young man who feels that he has the time and money to acquire the principles of his chosen profession and then go out and work his way up the same as the cub graduate in civil engineering gets out and starts in by dragging a surveyor's chain or packing a heavy transit.

If you've got the stuff in you go to it, boys, and you'll win out in the end.

Making Up for Motion Pictures.

A. Mahler, St. Louis, Mo., writes:

> I am an amateur photographer and am interested in motion picture photography and would like to know just what kind of grease paint or powder they use in the studio, that is, in color.
> I have heard that they use a light yellow powder over a pink grease paint, so I would like to know just which one is right.

There is a great deal too much make up used in motion picture studios. The primal idea of make-up in motion pictures should be the same as that of the retouching done by a good photographer in making a portrait, i. e., the removal of superficial blemishes. Since retouching the multiplicity of small pictures in a motion picture negative is practically impossible, the actor is supposed to arrive at the same result by the more direct method of retouching his face. Since the average actor is used to making up for the glare of the footlights and to bear inspection only at comparatively great distances as he is accustomed by being viewed by audiences in the theater, he is apt to forget that in motion pictures the major part of his work is done in the much stronger and differently colored light of day or in the glare of a multitude of arcs and Cooper-Hewitt's with the relentless eye of the camera only ten or fifteen feet away and often much closer. Up-to-date directors are insisting more and more that "make-up" shall be natural and not artificial. Some of the studios even put their extra people on the salary list the day they leave off shaving when they require people for "rough-neck" parts.

It requires a skilled artist, indeed, at make-up who can put on a crepe hair mustache or beard that is not palpably false, and the director who uses an actor with a bad make-up is only deceiving himself and not the public.

Below I am giving an abstract of a set of general rules for make-up which was made out for a well-known studio a short time ago, and a copy of it should be pasted in the top of every motion picture actor's make-up box:

People doubtful of their make-up should submit the same to their photographer for inspection before appearing before the camera.

As a rule too much make-up is used for natural effect.

For ordinary make-up use Stein's No. 2 grease paint over cold cream with enough flesh or brunette powder to avoid shine or varnished effect of grease and cold cream.

Unless of extraordinarily dark or light complexion or in case of skin defects such as pimples, moles, pits, freckles, or fine wrinkles, grease paint should not be used—a light application of cold cream with a slight application of powder gives the best results before the camera.

Application of grease paint: Remember that the camera records the back and profile as well as the full face and extend the make-up to the hair at the top, to below the clothing at the neck and behind the ears at the back.

Make-up of the eyes: As a rule it is not necessary to bead the eye lashes. It should practically never be done although it is sometimes advisable for persons with light lashes to darken them with black cosmetique. If you possess heavy black lashes it is not necessary to line the eyes. Others should line the eyes with a very narrow black line placed as near the lashes as possible. People with prominent eyes and plump persons should shade the orbits of the eyes very slightly with black or brown—thin persons and those with sunken eyes do not generally need shading. Unless eyebrows are very heavy and well defined it is generally advisable to touch them up with the eyebrow pencil.

The lips: Be very sparing in the use of the lip rouge. Remember that red photographs the same as black and that a heavy application of rouge gives an unnatural black mouth on the screen. Except in very rare cases do not attempt to alter the shape of the lips by the application of lip rouge. It almost invariably shows on the screen. Do not apply rouge to the cheeks, or at most, the very faintest trace.

Lining: Lining should not be resorted to except in cases where the character of the part absolutely requires it. They should be made with dark red or brown and very carefully blended. Directors should take pains to select their characters according to type whenever possible and not require people to make-up out of their type unless in cases of increasing age or effects of disease, etc., called for by the scenario.

Wigs: Wigs with wig bands coming across the forehead should never be used if it is possible to avoid it. When this is necessary take great pains in blending the band to the forehead and render the junction of band and flesh as nearly invisible as possible.

Mustaches and beards: The technique of a good beard and mustache would require more space than could be devoted to it here. Do not use curly crepe hair until you have straightened it by dampening and wrapping around a hot pipe or some other similar method. Comb out the straightened hair and build up the beard or mustache on the face a small lock at a time with the aid of good spirit gum, then trim carefully. If you do not know how to put a beard on properly get assistance from some one who does. Do not forget to use such colored hair as harmonizes with your own or the wig you are wearing.

Colors: Light blue photographs white and should never be used in motion picture make-up.

Yellow, orange, red and their combinations all photograph dark. Red and black are all the same to the camera.

Yellow blonde hair photographs dark, ash blonde photographs light—the more loosely the hair is arranged the lighter it photographs, and different methods of studio lighting also affect the photographic values of hair.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE OLD AND THE NEW (Biograph), Oct. 4.—The story of this one-reel drama is unconventional and strikes a true note of pathos. The old bookkeeper, who finds his age a heavy handicap in the eyes of the young manager of the office, is feelingly played by Edward Cecil. Isabel Rea, Kate Bruce and Curtis Cooksey complete the cast.

THINK MOTHERS (Lubin), Oct. 4.—Mary Charleson has been intrusted with the leading role in this one-reel drama and, as usual, fully justifies her position in the cast. The story illustrates the hard fact that innocence is not always a strong safeguard for a young girl. The play has many good points. Mary C. Smith, Charles Brandt, Jack Standing, Thurston Hall and Bartley McCullum deliver an excellent quality of dramatic art.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 79, 1915 (Selig), Oct. 4.—The mobilization of the N. Y. National Guard, at Van Courtlandt Park, is the most interesting feature of this number. The following items are also shown: Columbia football team at practice; hippos go into winter quarters, Central Park; three steeple-jacks race, Medford, Mass.; 300-foot tower wrecked by storm; President Wilson votes at Princeton, N. J.; victims of the submarine F-4 brought to San Francisco; N. Y. Civic Club visits Boston; scenes at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; Princess Alexander of Teck reviews troops; Belgian recruits training near Harve; M. Gilbert, French aviator, visits aeroplane works in Paris.

THE REWARD (Vitagraph), Oct. 4.—The author, producer and star of this one-reel comedy-drama is S. Rankin Drew. The plot of Mr. Drew's picture is a diverting one, and the characters and situations are strictly up-to-date.. The author-producer has wasted no time over a difference of opinion with the leading actor of the cast, but that gentleman has not taken advantage of the fact. This perfect harmony has insured a fine photoplay. Virginia Pearson, Isidore Marcile, Jay Dwiggins, Harold Foshay and Hattie De Lara ably assisted Mr. Drew.

WHITEWASHING WILLIAM (Kalem), Oct. 5.—For this slapstick comedy, the director, Rube Miller, found a number of situations certain to draw laughs. Most of his characters are ducked in a pond and, or so it appears on the screen, narrowly escape drowning.

LOVE AND SWORDS (Lubin), Oct. 5.—Broad farce is the one ingredient of this five-hundred-foot photoplay. Honus Inkwell and Mike Grapefruit are the names of rival lovers, impersonated by David L. Don and Joe Opp. They are excellent burlesque comedians and put forth their best efforts in a comic duel which closes the reel.

THE GIRL AND THE MAIL BAG (Selig), Oct. 5.—Victoria Forde gallops off with most of the honors in this one-reel drama, written by Cornelius Shea. Tom Mix is as effective as ever while in action, but Tom gets shot rather early in the story, and Miss Victoria is forced to take matters into her own hands. She is equal to every emergency and, the situations being full of interest, wins her audience completely.

BLACK EYES (Edison), Oct. 6—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1843, issue of September 11.

THE FABLE OF "THE STATESMAN WHO DID NOT MAKE GOOD" (Essanay), Oct. 6.—Harry Dunkinson comes very near being the whole thing in this one-reel Ade fable. Frankie Raymond makes everything possible out of the situations that fall to the wife, but Mr. Dunkinson dominates the picture after the manner of a Tammany ward boss on the lower east side. The Ade brand of humor, both visual and chirographic, is as refreshing as ever.

FITS AND CHILLS (Vitagraph), Oct. 6.—Originality of theme is not a predominant feature of this one-reel farce, written by C. Graham Baker. Nevertheless, both author and producer have made good use of the material and turned out fifteen minutes of continuously cheerful diversion. The character studies reflect much credit on Harry Fisher, Donald MacBride, Sig Stark, Kalman Matus and Jewell Hunt.

HER SOUL REVEALED (Biograph), Oct. 7.—The lives of the "Submerged Tenth" are treated with feeling and truth in this one-reel drama. The settings are realistic and the contrast of characters is cleverly shown. Augusta Anderson, Laura LaVarnie, Zoe Bech and Charles Perley complete an adequate cast.

SNAKEVILLE'S WEAK WOMEN (Esanay), Oct. 7.—A woman "cop," in the person of Margaret Joslin, makes it lively for all the male persons in this one-reel comedy. Although not a plea for suffrage, it foreshadows man's probable fate if woman is allowed to become his rival in this particular field of endeavor. It is all very funny on the screen, but, as a reality, may be sadly lacking in mirth. Victor Potel and Harry Todd are cast as a city chap and a bad example.

THE HONEYMOON ROLL (MinA), Oct. 7.—The underlying motive of this one-reel farce is capital, and the reel starts off most promisingly. The producer has not made the most of the material, however, and the action slows up considerably in the middle of the picture. The finish is spirited. Rena Rogers, Wm. Seiter and Constance Johnson proved expert at farce acting.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 80, 1915 (Selig), Oct. 7.—The reunion of the Grand Army, at Washington, closes this number, but leads the others in point of interest. These include F 4 submarine victims, Washington; ostrich farm, Los Angeles; new highway, Canyon City, Col.; fire at Ardmore, Okla.; winter fashions; baseball stars; training war mules, England; diving contest, Moseley, England.

OLD GOOD-FOR-NOTHIN' (Vitagraph), Oct. 7.—A James Whitcomb Riley flavor hangs around this one-reel comedy, written by Wm. Addison Lathrop. Its humor and pathos are of the country and it tells in a kindly fashion a simple little story that has a deal of human nature in it. Jay Dwiggins is rightly cast as Hiram, and Bobby Connelly makes him a good team-mate. Edwina Robbins and Thomas Mills complete the cast. George Ridgewell is an adroit producer.

BILLY'S STRATAGEM (Biograph Reissue No. 18), Oct. 8.—Further evidence that D. W. Griffith's reputation as a producer is based upon merit, this one-reel reissue has the power to chain the attention which its maker gave to most of his work. The story is of the old frontier days, and the cast contains the names of Wilfred Lucas, Claire McDowell, Edna Foster and Inez Seabury.

BRONCHO BILLY, SHEEPMAN (Esanay), Oct. 8.—The feud between the cattlemen and the sheep raisers of the west is excellent material for a photoplay. This one-reel drama contains an entertaining phase of life under such conditions, and is vigorously acted by G. M. Anderson, Lee Willard, Marguerite Clayton and others.

THE SON (Lubin), Oct. 8.—This one-reel drama is built on a strong theme. A married man, who runs after other women, is brought to realize the wrong done his wife by a plan conceived by his son. The big scene is very dramatic, and well played by Jack Standing, Octavia Handworth and Leon Kelly. Daniel Carson Goodman wrote the scenario.

MISS STICKY-MOUFIE-KISS (Vitagraph), Oct. 8.—James Montgomery Flagg, the illustrator, is responsible for this one-reel comedy, of which the titles form a very important part. The heroine, played by Mrs. Sidney Drew, uses nothing but "baby talk," and her unhappy husband is forced to wade into the ocean and never return. Sidney Drew's picture of comic despair, as he disappears beneath the briny is a masterpiece of pantomime art. A greater variety of situations would have improved the play.

THE WATER TANK PLOT (Kalem), Oct. 9.—Among the recent "Hazards of Helen" there is none that surpasses "The Water Tank Plot" in point of thrills. Helen Holmes climbs high on the trestle of a bridge, swings herself from a water tank into a moving engine and engages in a spirited combat with the men who plan to poison a carload of race horses. An excellent picture in story and treatment.

BOB'S LOVE AFFAIRS (Biograph), Oct. 9.—In this one-reel comedy, Alan Hale proposes to four different women—the first one at the age of ten. The situations are amusing and make a bright and spirited little play. Mr. Hale's quartet of charmers is acted by Madge Kirby, Helen Bray, Ilean Hume and Nell Dawkins.

THE MANUFACTURE OF COIN (Edison), Oct. 9.—This reel was made at the United States Mint, Philadelphia, by permission of the Treasury Department. The different processes in the manufacture of gold pieces are shown, and are very instructive and interesting.

THINK OF THE MONEY (Lubin), Oct. 9.—The popular appeal in the title of this one-reel comedy, by Epes W. Sargent, extends to the photoplay itself. The subject matter is not new, but the interest in the struggle for a fortune and the comic devices resorted to by the warring heirs, make the picture an excellent medium for Billie Reeves, Mae Hotely and their associates.

THE TIGER SLAYER (Selig), Oct. 9.—Emma Bell's scenario for this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama has an entertaining plot, and the local color has been carefully reproduced in the picture. Al W. Filson, Earle Foxe, George Larkin, C. B. Murphy, Earnest Evers and Fritizi Brunete comprise the cast.

General Film Company Specials.

TIDES THAT MEET (Essanay), Oct. 4.—Lovers of the romantic tales of Dumas will find much of the same spirit of adventure and zest of life in this three-reel drama of Clinton Dangerfield's, with its scenes laid in the Mexico of to-day. A new danger lurks in every fifty feet of film, and the hero gets the upperhand, only to again find himself in the power of his enemies, with delightfully thrilling frequency. Bryant Washburn makes a captivating figure of the young American engineer, and Edmund F. Cobb, aside from other good work, contributes a wonderful stage fall.

THE FASHION SHOP (George Klein), Oct. 4.—Ethel Grandin is the star of this two-reel drama, which tells a moving tale of a young wife's struggle to help an invalid husband. Miss Grandin acts with sincerity and understanding, and wears a number of becoming gowns. She is well supported by the other members of the cast, and the photoplay does credit to its producer.

THE PRETENDERS (Kalem—"Broadway Favorites"—Four Reels), Oct. 4.—A good farce offering. The opening reel is slow; but the backbone of the picture is eminently worth while, and we can recommend it to exhibitors as film that will satisfy the discriminating. Reviewed at length on page 2008, issue of September 18, 1915.

A SULTANA OF THE DESERT (Selig), Oct. 4.—One of the most famous of Balzac's short stories is "A Passion in the Desert." In this tale, a lioness becomes atached to a French soldier and shares her cave with him. Very nearly the same situation occurs in this two-reel drama, written by Kathlyn Williams, who also plays the principal role, that of a French girl, who is lost on the desert and makes friends with a lion. The picture is ultra-romantic and Miss William's scenes with the lion speak volumes for her nerve control. The acting of the entire cast and the production of the picture are first class.

THE OLD SIN (Essanay), Oct. 5.—Strength of motif is not lacking in this three-reel drama of modern life, written by H. Tipton Stack. The attempted ruin of a young girl forms the main situation of the story. The subject is skilfully handled and earnestly acted by a cast which includes June Keith, John Lorenz, Hugh E. Thompson, John H. Cossar and J. N. Spence.

BARRIERS OF PREJUDICE (Vitagraph), Oct. 5.—Once again the tiny hands of a baby unite its parents, after misunderstanding and deceit have separated them. The theme of this two-reel drama is not new, but it is very human, and Ulysses Davis has produced it amid picturesque surroundings and brought out all that is best in the situations. The acting of the cast is uniformly efficient, the leading parts being taken by Anne Schaeffer, Carleton Weatherby, Marguerite Reid and Mrs. Jay Hunt.

THE MAN IN IRONS (Kalem), Oct. 6.—The twelfth "Mystery of the Grand Hotel" is an ingenious story of counterfeiters, produced in two reels by James W. Horne, from a scenario by Hamilton Smith. The element of suspense is cleverly maintained and the scenes, especially in the second reel, are thoroughly dramatic. Marin Sais gives a capital performance as the woman confederate of the counterfeiters. Others in the cast are True Boardman and Ollie Kirkly. A review of this subject can be found on page 282 in the issue of October 9.

JIM WEST, GAMBLER (Lubin), Oct. 6.—A three-reel drama, written by Wilbert Melville, in which Melvin Mayo, L. C. Shumway, Dorothy Barrett and Helen Eddy have the leading roles. The story is powerful and full of human interest. The acting of the entire cast is excellent. A review of the picture appeared in last week's issue on page 463.

THE BRIDGE OF TIME (Essanay), Oct. 7.—The author of "The Diamond from the Sky" is credited with writing this three-reel drama. Mr. McCardell's effort has many pronounced merits. The story covers a wide field of action and deals skillfully and interestingly with two distantly-connected periods of time—the days of Queen Elizabeth and the present. Harry Mestayer, Guy Oliver, Virginia Kirtley, Bert Garsby, Wm. Sheerer and Eugenie Besserer have been carefully rehearsed by the director, Frank Beal.

THE TELEGRAPHER'S PERIL (Lubin), Oct. 7.—Sensation abounds in this two-reel drama, written and produced by George W. Terwilliger. With his easy command of the art of putting life and movement into a photoplay, the author has experienced little difficulty in giving his story a full supply of melodramatic thrills. The picture recalls "The Limited Mail" and other record-breakers of a past decade, when sensational scenic dramas held the boards of the popular price circuit. Ormi Hawley, Kempton Greene, Earl Metcalf and Herbert Fortier sustain the leading roles.

AN UNWILLING THIEF (Edison), Oct. 8.—A stolen child is the central figure in this three-reel drama, written by Mary Imlay Taylor. The photoplay does not belong to a high order of work, but will find admirers among screen patrons who prefer heart interest and the happy ending. The story is well told on the screen, Langdon West having directed the production. Leonie Fulgarth, Herbert Prior, Lawrence White, Yale Banner, Harry Eytinge and Lillian Devere have the important allotments on the program.

SUPPRESSED EVIDENCE (Essanay), Oct. 9.—In order to prevent his daughter from learning of her mother's disgrace, the man in this two-reel drama goes to jail for fifteen years. There is a reconciliation at the finish, and all the scenes are strongly emotional. G. M. Anderson, Marguerite Clayton, Lee Willard, Leona Anderson and Ella McKenzie give the picture the stamp of reality.

YOUTH (Vitagraph), Oct. 9.—The work of the producer and the members of the cast lift a rather commonplace story into the ranks of the best class of three-reel photoplays. Lanier Bartlett's scenario contains no great sitaution or lesson from life, but admits of some graceful posing and a series of beautiful scenes. Mlle. Valkyrien is fair to look upon and possesses much charm of manner. While posing for the sculptor, she seems the embodiment of Youth. Antonio Moreno, Frankie Mann and Donald Hall complete the cast. Harry Handsworth made the production.

Metro Pictures Corporation

EMMY OF STORK'S NEST (Columbia), Oct. 11.—Mary Miles Minter gives a performance of much charm in this five-part Columbia-Metro adaptation of J. Breckenridge Ellis's novel. It is a well produced picture, reviewed on page 461 of the issue of October 16.

Mutual Film Corporation.

A CORNER IN CATS (Casino), Oct. 10.—Cissy Fitzgerald and her accomplice invade a small town, where they pick pockets and work other confidence games. They finally buy up all the cats and then release a box of rats, which enables them to sell the cats at a high figure. This is handled in burlesque style and proves quite entertaining.

CAPERS OF COLLEGE CHAPS (Falstaff), Oct. 11.—A comedy number of the better type, in which two stranded college boys, members of a glee club, sing and play in a wine room for an evening. When one of them marries he is surprised to receive a visit from the bartender, with a present of flowers. The bride is also surprised, but her anger is appeased when she learns the truth. A good number.

MISS TRILLIE'S BIG FEET (Novelty), Oct. 11.—This number presents a broad burlesque on "Trilby," the action being of an eccentric, knockabout sort. Persons familiar with the story will find a good deal of amusement in this.

BING BANG BROTHERS (Falstaff), Oct. 14.—There is a good deal of quiet amusement in this story of two "Sure Fire Comedians," who finally succeed in making the crusty old manager give them a contract. Their efforts to create laughter are finally successful.

AIDED BY THE MOVIES (Beauty), Oct. 16.—A comedy, in which John Steppling plays the role of the father who is outdone by a youthful pair, by having a real wedding ceremony performed on the lawn in front of the house, pretending that it is for a moving picture. The director, cameraman, etc., are there, and the deception is worked out to the finish, when father, discovering the joke that has been played on him, is forced to be reasonable.

JOHN T. ROCKS AND THE "FLIVVER," (Thanhouser), Oct. 17.—A pleasing comedy, in which a young man induces the richest man in the world to ride in a "Flivver" car. He is aided by the girl, whose hand he claims as a reward. This is light and pleasing throughout.

BUSTED BUT BENEVOLENT (Falstaff), Oct. 18.—A cômedy number, in which two young men get into debt at a summer hotel, and in a ruse to tide the matter over successfully, namely pretending to commit suicide by drowning, they are robbed of their last remaining money, which is put in the pool for a reward for the pair of hobos who have rescued them.

ALIAS JAMES, CHAUFFEUR (Beauty), Oct. 19.—This is an interesting comedy number, in which a young woman, out of curiosity with regard to a young man who has attracted attention among the feminine part of the population, disguises as a man and substitutes for his chauffeur, who pretends to be ill just to give her the opportunity that she is looking for. She falls in love with him, and afterward finds that he is a widower with one child. The plot has been worked out very prettily, with Neva Gerber in the feminine lead.

THE LITTLE DETECTIVE (Cub), Oct. 21.—One of the George Ovey comedies, in which he wins the girl by playing detective, and saving the house from burglars. The father is hereby forced to acknowledge the rare courage of his future son-in-law. This is an acceptable farce comedy.

HATTIE, THE HAIR HEIRESS (Falstaff), Oct. 21.—The coming of the wealthy girl, who has inherited a fortune from her father's hair tonic, to a small town causes great rivalry for her hand. Her suitors all grow heavy hair and beards by use of the tonic in order to win her, but she finally weds a bald-headed man, whose hair will not respond to the treatment. This is an amusing idea and works out in quite a pleasing way.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

RHODA'S BURGLAR (Centaur), Oct. 7.—A two-reel production of more than the ordinary interest. The production has been produced with good taste in many ways. A woman leaves her husband to go with a man of bad moral character. She takes with her her little girl, who grows to young womanhood, only to be forced to become betrothed to a man whom she despises. Her own father, down and out, enters the house intending to rob it, and is met by Rhoda, his daughter. The close of the story presents a happy reunion.

BREEZY BILL—OUTCAST (Mustang), Oct. 8.—Jack Richardson is again seen in his old character part of villain in this two-part production. Helene Rosson plays opposite him as the masked rider. The story is an interesting one and in a way pathetic. The bandit, having stolen the child of his wayward wife, has hidden away in the hills, and has avenged himself on the wife by making of her child a robber against her will. The story works itself into a love story in the end, when the girl is rescued by a man whom she has previously refused to shoot on one of their roundups.

THE QUEEN OF THE BAND (Reliance), Oct. 10.—This is an interesting two-reel crook story with Marguerite Marsh, Adoni Fovieri, George Walsh and other competent players in the cast. The story is prettily set, and centers particularly around the theft of a diamond from a jewelry store. The diamond is smuggled into a locket which is afterward bought by one of the gang. This picture will interest the average audience.

STANLEY'S CLOSE CALL (Centaur), Oct. 14.—Mona Darkfeather plays the feminine lead in this two-reel animal drama, which takes us into the wilds of Africa, or supposedly so. The young woman of the story follows her lover thither, and is rescued from a tribe of cannibals by the Stanley party. The production is of moderate interest, as far as the story goes, but is above the average in animal acting; elephants, lions and leopards doing more than is expected of these wild beasts by way of picture acting.

THE BRINK (Mutual Masterpicture—American) (No. 42), Oct. 14.—A four-part melodrama featuring Forrest Winant. Opposite him plays Rhea Mitchell in a role that suits her charming personality well. The story treats of the association of a young man with a gang of burglars, having fallen into the power of the head of the gang through an attempt to right his financial difficulties. The scenes at the burglar's headquarters are fraught with mystery, and follow quite closely the lines of old-fashioned melodrama with up-to-date devices thrown in. Any audience will be pleased with this production. It is a good one of its kind.

THE LONG ARM OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Than-o-Play), Oct. 16.—A three-reel melodrama, with Kathryn Adams, Wayne Acry, Morgan Jones and Robert Whittier in the cast. The production is a fairly interesting one, and reflects considerable credit on producer and players. There are a number of attractive motorboat scenes. An opium smuggling incident forms part of the foundation of the story.

THE BLOT ON THE SHIELD (American), Oct. 18.—A two-reel number that is to be commended. Its close does, however, rather spoil the good impression left by the first part of the picture, inasmuch as that most of the melodramatic efforts are gotten out of the giving of a revolver by the father to the daughter, and leaving her to believe that he intends that she should kill herself as a means of saving the family name. Vivian Rich plays the feminine lead in a charming manner. With the exception of the point mentioned above, the production is a very attractive one.

THE SPIRIT OF AUDUBON (Thanhouser), Oct. 19.—A fine two-reel number, with an educational, or nature study, value. It features some splendid pictures of wild birds in their native haunts, taken by Herbert K. Job in the interests of the Audubon societies. There is a slight plot worked into this, in which the spirit of Audubon conducts two children to the homes of the pelican, tern, laughing gulls, ibises and other birds. Views of ex-President Roosevelt on a trip in Florida are also included. A good offering.

North American Film Corporation.

THE MAD MILLIONAIRE (American), Oct. 11.—Chapter XXIV of "The Diamond from the Sky." Taken altogether, this is one of the best numbers in this series. The views at the costume fete are all very attractive. John Powell, mounted on his horse in the ball room, tells the dramatic story of the diamond and how it came into the possession of the Stanleys. Many of the incidents shown in the first number are repeated here, but they gain a new interest from subsequent events. Esther, who has attended the fete, denounces Powell, whom she recognizes as Arthur, and throws the diamond out of the window. Once more it falls into the possession of an unknown hand.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 78, 1915 (Pathe), Sept. 29.—Interesting items of this issue are the review of troops at Van Courtlandt Park, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Murphy (hippopotamus) taking up their winter quarters at the zoo; University of Pittsburgh football squad preparing for the season; photos by E. A. Hoag of scenes of anarchy in Mexico, and John D. Rockefeller visiting families of his employees.

THE ALTAR OF HEAVEN (Globe), Oct. 9.—An exceedingly interesting subject showing one of the most beautiful and original examples of Chinese architecture in existence. "The Altar of Heaven," where the Chinese emperors used to worship, has no sign of life about it but an occasional shepherd herding his flocks.

PICTURESQUE ZEELAND, HOLLAND (Photocolor), Oct. 9.—This is a beautiful and interesting series of views descriptive of life in picturesque Holland. Many quaint scenes and costumes are to be seen in the picture.

WHEN MICE MAKE MERRY (Pathe), Oct. 11.—A Bray animated cartoon of the most amusing kind. This is really one of the funniest of the Bray cartoons. The cat after the mice gets more than is coming to her, and the finale of the picture shows one of the mice disappearing into the open mouth of a sleeping negro woman.

WILFUL WALLOPS FOR WEALTH (Starlight), Oct. 16.—Heine and Louie in their pursuit of the good things of life do some funny turns in this film which concludes with the expulsion of the pair in the usual disgraceful manner. A very acceptable comedy of the farce comedy class.

FATTY'S FATAL FUN (Starlight), Oct. 23.—This is an amusing farce comedy in which Fatty has the tables turned on him, and passes through some remarkably strenuous times trying to be present at his own wedding ceremony.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE PERILS OF TEMPTATION (Balboa), Oct. 11.—An interesting and well-produced picture of four reels with Jackie Saunders in the feminine lead. In some places there is evidence of carelessness in construction, or, more properly speaking, in the story's development. For instance, we are obliged to surmise that the young girl of the department store has become either the companion or secretary of the older woman into whose parcel she has slipped the stolen necklace, and to whom she later unburdens herself.

JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR (Gold Rooster Plays—Frohman), Oct. 15.—A forceful five-reel production, in which a few technical errors mar to a very small extent the effect of the whole. C. Aubrey Smith plays the title role, and Mary Lawton the feminine lead. Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 463, issue of Oct. 16.

COUNSEL FOR THE DEFENCE (Bolboa), Oct. 18.—A four-reel production which is interesting in spite of the fact that it contains a rather improbable situation. An attorney who helps a man to escape his sentence by hiding the jewels he has stolen and burning the clothes the prisoner has thrown among some bushes at the time of his arrest, later makes a wedding present to his wife of a necklace made from some of the stolen pearls. The bride, in a tussle with the burglar who enters the house on the eve of the marriage, falls dead.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 187 (Universal), Oct. 6.—An unusually pleasing review of the G. A. R. reunion in Washington, D. C.; opening of a Brooklyn playground; recruiting in England and other war scenes. Prominent visitors at Universal City are also shown.

NO BABIES ALLOWED (Joker), Oct. 9.—An Allen Curtis number, featuring Melbourne Morante, Gale Henry, Max Asher and Wm. Franey. This is a good comedy number of the burlesque type. The baby mix-up is very funny and should bring much laughter.

A MILLIONAIRE FOR A MINUTE (Joker), Oct. 16.—Max Asher, Gale Henry and Wm. Franey appear in this characteristic number. The burlesque action gets up considerable amusement in places. It tells the story of how Eziekel inherits a fortune from his uncle in India. A very fair offering of the type.

THE VENGEANCE OF GUIDO (Powers), Oct. 16.—This number features Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn. The vineyard scenes are attractive. The scene in which the girl restrains Guido from burning her admirer's hand could have been made more dramatic. The number as a whole is one of average strength.

DOES FLIRTING PAY? (L-KO), Oct. 17.—Harry and Mrs. Gibbon appear in this number, he as a male flirt. The restaurant scenes contain some amusement of a distinctly low comedy sort. The reel closes with a rough house in the eating place.

A ONE-CYLINDER COURTSHIP (Nestor), Oct. 18.—An Al E. Christie number, featuring Ray Gallegher, Billie Rhodes and Neal Burns. Ray appears as a country boy, who purchases a one-cylinder auto in order to stand in with the girl. He wins her only after overcoming difficult competition. This is well-pictured and amusing.

LON OF LONE MOUNTAIN (Rex), Oct. 19.—An unusually pleasing mountain story, by Ida May Park. Lon Chaney, Arthur Shirley and Marcia Moore are featured. The types are good and the atmosphere unusually pleasing. The mountain lover saves his school teacher rival and then wins the girl himself. A good release.

ALMOST A KNOCKOUT (Nestor), Oct. 22.—One of Al Christie's comedies. It will make entertainment. Lee Moran is seen in his old-time and popular role of the janitor. Eddie Lyons and Jane Waller are the man and wife into whose misunderstandings the janitor is brought to his great distress.

THE MAGIC BON-BONS (Victor), Oct. 22.—Featuring Violet MacMillan in another dream story with an amusing idea in it. The photography is not of the best in numerous scenes. The plot itself is half fairy tale and will appeal to children.

A PURE GOLD PARTNER (Powers), Oct. 23.—A number by Harvey Gates, featuring Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Val Paul. The story concerns two prospectors, one of them being the girl's brother. The latter dies suddenly and a ne'er-do-well tries to assume his place and lays claim to his gold. But the dead man's partner prevents the deception. The number is well constructed and makes a good western release.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

A SHRIEK IN THE NIGHT (Victor), Sept. 15.—A two-reel romantic number, written and produced by Jacques Jaccard, with Warren Kerrigan and Helen Leslie in the leading roles. This tells of a young man urged by his father to give up his own sweetheart and pay court to a girl for business reasons. He almost consents to this, but goes to the rescue of his own sweetheart when a designing fellow tries to wrong her. He marries her at once and then finds she is, after all, the girl his father wanted him to marry. This is nicely put on and has a good pull on the interest throughout.

THE BROKEN COIN (Universal Special), Oct. 11.—Instalment No. 17. Kitty finds herself a captive on the vessel, with Roleaux bound in a piece of canvas beside her. Count Frederick boards the vessel in search of her. Some fighting ensues, during which the vessel takes fire and is consumed, the principals, of course, escaping. Count Sachio is seen making overtures to King Michael. The coin does not appear in this number. There are no very stirring scenes in this.

THE CAMPBELLS ARE COMING (Broadway Universal Feature), Oct. 18.—A four-reel picture filled with exciting dash and fierce fighting. The close-ups of the struggle between the Sepoys of the rebellion and the English garrison of the beleaguered city of Lucknow are particularly tense. The love story is of the slightest. It is a picture that will be amply acceptable to the average spectator and will be extra pleasing to Canadian and English people at this time. Such offerings are wanted. The photography is acceptable. The picture was reviewed at length by Robert C. McElravy in the issue of May 29, 1915, page 1439. The former review credited it to the "Gold Seal" brand. It is to be issued as a Broadway Universal Feature.

THE FAIR GOD OF SUN ISLAND (Gold Seal), Oct. 19.—A three-reel story by James Dayton with an imaginative touch in it worthy of H. Rider Haggard. The hero is thrown upon an island in a ship wreck and lives as a cave man for a year or more. Then the sun-worshipping natives come. He saves the girl whose life is about to be sacrificed. Later he brings her to civilization, but she comes to a tragic end. The villainy of the captain and mate are additional plot features. A good adventure story, which holds the interest well. Herbert Rawlinson, Louise Hamilton and others are in the cast.

ROOM AND BOARD, $1.50 (L-KO), Oct. 20.—This features Billie Ritchie, Alice Howell and Louise Orth in two reels of eccentric comedy. The photography is very good throughout, the settings clean and attractive and the incidents quite amusing for this type of low comedy. Billie appears as a henpecked husband. His wife flirts with another and he determines to drown himself. He is saved from this by a lady hypnotist and later becomes her assistant. He soon has a chance to revenge himself upon his unfaithful wife and her friend. This contains some laughable moments.

THE GREATER COURAGE (Big "U"), Oct. 21).—A western number in two reels, featuring Jane Novak and Roy Stewart. The leading characters are appealing, but the story itself is weak in construction and lacks dramatic interest. The plot tells of the way in which a rough young miner befriends a girl whose brother has gambled away his fortune. The miner marries the girl, but treats her brutally until certain later developments arouse real love for her. The production is one of only average interest.

THE MEDDLER (Imp), Oct. 22.—A two-reel number of only fair strength, covering a space of more than twenty-five years in time. Ogden, who loves Ward's wife, leaves for South Africa in order to forget the attachment. When he returns the wife is dead, but the husband and son are living, the latter a grown man. Ogden aids the son, who later refuses to betray his office secrets. Ogden at first opposes young Ward's attachment to an actress, but later approves of it. The story has a good foundation but does not develop strongly enough, in spite of the proficent cast.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH (Bison), Oct. 23.—A three-reel thriller, with Marie Walcamp, C. E. Horn and George Cummings in the cast. This is a fine offering of the sensational type and Miss Walcamp performs some daring feats. She and her brother are employed as operators by a railroad company. The brother falls into bad company and, in spite of her efforts to save him, later conspires with his gang to rob the express car. This arrangement is carried through in a daring way, but the girl learns of it and some stirring scenes are pictured in recovering the stolen money and rounding up the gang. The photography is very good throughout.

World Film Corporation.

THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE (Equitable-Triumph), Sept. 27.—A five-part sentimental melodrama in which Julius Steger is starred. The story possesses little novelty, but is presented in an interesting fashion. A review may be found on page 461 of the issue of October 16th.

THE PRICE (Equitable), Oct. 4.—As in the original stage production of this drama, Helen Ware plays the leading role. She acts with sincere feeling in a picture of good quality, reviewed on page 462 of the issue of October 16th.

THE FAMILY CUPBOARD (Brady), Oct. 10.—In this very well presented version of a successful stage drama, the leading role is played by Holbrook Blinn, who is given excellent support by Frances Nelson. A review may be found on page 465 of the issue of October 16th.

BLUE GRASS (Equitable), Oct. 11.—In addition to the humorous performance of Thomas Wise, this picture has an interesting feature in the horse racing scenes. It is altogether a very acceptable five-part production, reviewed on page 462 of the issue of October 16th.

HEART OF THE BLUE RIDGE (Shubert), Oct. 18.—Clara Zimball Young gives a capital characterization in this five-part production of a story of moonshiners written by Waldron Baily. The plot possesses little novelty, but it is made interesting by reason of the exciting action and the able acting of Miss Young and those in her support, including Chester Barnett and Robert Cummings. James Young directed the picture.

Associated Film Sales Corporation.

TOO MUCH ELIXIR OF LIFE (Alhambra), Oct. 11.—Rather a good number with a farce comedy situation. Allan Fralick is a familiar figure among the players, all of whom do acceptable work. The story is centered around the wooing of a girl whose father, a scientist, objects to the man she wants to marry, on the grounds that he has accomplished nothing. The young man seeing a drunken man on the beach, wraps him up in canvas and shows him to the scientist as a wonderful discovery he has made. Had the entire production been treated as a farce comedy the effect would have been better.

NOLAN'S WOOING (Liberty), Oct. 11.—Otis Thayer helps materially in making this picture an excellent sample of legitimate comedy. The story presents a situation of real humor, and as presented in the film is sure of a laugh anywhere. Nolan's wooing holds at least one disastrous situation, namely, when he takes his lady love out driving behind a horse that was sold to him for a "quiet" one. Otis Thayer has directed the picture as well as playing the masculine lead.

JOE'S DEVOTION (Navajo), Oct. 11.—Here is an excellent sample of the western drama. In it a full-blooded Mexican excites considerable admiration for his manner of portraying the character of the villain. The story is that of the love of two men for the same girl. The Mexican's revenge for a trifling rebuff previously dealt to him provided for some interesting work.

Associated Film Sales Corp. Specials

A MOVIE NUT (Banner), Oct. 11.—This is a two-part comedy in which a dream proves a medium for various amusing situations. The man who longs to be a moving picture comedian dreams that he is a replica of Charlie Chaplin in appearance, but without this comedian's talent the dream figure gets into difficulties. This picture is one that is suited to the average audience.

THE HIGHEST BIDDER (Empire), Oct. 11.—This is a nicely produced drama, bordering on melodrama, its greatest fault lying in the quality of the photography. The story treats of how an unscrupulous employee tried to gain control of the estate of a rich man, whose only daughter was unable to cope with the villain and his accomplice. The situation is saved by the man whom the girl afterward marries. Some very pretty locations have been chosen as backgrounds, and a number of charmingly old-fashioned scenes have been introduced.

THE BLIND MUSIC MASTER (Santa Barbara), Oct. 11.—A two-part melodrama in which some clever work appears. Lee Hill plays the role of the blind music master who falls in love with an actress who lives on the same floor. One night he makes a discovery when he hears a drunken man leaving her apartment, and in his fury at the incident he falls, strikes his head on some furniture and thereby recovers his sight. Being able to see the woman whose soft hands he had learned to love, he turns from her to another woman whose hands are hard from work, but whose face is alight with an inner beauty. The most serious fault to be found with the production is its over-melodramatic development.

Miscellaneous Specials.

SIN (Fox), Oct. 4.—Theda Bara has an emotionally effective role in a story of Italian characters and temperament, produced by Herbert Brenon. A review may be found on page 465 of the issue of October 16th.

FLAME OF PASSION (Picture Playhouse, October).—A fairly entertaining drama produced by Tom Terriss and his company in Jamaica. The locations are unusual and attractive and the story possesses some scenes of dramatic force. Mr. Terriss plays the principal role, assisted by Elaine Terriss, Lionel Pape, Rienzi de Cordova, Alfred Hemming and others.

LESSEY JOINS EASTERN FILM.

IN ANNOUNCING the acquisition to its producing staff of George Lessey, formerly of Edison and Universal, the Eastern Film Corporation, of Providence, R. I., makes the statement that Mr. Lessey will handle the five-part dramatic productions of the company and specialize in stories containing spectacular effects and large casts.

George Lessey.

Mr. Lessey has had a long and varied career as actor and producer, and for many years was managing producer for some of the leading stock companies of the country. Four years ago he joined Edison as one of their producers, and after two years of solid success with that company, was induced to contract with the Universal under a large salary to direct the world famous star, King Baggot. At the expiration of the contract, recently, there was keen bidding among the foremost producers of the country for Mr. Lessey's services, and the Eastern Film Corporation has secured him at an almost prohibitive salary for a number of years to handle their big feature spectacles.

METRO TO PRODUCE "THE YELLOW DOVE."

"The Yellow Dove," a big novel which is the latest from the pen of George Gibbs, and which is to be published by D. Appleton & Company during the present month, has been accepted from the manuscript by the Metro Pictures Corporation for production on the screen, and Francis X. Bushman will be the star.

The story is one of international politics concerning the present European situation, in which the hero plays the difficult role of a spy. The story, while dealing with circumstances surrounding the war, is not a war picture.

A CLOSE CALL IN "THE VENTURES OF MARGUERITE."

One of the players in the company which is at work on the episodes of "The Ventures of Marguerite," the new Kalem series featuring Marguerite Courtot, will never again be able to find anything particularly romantic about a mill wheel. This player was taking part in Episode No. 2, which was being filmed at Greenbrook, N. J., when he fell into a stream at a point just above a mill. But for the fact that one of the millhands saw the man's danger and stopped the wheel in the nick of time, the accident would have ended in a tragedy.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IF THE thousands of people in New York State identified with the motion picture interests do not go to the polls on November 2nd and give the Constitutional Amendment a swat under the chin, they will slap in the face those who have been indefatigable workers for the welfare of the business. and allow to pass the best opportunity to show that the motion picture people have become a factor not to be overlooked when strength at the polls is to be calculated. Every manufacturer, exhibitor, exchange man, operator, and all others engaged in the motion picture business and all its branches, of the age and other qualifications to vote should be at the polls on election day and get in their votes against the creation of the band of men who smothered in committee a measure bearing upon a vital constitutional right of the motion picture trade. Meantime they should do everything in their power to get clearly before their friends and patrons the issue the motion picture people have against the proposed amendment. Those who have not followed up the work of the constitutional convention and efforts of the picture people at its sessions should be sought and enlightened. It is both a remarkable and lamentable fact that such issues as amendments to constitutions are the least understood by a great mass of the people who go to the polls on election day. Some claim lack of time has prevented them from studying the subject. Others say the questions at issue are too intricate. For this reason they go to the polls and vote only for the candidates, leaving the "dry questions," as they frequently term them, to the voters who better understand them. These are the people that are to be sought and educated.

And there are other people the motion picture electioneers must have a heart to heart talk with. They are those who feel they would like to help the picture people, but hesitate to kill the whole amendment in doing so. Their argument is against favoring few to the detriment of many. This is a very laudable principle, but it is not involved in the constitutional measure now before the people. The press is almost unanimous in its condemnation of the mass of misfit legislation presented to the people by the constitutional convention at Albany. All the labor organizations in the State are against it, and one of the strongest arguments in support of the motion picture people's fight against the amendments is furnished by a letter issued by the Executive Council of the State Federation of Labor. Among the thirteen reasons given in that letter for negatively voting on the revised Constitution is one stating that the measure denies the prayer of labor's memorial that the writ of habeas corpus shall never be suspended. Another reason given is that the constitutional convention refused to make a plain and clear definition of freedom of speech and freedom of the press, thus leaving them to court decision in the future as in the past.

While both these reasons given by the State Federation of Labor are in accord with the contentions of the motion picture people, because there are labor organizations among them, the chief arraignment of the constitutional convention and its deformed creation is based on the question of freedom of thought and speech. Learned men of high standing in the legal, journalistic and other fields went before the congress of fossils at Albany and pleaded with them to embody in the proposed revised constitution a measure according them the same freedom as the press. The petition was referred to committee and killed there.

In view of the almost universal protest against the whole work of the Albany tinkers, and consistently with their fight for that liberty enjoyed by the press, the picture men are justified in demanding that the revision be killed at the polls. If there are any good features in the proposed revision they are very few, and the advocates of the measure have thus far refrained from attempting to publicly explain them. Having but few virtues the amendment is not one that should prevail at the polls and the motion picture people should exert their full power to postpone amending the constitution until a measure based upon reason, justice and impartiality can be framed and presented for the people's vote.

Some crank has written to a newspaper asking why the authorities allow the exhibition of moving pictures depicting scenes of the war in Europe. He says they only tend to unfavorably work upon the emotions of people. This writer has in his makeup the same material that is embodied in the censorship agitator. There can be no honest complaint against such exhibitions if the pictures are genuine. Their exhibition are as proper and legitimate as the illustrations that are appearing in the newspapers and magazines and the authorities cannot consistently prevent the publication of the pictures by motion picture exhibitors and allow the other publications full rein. In attempting to stir up the authorities against the war moving pictures, the crank only adds strength to the argument of the moving picture people against official censorship and discrimination between moving pictures and the press on freedom of speech and thought.

People having money for investment are warned against the use that certain schemers are making of a recent decision by a United States Court in a case that has been pending for several years on questions bearing upon the restriction of trade. Efforts are being made to convince investors that the decision has opened a wide and profitable field in the motion picture business. The truth is that conditions for investment are not as good today as they were when the suits were first brought and during the years immediately succeeding that event. The explanation for this seemingly paradoxical situation is that since the instigation of the suits affected by the decision recently made, an open market has become established in the motion picture field, so that from a standpoint of trade conditions and opportunity for investment there is absolutely no advantage offered by the court's decision. Schemers who try to convince would-be investors otherwise should be looked upon and treated exactly as the people were who went about the country exploiting "salted mines." The only difference is that the former present a little stronger color of legitimacy, but the results must be the same. Everybody connected with the motion picture business knows that the field for producers is taxed to its capacity and should a large percentage drop out there would still be enough left to keep the exhibitors comfortably supplied with new material. Only last week a company in this city went into bankruptcy with liabilities amounting to $1,004,744. It would be far better for those uninitiated in the motion picture business to invest their money in the cabarets that the war has opened in Wall Street. They would at least know where their money went, a consolation they would not have if they gave the money to the sharps and sharks who are trying to make bait out of the recent court decision. If millions are being made in the motion picture field it is because the successful companies are in the hands of men who are profiting by years of experience and hard work, and not because they have had ample funds at hand for investment. The motion picture business is legitimate and must be conducted upon the same principles upon which all other undertakings based upon intelligence, honesty of purpose, and untiring zeal are founded. Although but a short time out of its infancy it is by no means a virgin field, and there is nothing in sight to justify a suspicion that it is likely to become one. There are opportunities for investment, but only through legitimate sources should such investments be made. Any scheme which involves propositions to bring about something which those in the field have overlooked or failed to discover is not what might be called legitimate because it is not laid out along the lines of fact. What the men already in the business have not made use of, or are not hard at work preparing to put into operation, will fall far short of bringing a fortune, or even a reasonable return, to the "come-on," as the old green goods man would term it.

BIG PRICES FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION."

H. A. Sherman, general manager of the Elliott Sherman Film Company of Minneapolis, Minn., closed a deal this week for the rights to Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in sixteen states west of the Mississippi River. The price paid for these rights was $250,000 cash; making the largest transaction ever conducted for the rights to a traveling attraction in the history of the American theater. The deal was closed by President H. E. Aitken for the Epoch Producing Corporation, the New York company that controls all rights to the Griffith production. Owing to the tremendous work of handling the tours of ten companies that are under the direction of J. J. McCarthy, general manager for the Epoch Company, it was decided to release this large territory to one concern. Mr. Sherman will make his headquarters in Minneapolis, but will book his tours through the Klaw & Erlanger offices in this city.

Comment on Patents Company Decision

G. A. Rogers, Counsel for William Fox, Issues a Statement on the Effects of the Decision.

GUSTAVE A. ROGERS, of Rogers and Rogers, 160 Broadway, New York City, has issued a statement in reference to the decision of Judge Dickinson in the case of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others. Mr. Rogers, after expressing his gratification over the victory for which he and his brother take considerable credit, declared "that owing to the profound changes in the industry the full import of the decision of Judge Dickinson will not be fully understood by those who read the meagre accounts in the newspapers." Mr. Rogers continued: "In November, 1911, William Fox, for whom my firm was acting as counsel, began the fight which resulted in the complaint being filed by the government. Aside from the effect that the decision will have upon the manner of conducting the motion picture business, it will have another result. In the suits that was pending against the manufacturers and the General Film Company, including those of William Fox's company, in which he is seeking damages of $1,800,000 against the members of the combination, the decision of Judge Dickinson under the new Clayton Law becomes prima facie evidence in all such damage suits. The claimant is merely obliged to prove his damages and then the burden shifts to the defendants to overcome the effects of Judge Dickinson's decision. As to the general effect of the decision upon the entire industry this can be answered more fully after the form of the decree has been determined. My opinion is the decree will be drastic in its form, compelling the Patents company to re-assign the patents to the original holders thereof and forbidding any further combination upon such patents.

House Peters

HOUSE PETERS, the latest of the galaxy of photoplay stars to be enlisted under the Lubin banner has had a career of mighty note, filled with adventure and success. At a decidedly early age, mother and father Peters decided that a little youthful training in the wilds of Australia would not be amiss for their promising son, not because he had shown a tendency to be incorrigible, but because both Mater and Pater realized that for a youth who showed the ambition of young House, experience would be by far the prime teacher.

Accordingly Australia welcomed House Peters at about fifteen years of age and House Peters welcomed Australia was considerably less in warmth, for soon he had joined a hunting party which planned to make a trip into the wilds of South Africa. With a soul satisfied by this adventure he turned his eye toward the stage and for many years successfully appeared through Australia and India with travelling repertoire companies. His return to his native land was not particularly auspicious and soon he made a tour of the Eastern Hemisphere in search of future adventure, ultimately ending with eighteen months' service in the English army during the Boer war.

House Peters.

During the past two years he has been seen in "The Bishop's Carriage," "7750 Chelsea," "The Pride of Jennico," "Clothes," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Mignon," "Salomy Jane," "The Girl of the Golden West," "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Captive," "Unafraid," "Between Men," and the "Winged Idol."

Mr. Peters' first appearance with the Lubin Company will be in the role of Steve Ghent in William Vaughn Moody's great Western American play, "The Great Divide."

It is the intent of the Lubin Company that Mr. Peters will be cast in roles depicting the rugged American life in the West, in which he is undoubtedly well fitted to appear.

Seasons for Metro Pictures

Six Months' Runs and Then New Prints and New Campaigns for Successes.

FOLLOWING the tried and successful example of the spoken drama in routing plays for a fixed and established season, the Metro Pictures Corporation will inaugurate a new motion picture policy by setting six months as the season for its feature productions. The season of the dramatic stage begins in September and ends in June. The Metro season will begin separately for each picture and after a run of six consecutive months a new season, with new prints, new paper and new campaigns in behalf of the successful feature offering.

This new policy will be inaugurated by the opening of a second season for "The Heart of Maryland," the great David Belasco play, in which Mrs. Leslie Carter is the star. This picture was produced by Herbert Brenon, who made "Neptune's Daughter" and other celebrated screen successes, and was first released six months ago by the Tiffany Films Corporation through the Metro exchanges. It was tremendously sucessful at the Hippodrome, where it played to 139,000 persons in eight days, and at other large theaters, and it has been playing continuously since the time of its first showing. Because it has been unusually successful on its second and third showings at theaters, it has been decided to formally inaugurate its second releasing season with a campaign throughout the country, calling attention to the exhibitors to the great size and power of the production.

Madeline Travers in Pathe's "Closing Net"

IN "The Closing Net," Edward Jose's Gold Rooster Play adapted from the novel by Henry C. Rowland, appears a girl with an important part, that of "Leontine," the beautiful crook, who does some remarkably good work. Madeline Travers is her name, and she is the daughter of Richard W. Trellegan, who was the proprietor and manager of a company which toured the United States and England for twelve years.

Miss Travers can boast of a rather unusual racial mixture in her veins, her father being of Cornish descent and her mother of French and Russian parentage.

Madeline Travers.

She was born in Boston and went on the stage at the age of fifteen. Among her numerous good engagements was one doing leading business with Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady," both in New York and London; the original cast of "Joseph and His Brethren," and with Cohan and Harris' "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

Miss Travers has a personality of pronounced charm and judging from her work in Pathe's "The Closing Net," she will be seen again in feature productions.

GOVERNOR HUNT IN LUBIN PLAY.

Governor Hunt, of Arizona, the man with a heart which is so much more human than which it was ever supposed a politician's might ever be, has become a motion picture devotee, and starts right off on his career before the camera with a bang—good, big and generous.

Recently the powers that be of the western branch of the Lubin Manufacturing Company had under consideration the production of a three-reel feature, which called for an impersonation of Governor Hunt. The entire stock company had a whack at making up, but the problem was still there. In last resort, the Governor himself was approached. It was thoroughly explained to him that "his presence" was urgently needed and he acquiesced. The result is the debut of a new motion picture player, no less than the Governor himself, and in the Lubin release of November 3 "A Western Governor's Humanity," the Governor of Arizona is portrayed by Governor Hunt of Arizona, and the directors sit back and wonder if the harsh critics will tell him the picture is miscast. His wager is ready.

"The Sign of the Broken Shackles"

Kalem Two-Reel Melodrama—Villainy, Noble Self-Sacrifice and Love.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is a touch of the old-fashioned about this offering "The Sign of the Broken Shackles," a two-part Kalem picture; but melodramatic situations are apt to have this and in many it seems not to have militated against popularity. It is not a wonderful picture; it tells an exaggerated story; but there is nothing in it that the simplest can fail to comprehend at a glance. It is plain that, if the picture is addressed to any particular portion of the public, it is to the gallery. But, while it is not a picture that makes a critical mind enthusiastic, it will pass on a program. This reviewer, as an airdome exhibitor, has pleased his audience in a suburban village, with melodramas cruder in situation and in action not more exagerated than is this offering. Then it has much that can truly be highly commended.

Scene from "The Sign of the Broken Shackles" (Kalem).

The leading role is taken by Alice Hollister as a tenant on a sugar plantation owned by an English nabob, a young and good looking fellow and a desirable hero (Harry Millarde). The rich man's brother (Arthur Albertson) is the villain and is sent to the island to force the tenants to pay the proper rents. The plantations are not profitable and the men on the island are rebellious. The brother is goatish; makes love to an octoroon (Nell Farrin) and also makes rought love to the heroine. There is a struggle in her house. Heroine backs to a drawer and gets a revolver just as the octoroon comes, in her trouble, to kill the villain. Both shoot at the same instant and the heroine thinks she is the murderer. She doesn't take the proper credit; but becomes frightened and, after joining the band "of the broken shackles," flees the island to become a famous singer in New York. The rich man stops in the city on his way to get vengeance and falls in love with her. The band draw lots to see who is to kill him and the lot falls to the heroine. Some fairly exciting scenes follow to the pleasing denouement with the two young people accepted lovers.

"Landing the Hose Reel"

The First of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," in Which Selig Players Create Boisterous Merriment for Forty-five Minutes.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT and Maibelle Heikes Justice have collaborated so successfully in "Landing the Hose Reel," the first of a series of twelve comedies comprising the "Chronicles of Bloom Center" that every man, woman and child who views it will await the release of each of the remaining eleven with great eagerness—providing, of course, that they have the same snappy action and a like mirthful flow of rural comedy. The rural types of men, women and boys introduced in "Landing the Hose Reel" will be seen in all of the series, with a character or two added at times, as the occasion calls for it. "Landing the Hose Reel" occupies three reels, which permits the introduction of most of the characters seen in the series.

These village types are both original and distinctive. Chubby Green, the village bad boy, and Johnny West, the "printer's devil," are two of the funniest comedy characters I have seen for some time. They figure in boyish pranks that force us to laugh at them and at the same time to "cuss" them inwardly, on reflecting that we might also be victims. Chubby is the greatest offender and, therefore, the greater funmaker. Sometimes he works alone and sometimes in concert with Johnny but always in a way that evokes boisterous mirth. The cunning with which he permits a sneaking tramp to steal a "loaded" cigar, and the joy that pervades his mind and fatty anatomy while he watches old Constable Plum, the village arm of the law, take the cigar from the tramp and smoke it himself, are irresistible. And, as we watch the constable jump almost out of his boots when the cigar "goes off," we laugh just as heartily as the perpetrator of the practical joke.

The mass meeting in the village town hall, which has been called to raise half the sum required to purchase the hose reel, will force another storm of guffaws; for Chubby and Johnny fill the air with sneezing powder, and stampede both orators and audience. They "pull off" another big stunt on Constable Plum, when they change the village-10-mile-speeding-limit sign to read "100 miles;" and still another when they sadly perplex the two young ladies in charge of the candy booth, at the lawn fete, when they change the sign "10c candy kisses" to read "10c kisses."

Ralph McComas and Sidney Smith are the mirthful imitators of Chubby Green and Johnny West.

Perhaps one of the most mirthful incidents of the fun-laden, three reels is that in which the self-appointed fire chief, Groceryman Ira Pash, refuses to believe Constable Plum, when the latter tells him that his own home is burning down. Two other fires, to which the fire company had been called, proved to be false alarms, thanks to the devilish ingenuity of Chubby and Johnny, who had touched off "smoke pots" in two buildings. Concerning these "smoke pots" the disgruntled chief, after discovering them, had said: "Them's smoke pots; they don't harm nothin', but smoke a helluva lot." So, when Constable Plum rushed to him and burst out, "Your house is on fire; honest to gosh it is," no wonder that the irate chief replied: "Chase yourself; you don't fool me a third time."

Scene from "Landing the Hose Reel" (Selig).

As the last scene fades out, we see Fire Chief Pash, slightly under the weather from the libations indulged in, on account of the great honor that had come to him, gazing incredulously at the ashes and charred timbers of what had once been "home."

The release date has been set for Thursday, October 14.

Lillian Tucker in "Charles O'Malley."

Lillian Tucker, the leading woman of the recent World Film release, "Evidence," in rehearsing with Andrew Mack, and will appear with him in his new Irish play "Charles O'Malley." She will play the role of an Englishwoman, for which type she is especially well known.

The "Mettle of Jerry McGuire"

Two-Reel Universal Production Features Helen Holmes in a Thrilling Railroad Photoplay.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS is a brisk, well constructed story of railroad life, enacted by a cast which includes Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan, L. D. Maloney and a bright little girl. The latter, being the daughter of an engineer, feels perfectly at home in a locomotive cab, as the story goes, and she starts things by running away with a whole train of cars. In the effort to catch the train, which of course is accomplished after much difficulty, Helen Holmes, in her part of the mother, jumps from an automobile to a flat car. Her manner of alighting affords ample evidence of the chances she took in performing this feat, and as both the auto and train are moving at full speed the desired thrill is accomplished.

Scene from "The Mettle of Jerry McGuire" (Universal).

The story itself is an attractive one, though in a somewhat conventional way. Jerry, the engineer, loves the girl at the station. His fireman also loves her, but Jerry wins her hand. They are married and the jealous fireman resolves to get the girl at all cost. He bides his time and at length an opportunity presents itself to frame up a wreck on Jerry. This is done and Jerry loses his job. He then takes to drink and is finally sent to prison for a crime. On his release he learns that the fireman has been endeavoring to win over his wife. They quarrel, and while the wife wavers in her affections, the child runs away with the train. Jerry and the wife save her and a happy ending is achieved.

"How Molly Malone Made Good"

Unusual Photoplay Introducing Ten Stage Stars Is Presented by Kulee Features, Inc.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

HERE is a six-part picture exactly calculated to satisfy public curiosity concerning the off-stage appearance of celebrated actors and actresses. It was produced by the Photo Drama Company, with Lawrence B. McGill directing a cast headed by Marguerite Gale and including William H. Tooker, Helen Hilton, W. A. Williams, Armand Cortes, James Bagley, Edward Sullivan and John Reedy. These present the story of a girl reporter, written by Burns Mantle, dramatic editor of the New York Evening Mail. But more important than the story, more important than anything else in the picture, in fact, are the intimate glimpses of stage stars which it affords.

Molly Malone is a pretty Irish lass with an engaging smile and plenty of nerve. Just arrived in New York, she looks for her brother in the office of the Tribune and not finding him she wants an opportunity to do a little reportorial work herself. The Sunday editor gives her the hardest kind of an assignment—interviews with stage favorites, who don't want to be bothered. Two discredited employees of the same paper try to thwart Molly at every turn. They account for the melodramatic excitement in the picture, but interference notwithstanding, the plucky young woman goes right ahead with her task and is back in the office at the appointed hour.

Her visits carry her to the homes—generally the country homes—of Robert Edeson, May Robson, Leo Ditrichstein, Lulu Glaser, Cyril Scott, Henrietta Crosman, Henry Kolker, Madame Fjorde, Julian Eltinge, Julia Dean and Charles Ross and Mabel Fenton. We see all of these people at close range, enjoy views of their attractive estates and experience a few thrills when Molly's life is threatened. Director McGill secured some effective scenes of a runaway in which a carriage is crushed between two trees, of an automobile smash-up at a railroad crossing, of a heavy rainstorm and of the lobby of the Hotel Martinique, to mention some of the most memorable parts of a well staged and clearly photographed production. Miss Gale is beautiful to look at and altogether charming in her interpretation of the girl who never said, "It can't be done."

"The Magic Skin"

A Beautiful Five-Reel Kleine-Edison Feature Adapted by Richard Ridgeley from "La Peau de Chagrin," of Honore de Balzac.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

PORTRAYED with a truly artistic sense of design, achieving a satisfying effect in an unassuming way, "The Magic Skin" is primarily an evidence of skilled adaptation and direction, for many of the scenes require delicate handling and they are presented without a suggestion of bad taste. The story runs along the familiar lines of "Faust," being chiefly concerned with a redeeming vision of a young man fast drifting from his finer ideals into the gratification of material desire and wayward impulse, in which he is aided by His Satanic Majesty through the instrumentality of a magical skin. This skin shrinks in size with each gratified desire, as does the soul of the man, until he reaches a degeneracy which makes him the Devil's Own. The Balzac story suffers nothing in visualization; to the contrary, it is more effective, though its termination is a compromise.

Scene from "The Magic Skin" (Kleine-Edison).

Some minor faults are visible, a few of the unimportant scenes are overplayed, but these are heavily overbalanced by a pleasure-giving harmony of settings with the mood of the story, and by the splendid cast. Sally Crute as Flora Margot and Everett Butterfield as the "Faust" in this case, carry off the honors, though Mabel Trunelle responds delightfully to all the requirements of her modest role. Opportunity is accorded Butterfield for a strong impersonation and his interpretation grows in strength until it is powerful at times. Sally Crute seems to create her own opportunities, her fascinating personality and high intelligence making an impression that contributes largely to the success of what will undoubtedly be a winning play.

Alice Dovey in "The Reformers."

Miss Alice Dovey is at the Gaumont studio, Flushing, N. Y., acting in a Casino Star Feature, a one-reel comedy, under the direction of Edwin Middleton. It is called "The Reformers" and will be released October 24. Miss Dovey closed recently in "Hands Up," the Maurice and Florence Walton Revue.

"The Bludgeon"

Kathryn Osterman Is Featured in a Five-Part Equitable Subject Which Will Be Liked by Many.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Equitable will release on Oct. 18 "The Bludgeon," a five-part subject in which Kathryn Osterman is featured. Supporting her are John Dunn, who has the role of the husband who takes blame upon his own shoulders that his spendthrift and mildly flirtatious wife may be free; Roy Applegate, who plays Hillman, the lawyer friend of the husband, who later marries the woman in the case; Clara Whipple, who is Mrs. Wharton, who by introducing her friends or victims into what she is pleased to call society manages to live on them; and Katherine Lee, the child.

Scene from "The Bludgeon" (Equitable).

Miss Osterman has a difficult role—that of a woman who is ambitious and who is selfish, who believes every effort of her husband must be bent toward her personal advancement and adornment. It is a character that not only cannot compel sympathy, but is bound to repel it. There is a tendency, too, to facial exaggeration, to staginess as opposed to spontaneity. Mr. Applegate will be liked. So, too, will Mr. Dunn as the inventor husband. With the majority, however, the interest probably will center in Katherine, the little Rose in whom is bound up the affections of the father, and whom the wife designs to use as the bludgeon to force from her husband money which she cannot secure on her own account. The child is naturalness itself, and there will be many who will feel that to her go the acting honors.

"The Bludgeon" is well staged. In spite of the gray that dominates its coloring, experience with pictures in character resembling it gives assurance that this, too, will be liked by most practical picture men, because of their knowledge as to what their clientele like.

"The Long Arm of the Secret Service"

Three-Reel Regular Mutual Detective Story With an Unexpected Termination.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS rare that the hardened critic is surprised, though it would not be a difficult thing to catch him napping by springing an inconsistent solution of a problem. Long training enables him to forecast results in detective stories of exceptional intricacy, while the end is too easily foreseen in the average screen production, but he is occasionally thrown off the track in a perfectly logical line of development, as in the case of "The Long Arm of the Secret Service."

The story is almost purely one of plot and action, the characterization not rising to any observable height, but it is original and developed with skill. It opens with the meeting after many years of a young oysterman and a girl who was his sweetheart in childhood. Natural result of their joint retrospect is an intimacy verging on love. With a promptness that is rather crude, an obvious villain, though a real estate dealer of wealth and local prominence, thrusts his attentions upon the girl and shrewdly conspires to throw the odium of his villainy, that of smuggling opium, upon the young oysterman.

Now arrives a self-announced member of the Secret Service and asks the villainous real estate dealer to assist him in capturing the smugglers. The villain laughs behind the detective's back, that heartless laugh we know so well, and frames up a case involving the innocent young oysterman. At the last moment, when all seems lost, the villain is foiled. But how? The innocent-looking girl was the real detective, and she clears her lover while rendering good service to Uncle Sam.

"My Madonna"

Popular Plays and Players' Drama for Metro Program—Olga Petrova Is Impressive in Stellar Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHILE Mme. Alice Blache acknowledges indebtedness to Robert W. Service's poem, "My Madonna," for the inspiration of this drama, or perhaps melodrama would be better, she may well take credit for having evolved a story in many respects her own. The picture is, in the main, true to the spirit rather than the letter of the poem. In the first two reels, showing how the artist comes to meet and love his Madonna, many of the poet's verses are used as sub-titles and the scenes convey more poetic feeling than is apparent in the subsequent action, which introduces a rather ordinary case of marital infidelity and its consequences. The eventual return of the artist to his Madonna, as the source of inspiration and contentment, is satisfactory in bringing about a happy ending and true enough to character, if one recognizes the deepness of the man's attachment and the superficial quality of his infatuation for the Baroness.

The picture's chief defect is a tendency to jump from one dramatic scene to another without a convincing accounting for the behavior of the characters. One is a bit surprised at the ease with which the poor artist wins Lucille, a pampered demi-monde. Also her constancy after marriage shows a remarkable reversal of moral form, and in return for this, the artist stumbles into an affair with the Baroness, a divorcee. A conventional photoplay situation, that in which an innocent man is accused of murder, is used in the last reel, prior to a well handled trial scene, culminating in Lucille's dramatic attempt to sacrifice herself in place of her husband.

But granting the shortcomings mentioned, "My Madonna" measures safely above the average feature production. At times it is exceptionally artistic, revealing ingenuity in the effects attained and a skilled use of double exposures. Olga Petrova presents a lovely appearance as Lucille, whether clothed as a woman of fashion, or in the robes of the Madonna, and her acting of a role calling for much variety in expression, is marked by intelligence and feeling. Guy Coombs is natural as the artist, whereas able performances are given by Albert Howson as the Baron and Evelyn Dumo as the Baroness.

"An Affair of Three Nations"

Arnold Daly and Ashley Miller Produce First of the "Ashton-Kirk" Novels of John T. McIntyre in Five-Part Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A HIGHLY colored melodrama produced in the best style of the screen is this thrilling adventure of Ashton-Kirk, Investigator. The story of John T. McIntyre is essentially a mystery story from first to last. It is apparently not intended that we should at once share in the secret of the screen, but that we should remain in breathless suspense until the last card is played.

The cast participating in "An Affair of Three Nations" are as follows: Arnold Daly, who of course is the wealthy young investigator, Sheldon Lewis who as Dr. Morse meets his end early in the story, William Harrigan, Charles Laite, Charles Krauss who gives an inimitable portrayal of the eccentric character Drevenoff, Martin Sabine, Godfrey Stein, George Melville, Luise Rutter and Doris Mitchell. This talented cast by means of "makeup" and otherwise have presented a variety of interesting and appropriate types.

Being the first of a series of "Ashton-Kirk" stories to be produced for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., by Arnold Daly and Ashley Miller, the production has been looked forward to with considerable interest, partly because of the remarkable adaptability of the McIntyre novels to the screen, partly because of the well-known qualities of the directors and because of some of the names of the cast that had been heralded some time previously.

The public will not be disappointed in "An Affair of Three Nations." The story of the effort of the son of Count Drevenoff to gain possession of a copy of a treaty of the Russian Government with the United States, which had been taken from his father at the time of his death, is mysterious, thrilling and artistic. If one may go so far as to predict its future we would say that as a box office attraction there can be no question of its success.

Six-Part Broadway Universal Feature Introduces the De Havens, and They Should Be Popular.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Universal will release on October 25 as a Broadway Feature "The College Orphan," which is in six parts. The subject will introduce to picture goers Carter De Haven and Flora Parker De Haven. Judging from their work in the subject under review they will be popular. Mrs. De Haven is of striking type—good looks she has beyond question; but better than that, she gives strong evidence of the possession of the intelligence from which successful screen actresses are made.

"The College Orphans" contains elements of comedy and of drama. There are rollicking scenes of academic life and strife. There are moments of pathos as the young slavey, abased by the boarding mistress, reveals her love for the happy-go-lucky collegian she heroizes and idolizes. There are sterner periods as the denouement approaches in which the story tends to the melodramatic. Many characters are introduced, but the interest very quickly centers on two persons; yet there is a third, the kindly broken-down old professor who befriends the girl sent out from the poor farm.

Scene from "The College Orphan" (Universal).

The picture will make good entertainment. Some disposed to be critical may feel that it might be shortened a bit to the subject's advantage. These also may question the probability of the action of the students in trying to soften the blows of masculine football by substituting the antics of sissies—antics which have been known on previous occasions to make the unskillful laugh. On the whole, however, the college atmosphere is unusual—the fraternity life, the escapades, and the following trouble. That there are real college boys in many of the mob scenes is plain—there is a snap and go, a response to the direction of the cheer and other leaders, that is refreshing.

Mr. De Haven will be liked. He has youth, agility in abundance and a personality that interests. The De Havens should make a strong addition to the Universal forces.

"Heart of the Blue Ridge"

World Film Production Presenting Clara Kimball Young as Mountain Girl in Story of Moonshiners.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

NOVELTY of plot is not a distinguishing feature of this five-part Shubert-World Film drama, written by Waldron Baily and directed by James Young. It is a story of moonshiners and the efforts of a young revenue officer to capture them, particularly the leader of the band who persistently annoys the pretty Plutina. Also it is a story of the hatred existing between this moonshiner and the girl's honest lover, who buys his first pair of boots when he goes to town after his appointment as overseer of a tract of lumber. The atmosphere of the picture is true to the promise of the title; the characterizations are direct and easily comprehended; the action in the last two reels is exciting and the production always profits by magnificent mountain scenery.

Admirers of Clara Kimball Young no doubt will be delighted by her portrayal of the untutored mountain lass whose chosen companion is a pet bear. Even at the cost of some personal discomfort, Miss Young evidently determined to make her characterization in all respects true to type. The Plutina of the story never possessed either shoes or stockings, so this conscientious actress discarded protecting footwear and ran through rough fields and along rocky passes quite as though sharp stones did not exist. She becomes the central figure in many picturesque scenes and meets the melodramatic action in the concluding reel with fine spirit. Miss Young has played more difficult roles, but few which may be expected to have a wider appeal.

Scene from "Heart of the Blue Ridge" (World Film).

Robert Cummings was well chosen for the villainous Dan Hughes, the moonshiner who stops at nothing in his effort to possess Plutina. In the way of stirring action an audience need ask for nothing better than the scenes in which the man drags the girl off to a cave. For a concluding thrill, Zeke (Chester Barnett) grapples with his enemy and after a struggle throws him over a cliff. The picture was well directed and convincingly acted.

"Gladiola"

A Three-Reel Edison Release of Great Scenic Beauty, in Which the Author Discards the Conventional Ending—Viola Dana a Charming Heroine.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE exterior scenes for this three-reel drama, written by Mary Rider, were taken in the gladiolus fields of Berlin, N. Y. They are of rare beauty and add greatly to the worth of the picture. Another potent factor in the success of the photoplay is Viola Dana's acting of the title role. The story has to do with a simple country maiden and the wealthy but unscrupulous young man from the city. The expected happens, in quite the usual way. The girl is lured to the city, deceived by a mock marriage, learns the truth and returns home to become a mother. At the finish, the author shows independence of mind. When young Williams comes to the farm and offers to right the wrong, Gladiola does not weakly accept the protection of his name. In spite of the child, she remains firm in refusing to marry him, and, eventually, accepts the honest love of one of the farm hands, who has known her all her life. This ending gives a sweet scent to the play and fits in with the field of blooming flowers, where the love scene takes place. There are several well played scenes in the city, but it is the beautiful exteriors among the flowering plants, the acting of Viola Dana, and the ending, that makes Miss Rider's drama worth while. In a part that might easily have been made weak and over-sentimental, Miss Dana struck a real note of pathos, and denoted the innocence and charm of the character by force of her own personality and command of the actor's art. The perfect honesty with which this little woman creates her effects is one of the finest things about her work. Robert Conness looked and acted the city man convincingly, and Pat O'Malley was a manly country lover. Charles Sutton, Jessie Stevens and Eldean Steuart were agreeably cast. John H. Collins directed the picture.

"The Coward"

Frank Keenan Gives Splendid Portrayal of the Old Southerner in Triangle Kay-Bee Feature.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE management of the Knickerbocker theater, where is being shown the Triangle program, for the third week of its season, continued over the subjects which had held the screen for the second week. One of the reasons contributing to this action well may have been the strength of "The Coward," in which Frank Keenan is starred. The story is in six parts. It is a straight and simple tale, from the pen of Thomas H. Ince, who is also the producer. Mr. Keenan has the role of an old southern colonel—and it is a role that he knows right down to the ground—a man proud of the line of Winslow; from what he has done, from what his forbears have done, he has a right to expect much from his son in the coming hostilities between North and South.

Scene from "The Coward" (Triangle).

When the picture was flashed on the screen it carried the mind of the writer back to that morning, last July, in San Francisco when Mr. Keenan talked to the exhibitors assembled in convention. Mr. Keenan was full of the enthusiasm of the old player who had just finished his first picture. He was speaking to an audience also containing many actors. They were in holiday mood, and so was he. There was a roar of appreciative laughter when the actor, speaking with a knowledge of a weakness that is not confined to those of the stage, declared: "I have seen my first picture, and believe me, I am good." Mr. Keenan was joking, of course; but he told the exact truth.

It is a remarkable interpretation of the rugged old Colonel Jefferson Beverly Winslow Mr. Keenan gives us. Restraint is the keynote—to the verge of boldness; but it is always impressive. He smiles as he contemplates with pride the photographing or the tintype of his son; he rages, but not boisterously, when he learns of the young man's cowardice; the failure to enlist he condones, but takes measures to see that the youngster alters his mind; when the quick desertion follows, the old man shoulders the gun the young man laid down; the mind of the father is so upset by the stain on the family's honor that he refuses to acknowledge as his own the boy in bed suffering from a wound the father had inflicted. It is only when finally he is made to understand the day's victory is due to the great bravery of his son that the reaction comes. It is a situation of heartache as the old man takes his son in his arms.

There is much in this subject that is worth while. We see a bit of a battle that is understandable—it is no hodgepodge. There is a cavalry charge upon intrenched infantry; and there are long lines of infantry to follow up the charge. Charles Ray, as the coward who eventually finds himself, gives a strong performance. Gertrude Claire, as Mrs. Winslow, the mother, holds sympathy throughout. The picture is well acted. Of strong situations there are many, but the denouement is one to be remembered.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford"

"A Rheumatic Joint," Third of the Series, Treats of Mud Baths and Other Equally Amusing Situations.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE third of the Wallingford series we find humor in the ascendency. Burr McIntosh and Max Figman, supplemented by Lolita Robertson, Harry Carr and Edward O'Connor and others who mean much to the production, are doing their "worst" for the sake of comedy.

Discovered that Cornelius Rockewell, third on the list of offenders to be dealt with by Wallingford and his accomplice in the work of forcing restitution, is in Zwick's Sanitarium, it remains for Wallingford who has discovered that he too has a rheumatic joint to register at the sanitarium also. The mud baths are not to his liking, but he gains, before his escape from the sanitarium, the knowledge that the millionaire will pay any amount of money to be cured of old age.

When Wallingford and Blackie Daw open their sanitarium some time later, to be known as Wallingford's Sanitarium for the cure of old age, Onion Jones is on hand to accidentally meet the millionaire, and lure him and his money to the Sanitarium. Onion Jones' bid of $100,000 is outbid to the amount of $150,000 by Rockewell, and so another wrong is avenged.

Scene from "New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford" (Pathe).

This number of the Wallingford series is an especially amusing one. As a comedy it is a finished two-part production in itself.

Allen Curtis is staging another of Ben Cohn's one-reel comedies entitled "A Quarter Century and Susie," with Max Asher, Gale Henry, William Franey, Milburn Moranti and Lillian Peacock in the leading roles.

"Nan o' the Backwoods"

Three-Reel Lubin, Produced by Sidney Olcott—Valentine Grant in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

PEARL GADDIS, the author of this three-reel photoplay, has been content with erecting her dramatic structure upon familiar and well approved lines. Her heroine is a product of the backwoods, beautiful but lowly born. She is loved by a young physician, who attempts to improve her deficient education, but a wealthy idler from the city appears on the scene with his auto, and the girl is immediately taken for a ride. The trip is repeated several times, without harm to Nan, but her brother, Lige, suspecting the worst, forces the owner of the auto to marry his sister. Reinforced by Nan's father, the bridal party then go to the home of the groom and introductions follow. Nan's new father and mother will have nothing to do with her or her kin, and turn them all out of doors. The young doctor has remained faithful in his love for Nan, and shortly after the separation, the husband having confessed on his death bed that Lige's fears were without foundation, the way is made clear for a happy ending to the worthy physician's romance.

Scene from "Nan o' the Backwoods" (Lubin).

Such a story makes no great strain on the minds in an audience. It is elemental, well within the compass of human experience, and will prove entertaining to those who are satisfied with skimming over the surface of things. Sidney Olcott has given the picture every advantage to be derived from skilful producing, and his efforts have been ably seconded by Valentine Grant, Walter Chapen, James Vincent, P. H. O'Malley and Roy Sheldon.

"Flame of Passion"

A Tom Terriss Feature Produced in Jamaica and Released by the Picture Playhouse Co., Inc.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN THIS, the second of the five-part photoplays made by Tom Terriss and his company while in Jamaica, the Picture Playhouse company has an offering of uneven merit. Many scenes in the last two reels are very fine indeed and strikingly unusual, whereas there is less to commend in the earlier passages of the production, partially because the photography is of varying quality and partially because the film shows the lack of careful editing. There are several awkward jumps in the action and the story does not always carry conviction. In justice to the producer, however, it should be said that in subsequent prints the blemishes in the photography may be remedied and with careful revision "Flame of Passion" no doubt will be materially strengthened as a dramatic photoplay.

Scene from "Flame of Passion" (Terriss).

Using a plot that is simple enough in its central element, Mr. Terriss has aimed to go deeper into human emotions and the philosophy of life than might appear on the surface. The woman of the picture is the embodiment of passion, and as the story advances we see how passion is born in the heart of a young man, how it asserts an irresistible power and how the victim is released only by the death of the woman who has captivated him. Passion is the motif running through the story and giving significance to the quite melodramatic incidents connected with the efforts to deprive Dick Lorient of the West Indian plantation which he has inherited. The picture has a way of sliding from practical photoplay melodrama into scenes showing the industrial occupations and religious customs of the natives of the West Indies. Passages of philosophic meaning are frequently introduced by quatrains from Omar Khayyam's Rubaiyat.

Distinctly on the credit side of the production are the many beautiful locations, especially in the concluding reel. The acting, too, is satisfactory, with Mr. Terriss heading a company that includes Elaine Terriss, Lionel Pape, Reinzi de Cordova and William Lewin.

"The White Pearl"

Marie Doro in a Five-Part Famous Players Production Puts Life in a Tired Story.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on October 11 "The White Pearl," featuring Marie Doro. Miss Doro does much in the five-part subject to create interest in a theme more fitting as a background for a comic opera than for a screen drama or even a "fanciful romance." She is aided by a good cast and by elaborateness of production. The director has gone to great lengths to obtain Japanese atmosphere. Not only does he employ many Japanese men and women, but he uses for backgrounds extensive Japanese gardens. There are many scenes taken on board a big schooner at sea. The photography is of a high order. All these factors make for illusion, but they cannot overcome the handicap of a story that is threadbare—the gem stolen from the Buddhist idol, death following in its wake.

MARIE DORO
FAMOUS PLAYERS

Scene from "The White Pearl" (Famous Players).

Thomas Holding plays opposite Miss Doro. Mr. Holding will be remembered as the David Rossi of "The Eternal City." His work is of the best. The two make a splendid pair of lovers. Mr. Holding portrays Bob, the son of a tea merchant, in love with Nancy, daughter of a sea captain. Bob has come into possession of the white pearl and has given it to Nancy. The gem has been stolen by a Chinaman, who in turn has been killed by the second thief. It is the latter who on his death bed has given it to Bob. The father of Bob refuses to sanction his marriage to a sea captain's daughter and sends the young man to Yokohama to take charge of a branch. It is just at this time the captain takes his daughter with him on a voyage to Japan—her health is declining.

Bob stows away on the schooner. When the vessel springs a leak near the coast of Japan the two are separated. Nancy drifts ashore on a liferaft—her memory gone. It is when later as a dancing girl she is assailed by an Englishman that Bob appears on the scene and rescues her.

Robert Leonard in "Idols of Clay."

Robert Leonard is at work at Universal City, on the production of a two-reel drama entitled "Idols of Clay." Mr. Leonard, Ella Hall and Marc Robbins appear in leading roles.

"The Dragon's Claw"

Marion Leonard and Walter Hampden are Featured in Knickerbocker Three-Part Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

S. E. V. TAYLOR, author and director of this three-reel photoplay, supplied Merion Leonard and Walter Hampden with an unusual, if not very cheerful story. There are several surprises in the plot development, the picture is pleasantly free from superfluous scenes and in the last reel there is quite a bit of dramatic action that may be expected to arouse a few thrills in an audience. The production's chief defects are the gloomy idea on which it is based and the absence of light touches to relieve a somewhat too somber tone. Occasional bits of natural humor are not out of place even in a serious melodrama.

Scene from "The Dragon's Claw" (Knickerbocker).

In the two players chosen for the leading roles, the Knickerbocker company is fortunate. The enviable reputation gained by Miss Leonard in the early days of photoplays has not been forgotten by followers of the screen, who surely will welcome the reappearance of so able an actress. Here she is cast as the daughter of a western prospector, who does not live to profit by his discovery of gold. While on the way east Nora's father is killed and when she finds the body, the charm that he wore around his neck is missing. There is no trace of the murderer, but the girl remembers the dragon's claw and her determination to find the man who took it. Years later she discovers it among the possessions of her husband and with some reason on her side concludes that he must be guilty. His explanation of how he came to acquire the charm only strengthens her belief.

Nora plots a quite fiendish revenge, which is carried to a tragic conclusion before she learns that her suspicions were all wrong. Mr. Hampden, an accomplished stage actor, plays the husband with force and dignity. This is his first appearance on the screen and considering his lack of photoplay experience he seems remarkably at ease. He has an impressive personality and a fine bearing that photographs well. The final scenes, introducing a fight between cowboys and western bandits, were skilfully handled by Director Taylor.

"The Little Gypsy"

Walter Dare's Romantic Melodrama Is Made Into Five-Part Picture by Fox Company.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS PRESENTED in this five-part photoplay, directed by Oscar C. Apfel and Mary Murillo, "The Little Gypsy" is a rather fragmentary story lacking the illusion of reality. The romance, blended with somewhat artificial melodrama, consequent upon the strike of the weavers of Thrums, seems a bit forced, despite the effectiveness of several of the scenes. One receives the impression of a story that is planned to include all the elements of a popular picture and the plan is too obvious. First a little sentiment, then a few scenes of striking weavers being held in check by soldiers, or perhaps scenes of a burning village; then a little more sentiment followed by melodramatic action, and so on until the photoplay has run its course. There is little to hold the sympathy of an audience.

Dorothy Bernard plays Babbie, the little Gypsy, who, as an infant, is found by an earl and given a home, quite as though she were a member of the family. Although she occupies the position of a lady, it suits her fancy to masquerade in the garb of a gypsy and captivate the priggish young minister. She meets him in the woods, dances in her most flirtatious manner and is rebuked by being called "a woman." An audience is not inclined to take the little minister with anything like the seriousness that he takes himself. The sub-title intended to convey his distaste for worldly pleasures is something of a joke. His ultimate capitulation to the wiles of Babbie is a foregone conclusion.

Two of the finest characterizations in the picture are given by Mrs. Hurley and William Riley Hatch. Mrs. Hurley, in particular, makes a small part stand out by reason of her perfectly natural acting. Others in the cast are Thurlow Bergen, Raymond Murray, W. J. Herbert and B. Barker. The picture profits by picturesque locations.

"The Final Judgment"

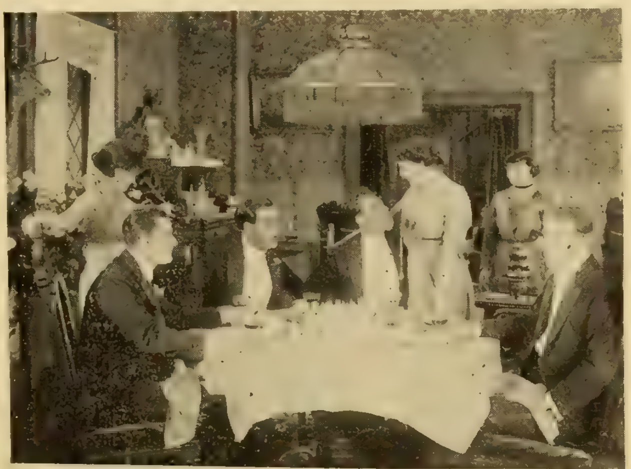
Metro-Rolfe, Five-Reel Picture with Ethel Barrymore and E. Cooper Cliffe—Sensational Melodrama—Has a Fresh Situation.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

TO ONE who has seen Ethel Barrymore act on the stage, it is a thankless task to review her work in pictures. There are flashes of good acting in her latest film work—how could there help being?—but she isn't the same fine actress that we all know so well. There are times when she failed to convince; because she failed to suggest at important moments all the elements in the situation. Perhaps the trouble is with a too sketchy scenario and a director who didn't supply at every moment that which takes the places of words and moods in a play.

The picture is "The Final Judgment," a Rolfe-Metro offering in five reels. The story, a sensational melodrama, has a new and deeply emotional situation and as a whole it holds interest well though it is not compact,, there being not a few short scenes of needless explanation in it—a re-explanation of what all know full well. But the story breaks through these things and breaks through the fact that it really needed youthful players to make this story convincing. The situation has enough strength to keep the mind in bond for five reels. The heroine's husband is in the death cell condemned for murder of which another lover of hers is guilty. She suspects, and her problem is to show up the villain, and she begins by making him think that she loves him and has really disliked her husband.

The script is from a new play, not yet produced, by George Scarborough and in which Ethel Barrymore is soon to appear and the picture was directed by Edwin Carewe. Other players are H. Cooper Cliffe, the villainous lover; Mahlen Hamilton, her accepted lover and husband; Percy Standing, another lover; Beatrice Maude, her sister; M. W. Rale, a Japanese valet, and others.



Scene from "The Final Judgment" (Metro).

It is a picture that, if we know audiences, will pretty surely make money for exhibitors; because it is the kind of story they seem to want just now.

Four Strong Biographs

"The Coming of Angelo," "The Musketeers of Pig Alley," "The God Within" and "The Lonedale Operator" Are Coming Reissues.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE expert workmanship of D. W. Griffith and the excellence of the Biograph casts of some four or five years ago have at no time been more convincingly illustrated than in the four single-reel subjects chosen for reissue in the last week of October and the first three weeks in November. They are "The Coming of Angelo," Oct. 29; "The Musketeers of Pig Alley," Nov. 5; "The God Within," Nov. 12, and "The Lonedale Operator," Nov. 19.

Scene from "The God Within" (Biograph).

Owing to the depth of its appeal, the sound, human interest of a story touched with spiritual significance and the superb performances given by Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore and Claire McDowell, "The God Within" calls for first mention. It is the kind of a picture that one feels and remembers, for few have presented a difficult theme so powerfully and yet with such unquestionable taste. In a rough Western town where one child is born in wedlock and another without the bonds of marriage, we see how the spirit of God is awakened in two lives that gave small promise of spirituality. This production was one of Director Griffith's finest inspirations.

"The Coming of Angelo" is a model of artistic photoplay production in the most beautiful of California seacoast locations. The plot is simple, a triangular love affair with emotional Italians as the principals; but the treatment lifts the drama far above the usual picture using the same material. The element of suspense is maintained, literally, to the last scene and sympathy is aroused for all the characters, particularly for Angelo, the discarded lover, who plans to blow his successful rival into eternity. Blanche Sweet appears at her best in this picture, as do Walter Miller and Charles H. Mailes.

Scene from "The Coming of Angelo" (Biograph).

At the time the Biograph Company first released "The Musketeers of Pig Alley" it was hailed as a masterly depiction of gangster life in the slums of New York. We have had many pictures of the kind since then, but probably none that gives a more gripping and realistic presentation of underworld society. Even minor figures in the scenes were selected with a careful regard for types, and in the principal roles we find such actors as Harry Carey, Walter Miller, Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore and Robert Harron.

"The Lonedale Operator" is a railroad melodrama produced two years earlier than the other films in this batch of reissues. Its place on the program is due to the requests of many exhibitors who recall the success it scored with audiences in 1910. There is no reason why the peril of the girl, threatened by tramps in a lonely railroad station, should be less effective with present-day theatergoers. Miss Sweet, Wilfred Lucas, Francis Grandin, Edward Dillon and Joseph Graybill are in the cast.

"A Girl of Yesterday"

Mary Pickford, Charming as Ever, Is Seen as an Old-Fashioned Maid Brought Up to Date.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT WAS a pretty story the Famous Players released on October 7. "A Girl of Yesterday" brings back to us Mary Pickford, charming as ever. The story is a simple tale of how an old-fashioned girl is molded to the ways of those who indulge in up-to-date amusements. It provides four reels of excellent entertainment. A crowded house at the Broadway theater on the afternoon of Columbus Day showed its approval by its mirth as the prim Miss Stuart was gradually but none the less surely initiated in the art of holding up her end with her fashionable neighbors.

Making for illusion was the appearance of Jack Pickford in the role of John Stuart, the younger brother of Jane. Several times there might be detected those little pleasantries that obtain between the real sister and brother. It is said this is the first time these two have appeared on the screen in their true relation, and it may be added that the debut of the twain was highly successful. Miss Pickford had good all-around support. Standing out in the cast were Marshal Neilan and Donald Crisp, both of whom are now directing other players. Mr. Neilan is seen as Stanley Hudson, who lives on the opposite side of the high wall bounding the home of the Stuarts. When Hudson courts the brother for the sake of the sister he finds a willing ally in John, who is really anxious to get acquainted.

Scene from "A Girl of Yesterday" (Famous Players).

Miss Jane's first appearance in society is in her grandmother's gown. She is well satisfied with it until her brother, who has overheard the remark of a jealous minx, suggests it would be a good plan to get some "regular" clothes. The maid goes out on the balcony to weep and suddenly finds herself surrounded by all the men in the house. The new raiment is secured, however. Jane's first public appearance is in a short-skirted riding habit, and Miss Prim's horror makes mirth. After a trying experience on horseback she falls behind the others and gives up. She confides to her horse that he jars her. There are following sessions on the golf links, there is a trip on a yacht, and an adventure in an aeroplane, in which Glenn Martin is introduced. Jane is supposed to take a ride in an aeroplane, but you can't prove it by the film.

"A Girl of Yesterday" is a subject that will be popular, not only on account of the personality of the leading player, but also by reason of the good acting and the picturesque backgrounds—which are Californian.

At the Liberty Film company at San Mateo, the Swedish actress, Miss Sadie Lindblom took the lead in a photodrama entitled "The Peacemaker" with Frederick Montague in support. She is now appearing in "Love Finds a Way" with Al Lutthringer playing opposite her. Mr. Lutthringer is well known on the speaking stage and this is his first experience in pictures.

"The Card Players"

"The Card Players," a Three-Reel Rialto Feature.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE first of the above named productions is based on a theme of large possibilities, and hands out a moral without seeming to moralize. Director Garrick is to be commended for his wise choice of types, and also for the realism contained in many of the scenes of the production.

The story of "The Card Players" places before us a vivid picture of a circumstance of frequent recurrence, especially in social circles. The son of a father and mother both given over to the card habit, apparently inherits a double portion of the gambling vice, and neglects business, sweetheart, and all things that life should hold sweetest and best, to follow incessantly the game of chance that consumes his entire being.

Scene from "The Card Players" (Gaumont).

The production which features William Roselle makes a distinct impression. The story is in most part lucidly told, and its lesson cannot fail to reach even the simplest mind. There are, nevertheless, technical errors apparent here and there in the picture, which might have been avoided. For instance at the point where young Carl Fremont, the junior member of the card fiends, robs the woman whom he had recently befriended, he does so at night, while in the succeeding scenes intended to portray incidents of the same hour take place in broad daylight.

Madge Orlamond plays the role of the mother, and plays it well, Charles U. Davis appearing as the father does some of the finest work in the production, Lucille Taft is particularly pleasing as Nitra, Carl's sweetheart, and Wm. Stieff as the noble Zimar gives an exceptionally fine interpretation of the part. The work of William Roselle is also strikingly clever as the weak son of careless parents. The scene of the "gambling hell" through which Carl passes at the will of the mystic, as a cure for the card vice, is effectively portrayed, but rather improbable.

Matters in the Courts

Fox Enjoined in "The Two Orphans" Case—Biograph Stockholder Sues for Dividends—Stevenson vs.

Fox Injunction Granted.

Judge E. Henri Lacombe, sitting as trial judge in the equity branch of the Federal District Court, has granted the preliminary injunction sued out by Mrs. Kate E. Stevenson, better known as Kate Claxton, against William Fox and the Fox Film Corporation, to restrain the defendants from producing their version of the play of "The Two Orphans" as a photo feature play. In making the order, the court required the plaintiff to enter into an indemnifying bond of $2,500. The bond has been filed.

In a brief opinion discussing the issues raised by the bill in equity and the supporting and opposing affidavits, following a verbal argument, Judge Lacombe holds as follows:

The defendants undoubtedly had the right to make an independent translation of their own from the original French play, with such alterations, additions and modifications as their skill and ingenuity might suggest. But they had no right, in doing this, to transfer into their version any of the modifications and improvements which appear in the N. Hart Jackson version. The book in English from which defendants claimed to have prepared their version, which they assert was a novelization of the original French play does not appear in fact to have been so prepared. No evidence was submitted to support this contention. Some of Jackson's own matter appears in this book, this being in violation of the copyright of that play. In the absence of proof to the contrary it is fair to infer the book was made from the Jackson version.

Upon the question of the renewal of the copyright on which the plaintiff bases her claim, Judge Lacombe dismisses the contention of the defendants briefly, saying that the widow of Jackson was the proper person to apply for the renewal under the law as it then stood.

Judge Lacombe, in his opinion, held that there were some of Jackson's text, situations, etc., in the Fox version. These were not of large extent, however, and he directed—holding the plaintiff to be entitled to the injunction pending the suit—that this document be suspended for forty days to allow Fox to correct his play by eliminating all matter original with Jackson. He added that the time was sufficient for this purpose and also, as the record was very brief, it was time sufficient in which the defendant could prosecute his appeal should he desire to take the case up.

Later in the week, after further reflection, this opinion was modified by a second order granting the prayer as asked with the bond of indemnity made a condition precedent. The bond having been filed, the injunction issued at once.

Sues for Biograph Dividends.

A bill in equity has been filed in the United States District Court by Van Vorst, Marshall and Smith, 25 Broad street, as attorneys for Richard H. Staats, against the Biograph Company, for $27,500 dividends alleged to be due on 550 shares of the capital stock of the defendant company.

The bill alleges that Staats owns the stock mentioned and that it is of $55,000 par value. It alleges that all of the $2,000,000 of the capital stock of the Biograph Company, excepting $1,000, is outstanding. On December 28, 1914, the bill alleges, the Board of Directors declared a dividend of 50 per cent., payable February 1, 1915, in registered scrip certificates, with an agreement on the face thereof by the Biograph Company to convert them on or before December 31, 1916, at par without interest in part or wholly in cash, or wholly or in part at par, with such interest as might be thought proper by the company. Circulars were issued to all stockholders of record on December 28, 1914.

On August 10 last, without notice to any stockholders and without his consent, Staats alleges, the board met and passed a resolution purporting to rescind the order to pay dividends as set forth in the bill. He then alleges that on September 14 last, he made a formal demand on the Biograph Company for his scrip under the resolution providing for the 50 per cent. dividend. He says the company has a fund of undivided profits in excess of $1,000,000 and asks that it be required to pay him the sum claimed as accrued dividends on his stock.

Vanoscope in Voluntary Bankruptcy.

A petition in voluntary bankruptcy has been filed with the clerk of the United States District Court by the Vanoscope Company, of 220 West Forty-second street, this city, its principal offices. The corporation holds a charter under the laws of Delaware and is a manufacturer and developer of color motion picture. Liabilities are given as $1,007,861, with assets not estimated. The principal creditor mentioned in the petition is Joseph E. Merhardt, of the Manhattan building, Chicago, who has a suit for $1,000,000 for alleged breach of contract pending in the Cook County Superior Court.

Numbers of firms of lawyers have claims against the company for unnamed amounts, for services in the various litigations the bankrupt has been involved in. The assets consist of patent and copyrights, trademarks, models of motion picture machines of unknown value. John E. Harper, president of the concern, signed the petition.

Last spring William L. Robinson, a Chicago promoter, secured a judgment in the Federal Court here for $189,765, in a suit for breach of contract. Robinson sued on the ground that he had been ousted from the presidency of the Vanoscope Company through the alleged agencies of Lewis C. Van Riper, who holds many of the Vanoscope patents. No mention of this judgment as a possible liability is made in the petition.

Roland Bottomley Joins Kalem.

Foreign photoplay patrons will be delighted to hear that Roland Bottomley, the English star, has been added to the Kalem stock company. Mr. Bottomley has toured the English colonies and has a wide following in South Africa and Australia. He is featured in "The Net of Deceit," and will appear in the role of Rodolphe in Kalem's four-act production of the famous extravaganza, "The Black Crook."

Vignola Directing "Black Crook."

That exhibitors are looking forward to Kalem's four-act production of the famous extravaganza, "The Black Crook," with considerable anticipation, is evident from the letters received requesting information as to the release date of that subject. Director Robert G. Vignola is still hard at work upon "The Black Crook," and confidently expects it to be one of the best features ever produced by him.

Kerrigan in "Pennington's Legacy."

Under the direction of Otis Turner, J. Warren Kerrigan, who has returned to Universal City from Lake Tahoe is working in the title role of Meredith Nicholson's serial story, "Pennington's Legacy," a five reel drama. Bert Grasby, Lois Wilson, Maude George, Harry Carter, G. A. Williams and Mary Talbot support Kerrigan in this picture.

Arrow to Produce for Pathe

Contract Calls for Gold Rooster Features and Short Subjects, to Be Issued on Regular Program.

ANOTHER producing company, the Arrow Film Corporation, 71 West Twenty-third street, has been added to the list of concerns making pictures for release on the Pathe program. A contract was signed last week, calling for four and five reel subjects to be released as Gold Rooster features, also for one, two and three-reel pictures that will be handled by Pathe under various brand names.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow company, has engaged Howell Hansel as director-in-chief of all productions. Mr. Hansel, who directed "The Million Dollar Mystery," will devote his immediate attention to the casting and staging of the first Arrow pictures for Pathe release. He has secured as his assistant A. F. Mayo, who has been successfully identified with the many of Mr. Hansel's big productions.

Howell Hansel.

The Yonkers studio of the Standard Film Print Corporation has been leased by Mr. Shallenberger. Upon the inauguration of picture-taking, which will be in about a week, Mr. Hansel will make his headquarters almost entirely in the studios. The executive offices of the corporation will remain, for a while, at 71 West Twenty-third street. Later on they will be moved uptown.

Internationally famous stars of the stage and of the screen will be seen in forthcoming Arrow releases. The stories will be written by the best-known and most capable authors and playwrights of America. These stories will be put in scenario form under the plan devised by Mr. Shallenberger for the perfect co-ordination of all units of production, collaboration by story-author, scenario writer and director.

The scenario, advertising, and publicity departments will be in charge of Albert S. Levine, secretary and treasurer of the Arrow company.

DETROIT KRITERION IS WELL EQUIPPED.

When the Detroit Kriterion Film Service, Inc., was organized, it became apparent that no expense would be spared to make their offices the most complete, and their employes picked from the best, making a very desirable combination to handle the Associated program. The corporation has as its chief executives, Mr. Otto Seestedt, president; Mr. Charles Wesch, secretary and treasurer, and Ralph E. Peckham, vice-president and general manager, who knows the moving picture game from all angles, the last two named having been part owners in the Universal Film company's Detroit and Toledo offices.

The Detroit office of this company takes in three floors as follows: Main floor has general offices, supply room, inspecting and shipping room. Practically all woodwork being fumed oak with furniture to match. Private exchange, two trunks and seven branch lines. Second floor is equipped with sixty foot exhibition room, decorated with flowers and finished with color scheme of ivory and gold. Stage being nine feet with three dressing rooms, shadow box set off with little blue lights among flowers. Along both sides of room are 6's and 3's of latest releases. The floor of this room is matched wood for dancing. One hundred and fifty people can be seated comfortably in projection room. At front on same floor is large comfortable room for directors. The third floor is for all advertising matter with fully equipped mounting room.

The Toledo office has ground floor location and is also complete in every detail. Both offices are centrally located.

"STINGAREE" (Kalem).

Such excellent progress has been made upon the production work of "Stingaree" that the first episode of this new Kalem series has already been completed and the second is now well under way.

James Horne, the director responsible for "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," is producing "Stingaree," and that it is a labor of love is evident from the manner in which this Kalem series has taken hold of him. A story which has drifted East from Kalem's Glendale (Cal.) studios, will serve to illustrate.

According to the story, Mr. Horne was to have attended a dinner given in his honor. The hour set for the function drew nigh but, to the dismay of the friends who had planned the affair, the chief guest had yet to present an appearance. A phone message to his home revealed the fact that Mr. Horne was still at the studio.

Forthwith, a committee leaped into an auto and broke all speed laws in getting out to Glendale. The men arrived just as Horne was rehearsing one of the "Stingaree" scenes. Confronted by the committee, the Kalem producer stared blankly at them for a moment or two, until the reason for their presence dawned upon him. Then, with profuse apologies, Horne turned back to the stage, finished the scenes, hustled into his "soup-and-fish" clothes and left for the dinner!

But Horne is not the only Kalemite who is throwing himself into "Stingaree" with all his heart and soul. True Boardman, if possible, is even more enthusiastic about the series—and with good reason.

Mr. Boardman is enacting the title role and part of his enthusiasm is due to the fact that in playing "Stingaree," one of his keenest ambitions is being realized. Long ago, when the "Western" drama was at the height of its popularity, Boardman read E. W. Hornung's novel, upon which the Kalem series is based, and immediately saw its tremendous motion picture possibilities. The record price demanded for this subject, however, precluded all possibility of his appearing in the role until he joined Kalem company.

A cast of unusual strength and containing some of the foremost Kalem stars, is supporting Mr. Boardman. Paul Hurst, who long ago won the appellation as "The best bad man in motion pictures," appears as the ruffian Howie, Stingaree's opposite. Mr. Hurst and Mr. Boardman are shown in the accompanying illustration as they appear in their respective roles. Others in the cast are Ollie Kirkby, Marin Sais, Thomas Lingham, Frank Jonasson, etc.

"Stingaree" will be issued at weekly intervals in the form of twelve two-act episodes. Each of these subjects will be complete in itself and, in accordance with the Kalem policy of providing exhibitors with the best in feature attractions at no extra cost, will be issued in regular service.

W. C. Harwood of the Vermont theater, Toronto, Canada, is generous in his praise for the Knickerbocker Star Feature, "Hamlet." He writes: "The feature was very beautiful, splendidly produced and a great success at our theater."

"THE VENTURES OF MARGUERITE" (Kalem).

Although the fact that Marguerite Courtot is being featured in "The Ventures of Marguerite" naturally makes this new Kalem series of interest to photoplay patrons in general, it is to the ladies that these single reel dramas will present an especial appeal.

The reason for this is not hard to find. By special arrangement with Russek, of Fifth avenue, these famous modistes will costume Miss Courtot for every episode in "The Ventures of Marguerite." Possibly the foremost authority on fashions in the country, Russek number among their patrons some of the most prominent members of the "Four Hundred."

Scene from "When Appearances Deceive" (Kalem).

Consequently, because the clothes worn by the dainty little Kalem star will embody the latest of Dame Fashion's dictums, "The Ventures of Marguerite" will be closely followed and studied by every feminine photoplay "fan," from New York to the tiniest hamlet in the country. The resultant advertising value, as every exhibitor will realize, is tremendous.

It must not be imagined, however, that the "Ventures" will consist merely of a succession of fashion pictures. This is far from being the case. As a matter of fact, it is declared by Kalem company that this series will contain some of the strongest single-reel dramas ever issued by it.

As heiress to a large fortune, Marguerite, the heroine of the series, is well able to gratify her love for beautiful clothes. It is therefore in keeping with the character that the costumes worn by the Kalem star shall express the newest and best in the realms of fashion. At the same time, while the "fashion feature," of the series is naturally of importance and will be regarded with the utmost interest by the ladies, every episode will be of sufficient strength to engross the attention of every "mere man" who sees it.

"When Appearances Deceive," the first episode of "The Ventures of Marguerite," will be released by Kalem on Friday, October 29. The succeeding episodes will be issued every Friday. Incidentally, in an effort to assist exhibitors who desire to advertise this series strongly, Kalem will issue one, three and six-sheet, four-color lithographs for each episode.

"THE LITTLE DETECTIVE" (Cub Comedy).

In his exploits in the Cub Comedies, Jerry, the principal character in all the releases played by George Ovey, has undertaken a good many different jobs, carrying them on with dubious success. The latest picture, "The Little Detective," which is to be released October 22 on the Mutual program, shows him in another line of endeavor—that of detective—and while more success attends his crook-herding efforts than some of his other wage-earning attempts, never before did he fall so short of attaining his ultimate object as in this case.

The fashionable Ferndale residential section having been terrorized by a series of robberies, Jerry with his partner Hank obtains a job as detective to guard the house against intrusion. Jerry doesn't care much for the job itself because it involves too much risk for his well being, but it gives him a chance to be near pretty Goldie, whom he admires, so he is willing to undergo the ordeal which the job carries. Events turn about very much as Jerry expected. A burglar does enter the house. But Jerry surprises even himself by capturing him. For his reward Jerry suggests that he be permitted to marry Goldie. His surprise and disappointment may be imagined when he learns that the pride of his eye is already married.

As treated by the Cub Comedy company with George Ovey the story has been whipped into a series of laughs. The entire cast besides Ovey and including George George, Louis FitsRoy, Jefferson Osborne, Goldie Colwell and Janet Sully do effective work. Milton Fahrney directed.

LAURA HOPE CREWS AS A CROOK.

Those who enjoyed the wonderful art of this clever actress, Laura Hope Crews, in the Lasky-Belasco production of "The Fighting Hope" are to have an opportunity to see her again as an entirely different type of woman in "Blackbirds," the latest Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company release through Paramount Pictures Corp. on Oct. 14.

In "Blackbirds" Miss Crew plays the clever queen of a band of crooks who operate all over the world. When this play was presented at the Lyceum theater, in New York, Miss Crews scored a dramatic triumph as the star of the production in the same role in which she will be seen on the screen.

THIRD CENTAUR STANLEY PICTURE.

The third of the "Stanley's Adventures in Africa" series which David Horsley is picturizing in the two reel Centaur Features with the Bostock animals, is called "The White King of the Zaras," and is released October 28 on the Mutual program.

HOW AUTO PICTURES ARE TAKEN.

To the man acquainted with picture studios the ways and means of making pictures of action going on in moving autos is so familiar that he seldom pauses to give the matter a thought. Judging from comments heard in picture audiences, however, there seems to be a very hazy idea in the mind of the average layman as to how this thing is done.

The accompanying illustration shows how Al Cawood, cameraman for Horace Davey's second Nestor comedy company, achieves the desired result. The platform on which Cawood and Director Davey stand is firmly braced in position. The camera is focused, the action rehearsed with the car standing still, and then, when all is in readiness, the word is given to "shoot." Immediately the car gets under way and Cawood starts turning his little crank making pictures of the action going on in the car. The rope which is seen dangling from the radiator cap is used by the cameraman to steady himself against ruts and chuck holes while riding with his back to the road.

"BUCK'S LADY FRIEND" (Mustang).

Into a motion picture studio comes a woman—the friend of Buck. She comes at his invitation to see him "act," and inspired by the machinations of others he does some acting not on the program. This is the second of the famous stories written by Charles E. Van Loan, and the delightful fun of the author has been accurately and effectively transferred to the screen.

It is a pleasant satire on the vanity of a leading man, and a fun-filled recital of what his associates do to him when they discover he has a lady friend. There is none of the slap-stick, rough-and-tumble style of comedy; but just deliciously delectable humor of the human kind, pictured in a manner all can understand.

Scene from "Buck's Lady Friend" (Mustang).

When she appears on the scene and finds her "lover" all togged up as an early English knight, her heart goes out to him, but is intercepted by another leading man who begins an immediate conquest—and wins. This is a setting for funny situations.

Buck loses his friend, but he succeeds in landing a terrific blow on his rival's jaw before the latter is enabled to get away with his prize. Incidentally, he learns a lesson about women, for there is just a touch of homely philosophy in Buck's undoing.

"Buck's Lady Friend" will be released October 23 in three reels under the Mustang brand.

"THE BLOOD OF OUR BROTHERS" (Centaur).

The grimness of war, its devastating consequences and the fallacy of its purpose is the basis of "The Blood of Our Brothers," an allegorical war drama which David Horsley will release October 27 as a Centaur Star Feature through the Mutual program.

The story, which is written by Crane Wilbur and is picturized in three parts, is heralded as the most forceful plea against war and the most powerful appeal for universal peace ever projected by means of motion pictures.

Scene from "The Blood of Our Brothers" (Centaur).

Treated in allegory, the story cannot be said to hold a brief for any of the factions now concerned in the European conflict. The country in which the scenes of the play are laid, the period of time, the costumes of the characters and the characters themselves have no connection with present situations. As the picture is produced, the locale is identical with no particular country and the characters are typical of no nation. The only and quite commendable mission of the picture is to point out the futility of war.

Besides the strength of the moral of the story, the picture carries a picturesqueness because of its symbolic treatment. The principal characters are Kindheart, a shepherd, played by Crane Wilbur; Devotion, his wife, Celia Santon; Infirmity, her father, Ed. Collins; Valor, her brother, Carl Von Schiller; Loot, a soldier, Victor Rottman, and Lust, another soldier, Harry DeRoy. The charm coming from this sort of handling may readily be imagined.

Many unusual sets and ensembles have been conceived by Director Arthur Maude and the picture promises something exceptional in three reel productions for regular program service.

"SHOULD A WIFE FORGIVE" (Equitable).

"The Lady of Perfume," in which Lillian Lorraine makes her first appearance in a really important feature picture, and which was produced for Equitable by Horkheimer Brothers, has been renamed "Should a Wife Forgive," which is a more appropriate title for the powerful story told in the production.

"Should a Wife Forgive" will be released by Equitable, through World Film, November 8.

Lillian Lorraine, in her first feature work, gives ample evidence of her ability to portray highly emotional roles. Her part, that of La Belle Rose, a cabaret singer, whose attractive personality weans a young husband away from his home and family. The young husband becomes entranced with La Belle Rose and finally borrows ten thousand dollars from his wife to exploit Rose in a play. The night the play opens, the husband supposedly leaves town, but his wife, who attends the theater, sees him back stage and suspecting his intimacy with La Belle Rose, follows up her suspicions and proves them. The young husband, who met Rose through an admirer, is attacked by his friend, who is jealous of him, and La Belle Rose is fatally injured in the affray.

Scene from "Should a Wife Forgive" (Equitable).

The young wife, learning of her spouse's infatuation, orders him from her home, La Belle Rose denounces the gay life for that of a nun, her admirer disappears, while the young husband, alone starts life over again, to win back the true love of his wife.

Many of the sets were staged at the homes of Miss Lorraine's friends at Long Beach and Pasadena, Cal., the result being a series of elaborate views, surrounding highly intense dramatic action.

"Should a Wife Forgive" is in five acts and four hundred scenes and required the better part of eleven weeks to complete.

"TWO SPOT JOE" (Banner).

E. Forrest Tayor, the new star of the Flying "A," a specialty chosen to portray Western types, distinguished himself in the title role of "Two Spot Joe," a double-reel Banner Feature, released on the regular Mutual program October 15. The story has a Bret Harte flavor, and shows the regeneration of a gambler and desperado through his love for the abandoned wife of Tom Carroll, a dissolute claim jumper. Anna Little famous for her brunette beauty and her wonderful work in western pictures, impersonates Jennie Carroll. Jack Richardson and Louise Lester, established American favorites, make up the balance of a strong cast.

Leon Kent has completed the production of a three-reel story by Max Genaski and Harvey Gates, entitled "Stumbling." Agnes Vernon, Ray Hanford, Jack Livingston, Malcolm Blevins, Constance Johnson and Edwin Clarke play the leading roles.

"COMRADE JOHN" (Pathe Gold Rooster Play).

"Comrade John," the novel by Samuel Merwin and Henry K. Webster, has been put into a motion picture for Pathe. Readers of the book will remember that in it the authors exposed the folly of the various freak religious cults and showed that too often they were used as a source of profit to their founders. In "Comrade John," Herman Stein, a character strongly reminiscent of the notorious Alexander Dowie, is the founder of a sect whose motto is "beauty through toil." Through his great ability and utter unscrupulousness he has induced many persons to subscribe to his enterprise and has finally even enlisted the support of Wall Street capital, a tribute to the commercialization of his cult. He employs John Chance, a brilliant architect, to lay out for him a "dream city" which by its exceeding beauty shall advertise the new religion all over the world. Through the one weak spot in Stein's armor, his fondness for women and his unmoral attitude toward them the great organization he has built crashes around his ears and he is a ruined, discredited man.

Scene from "Comrade John" (Pathe).

In the Pathe picturization of this unusual story, William Elliott, who is one of Broadway's cleverest leading men, takes the part of John Chance. Ruth Roland, one of the best known of motion picture stars, plays Cynthia, the girl for love of whom Stein ruins himself. Lewis J. Cody plays Herman Stein. The Balboa Amusement Corporation, who made the picture in California, deserves great credit for the sumptuous way in which they produced the picture. The acting is beyond cavil—being convincing from every member of the cast. The fire scenes in which the temple of the cult is burnt down are most impressive.

"Comrade John" will win its way with every audience as a feature of unusual merit. It is put out as a Gold Rooster play. and will be released October 29.

"THE CARD PLAYERS" (Rialto).

A lesson to parents may be found in the great Rialto Star Feature picture which will be released on the Mutual program October 20, entitled "The Card Players." Parents who are setting a bad example to their children by the inordinate playing of cards will find something worth knowing in this picture. William Roselle, Lucille Taft, Charles U. Travis and Maudie Orlamond play great drama in "The Card Players."

"ELAINE" MAKES WONDERFUL SHOWING IN ENGLAND.

The British Isles are in the throes of the hottest advertising campaign that has ever been attempted there. Pathe's big American serial successes, "The Exploits of Elaine," "The New Exploits of Elaine," and the "Romance of Elaine," are taking the British exhibitors by storm, aided by a truly remarkable use of newspapers, billboards and other methods of publicity.

Three months ago W. A. S. Douglas, formerly "serial" manager for Pathe in this country, was sent by Mr. Charles Pathe to London with the prints of "Elaine." To Mr. Douglas is largely due the extraordinary newspaper co-operation which is being given. The "News of the World," the largest newspaper in the world with a circulation of over 2,000,000, was induced to run the stories of "Elaine" in its Sunday edition. Through its allied newspapers the stories will appear all over Great Britain. The arrangements with all these papers were made upon the basis of the entire number of thirty-six stories.

The publicity campaign was started six weeks before the date of release of the pictures—October 18. Special ten hour trade shows were held in all the large cities of the United Kingdom at which the entire first fourteen episodes were put upon the screen. At intervals the projection was stopped and the exhibitors listened to speeches on the publicity program and other topics of vital interest. Refreshments of an elaborate kind were served at these showings, and the bookings obtained by the viewing of the pictures alone amounted to sixty-five prints. After the newspaper campaign was started twenty additional prints were necessary making the remarkable total of eighty-five prints.

BIG STORM SCENE IN CENTAUR FEATURE.

In "The White King of the Zaras," a two reel Centaur Feature with Bostock animals and Captain Jack Bonavita the principals in the cast, which is to be released October 28 on the Mutual program, a sand and rain storm scene has been obtained that is said to be the most realistic thing of the kind ever attempted in motion pictures.

Elaborate arrangements were made for this spectacle. The locale is laid in Africa, the picture being the third of the "Stanley's Adventures in Africa" series, which is now being carried on in the Centaur Features. There was constructed an African village of straw huts, in the foreground of which Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, is encamped in a tent. The terrific storm, accompanied by high winds, strikes the village without warning at night when every inhabitant is asleep. The huts rock in the gale and the frightened natives come pouring forth and flee in all directions. Stanley (Roy Watson) and his followers endeavor to buffet the angry elements but are blinded by the grit of the nearby desert, the effect resembling the famous Santa Annas of southern California, when the velocity of the wind causes giant clouds of fine earth to rise and obscure the sun.

The huts are blown down and the rain falls in mighty torrents. The Stanley party and the natives fight desperately to save themselves. The tornado passes and the sand settles revealing a scene of desolation.

"IDOLS OF CLAY" (Universal).

Robert Leonard has just written a three-reel drama entitled "Idols of Clay," which will be produced by him at the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Company in the near future. Miss Ella Hall will play the leading feminine role in this production, that of a twelve-year-old girl, and Leonard himself will play the part of a lonesome man who lives next door.

HAZEL DAWN STARS IN "MASQUERADERS"
(Famous Players).

Henry Arthur Jones' internationally celebrated drama, "The Masqueraders," which has just been converted into a photoplay feature by the Famous Players Film Company with Hazel Dawn in the stellar role, will be released on the Paramount program October 28. It is the story of a high spirited, beautiful girl who finds herself compelled to become a bar-maid at the local inn when the wolf of poverty hovers near the family doorstep.

Picturesquely set in the atmosphere of Merrie England, "The Masqueraders" gives Hazel Dawn the best opportunity she has had since becoming a screen star for displaying her histrionic talent. As a light-hearted, care-free girl, she suddenly faces the serious problem of self-support. She is the life of the inn while she remains there, her charming vivacity winning her innumerable friends. Then comes the terrible revelation of her husband's real character and the suffering that follows, which reaches its final culmination in the gripping scenes of the game of chance in which she is the stake. Only a most accomplished actress could interpret the vastly differentiated emotions to which Dulcie is subjected. That Miss Dawn more than fulfills the requirements of the role will be the verdict of those who witness her talented performance as Dulcie.

Scene from "The Masqueraders" (Famous Players).

In support of the star there appear such well known stage and screen favorites as Elliott Dexter, Frank Losee, Ida Darling, and Russell Bassett, who has contributed many clever characterizations to the screen.

CHRONICLES OF BLOOM CENTER—"SHOO FLY" (Selig).

"Shoo Fly," in two parts, is the second of the highly successful Selig comedy series, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center." "Shoo Fly" will be released Monday, October 25. The same characters which disported in "Landing the Hose Reel," the preliminary release of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," will be seen in "Shoo Fly," including Constable Plum, Postmaster Pash, Druggist Phil Pickle, Johnny West, the printer's devil, Chubby Green, Bloom Center's bad boy, Miss Selina Tubbs, a maiden lady of uncertain years, and the militant Mrs. Plum, who keeps an everwatchful eye upon her officious spouse.

Scene from "Shoo Fly" (Selig).

Prof. Trapp and his wife arrive in Bloom Center to sell fly traps and fly swatters. A "fly-swatting" campaign is immediately decided upon. The Professor and his wife give a stereopticon entertainment in Melodeon Hall, showing the dangers of the common house fly. It is decided that prizes be awarded to the catchers of the most flies.

Jim Billings, commercial traveler, arrives in Bloom Center and suffering from indigestion, is given paris green by mistake. The judges in the "fly-swatting" campaign leave their work and rush to Billings' aid. While they are reviving him, the clerk dumps all the dead flies into a garbage can. Jim Billings recovering kills three flies and places them in a fly trap. When he encounters the judges his three flies are more than anyone else has, and he captures all the prizes.

There is an abundance of wholesome comedy contained in this second of the "Bloom Center" releases. The rural village of "Bloom Center" erected by Mr. Selig for this series again figures in the action, and the comedy is sure to incite unaffected merriment.

"THE TURN OF THE ROAD" (Vitagraph).

When the Vitagraph Company began the production of their Blue Ribbon Features, they set a standard for the stories to be filmed that called for originality, interest, action and pictorial, scenic and costume accuracy, each story to be enacted by a picked cast of Vitagraph players. In addition, each picture must contain a series of punches that culminate in a tremendous climax. In "The Turn of the Road," a powerful drama of life by Isabel M. Johnston, they found a story that fully met all these requirements and in its production, Director Tefft Johnson has succeeded in transferring to the screen the author's conception of the story's possibilities. The action of "The Turn of the Road" builds up to this scene, which forms a breath-taking climax and Director Johnson has added that deft touch of artistry in its production that lifts it to a plane that stamps the picture a masterpiece. It is a screen story in five parts that is not only exceptional because of its story, but doubly attractive in its enactment, the leading characters being portrayed by such distinguished players as Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers, Bobby Connelly and Robert Gaillard.

Scene from "The Turn of the Road" (Vitagraph).

TERRISS PICTURES BEING WIDELY BOOKED.

"The Pearl of the Antilles" and "The Flame of Passion" are being extensively booked by the branch offices of the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc. These are the two big dramatic photoplays which were made by Tom Terriss and his associates in the Terriss Feature Film Co. some months ago in Jamaica, West Indies. The beauty of the scenery caught by the camera, it is said, is adding greatly to the "pull" of each of the subjects. "The Pearl" is based upon "The Sword of Honor," a play in which both Tom Terriss and his father, William Terriss, scored throughout England and the North American continent. "The Flame of Passion" is attractive not only because of the opportunities given Mr. Terriss, but also because of the appearance in it of Elaine Terriss in the role of a "Vampire woman," a part in which she has excelled on the legitimate stage for many years.

LASKY PRODUCES "THE CHORUS LADY."

"The Chorus Lady," James Forbes' amusing and dramatic play, which has been a sensation of the American stage for years, has been presented in practically every country in the civilized world, has been picturized with an all-star cast by the Jesse L. Lasky company. Attempts were made to secure this play by practically every motion picture company in the United States, until the author finally accepted the offer of the Lasky organization.

An especially selected all-star cast was secured to present this splendid comedy. Cleo Ridgely, the well-known star, who has appeared in the Lasky productions of "Stolen Goods," "The Puppet Crown," "The Secret Sin," "The Marriage of Kitty," and other plays, was decided upon as the proper artist to portray the character of Patricia O'Brien, the Chorus Lady. Marjorie Daw, the clever 14-year old protegee of Geraldine Farrar, who scored such a success in support of Charlotte Walker, in the Lasky production of "Out of Darkness," will be seen as the younger and stage-struck sister, Nora. Wallace Reid, the distinguished young actor, who was secured by the Lasky company to appear as leading man for Geraldine Farrar, will be seen as "Danny," the young detective in love with Pat. The remainder of the large cast is composed of the principal members of the Lasky all-star stock company.

BANNER BUSY.

The Banner Motion Picture company is busy producing one and two reel comedies at the Liberty Studios in San Mateo, Cal. Among recent one-reel comedies finished are "Brave Bill," "Eliminating Archibald," "Teasing Tiny," "The Cook's Count," "Bill and Pill at the Dairy."

Bill Stinger, featured in Banner comedies, is well known through his monthly magazine "Stung." He writes a great many of the Banner comedies and as he weighs three hundred and fifty pounds he claims the distinction of being the biggest man in pictures. The Banner has just finished filming "Tenderfoot Sand," a western poem written by Bill.

The Banner is a closed corporation consisting of Miss Sadie Lindblom, president; R. H. Mouser, vice-president; Charles Anderson, secretary and treasurer, and Le Roy P. Swaine, scenario editor. Its product is released through the Associated Service.

"ALONE IN THE CITY OF SIGHS AND TEARS" (MinA).

Reel melodrammer is presented in "Alone in the City of Sighs and Tears," the MinA release of October 14. It is a novelty offering in the way of real burlesque beginning back on the farm and ending in the big city where full play is allowed trick photography in showing the difference in speed between the rural villagers and the high pressure city folks. Rena Rogers, Russ Powell and Harry Fisher take the leads and get away with a bunch of laughs. Rena, as the simple country gal, is lured to the wicked, heartless city by Harry, the sleek city chap. Russ, her country lover, follows, saves the girl and routs the villain. The production is directed by William McCully and is said to be something new in comedy. Released October 14.

Scene from "Alone in the City of Sighs and Tears" (MinA).

"THE PENALTY" (Reliance).

"The Penalty," Reliance feature written and produced by Ray Meyers, one of the D. W. Griffith assistants, is a pretty love story, filmed in Los Angeles and the desert region east of that enterprising film city. Eugene Pallette and Lillian Webster have the principal roles.

Pallette plays the character in the feature known as The Boy; Lillian Webster is known as The Girl. The story begins with an abortive romance between the two. The two are riding along a mountain trail when the boy's horse becomes frightened and runs away. She is left alone. To pass away the time she tries to pluck flowers which grow far down the edge of the cliff. She falls and saves herself from going into the abyss only by clinging to the scanty vegetation. A surveyor sees the girl in her perilous position through his telescope. He rescues her. Eventually the friendship thus begun ripens into love and they take one another for better or worse. The boy feels that his own sweetheart has been won away from him.

Scene from "The Penalty" (Reliance).

The young wife's mother is stricken with a fatal illness. In order to get to her mother's home it is necessary for the wife to cross a vast desert. Her husband, the surveyor, goes with her. During the journey they are caught in a sand storm. They are also attacked by Indians. The boy had followed them, determined to assist in the destruction of the man, but when he sees them engaged with the Indians he goes to their aid. His unselfish acts of heroism make a man of him.

Other principals in addition to Eugene Pallette and Lillian Webster are R. J. Howles, who plays the surveyor, and A. Witting.

"THE SEVENTH MOON" (Mutual).

There are several features of more than usual interest in connection with the forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, "The Seventh Moon," which will be released through all Mutual exchanges on November 4.

In the first place, the scenario is an adaptation of the well known book, "The Seventh Moon," by Frederick Orin Bartlett, published by Small, Maynard & Co., of Boston. The story has been put in scenario form by Mrs. Catherine Carr. Ernest Glendinning plays the leading role. Miss Winifred Kingston appears as Ellen Arsdale. "The Seventh Moon" is full of excitement and human interest.

UNIVERSAL AT ELECTRICAL EXPOSITION.

The Universal Film Manufacturing company and Universal moving pictures were paid a tribute last week when the management of the Electrical Exposition and Motor Show requested this company to take charge of the moving picture show which is an attractive part of the exposition now being held at the Grand Central Palace in New York.

The Universal is the only company showing films at the exposition and it has a unique moving picture palace on the third floor of the Grand Central Palace. The outside is gaily decorated with pennants and beautiful photographs of the Universal stars and handsome souvenirs are being given away, such as post cards, with pictures of Universal actors and actresses, copies of the "Universal Fox Trot," Joe Rosey's latest musical hit, and also copies of the "Universal City March," written by Charles Arthur.

"THE ROSE OF THE MISTY POOL" (California).

One of the big features now scheduled for early release is "The Rose of the Misty Pool" produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation immediately following "Salvation Nell." It was completed just before present activities were begun on "The Unwritten Law," the picture rights to which were recently purchased by the California producers from the author, Edwin Milton Royle.

There are at least two points of merit that promise to direct more than the usual interest to "The Rose of the Misty Pool." The first is the fact that Miss Beatriz Michelena is the star of the production, and the second the original authorship of the scenario by Charles Kenyon, whose immediate fame on Broadway is very great, since it was he who wrote the tremendous stage success, "Husband and Wife." This play has just opened at the Forty-eighth Street theater and promises to have the longest run of any drama that has come to New York for many months. Mr. Kenyon is likewise author of Margaret Illington's "Kindling."

Reports from the Pacific Coast declare Miss Michelena delightful in the role of "Rose." The story is of San Francisco society and is based on the true history of the rise to wealth of some of the leading families of the California metropolis.

"BEACHED AND BLEACHED" (MinA).

"Beached and Bleached" is the title of a clever one-reel comedy which Director Louis M. Chaudet has just completed, featuring Smiling Bill Parsons and Constance Talmadge. It shows Parsons as a stock broker, strong for the feminine sex, and his meeting with grief through the wily actions of his wise new stenographer, Miss Talmadge. Every expectation in the way of lovemaking is turned to misfortune for him—the situations, chiefly at a beach resort, being shown in a dream. The release date is October 21.

PHOTO DRAMA'S UNIQUE PICTURE.

The Kulee Feature Film Corporation has taken twelve of the biggest, most popular American stars and has featured them all in one and the same picture—never been done before. The name of this latest moving picture novelty is "How Molly Made Good." And side by side in equal spotlight array in this feature film stand the electric names of Leo Ditrichstein, Henrietta Crosman, Robert Edeson, May Robson, Julian Eltinge, Mabel Fenton, Charles Ross, Julia Dean, Cyril Scott, and Mme. Fjorde. It is needless to add that the salary list for these stars, gauged by their actual commercial value as set by the various moving picture firms, stands at the $83,500 mark.

Burns Mantle, present-day dramatic critic on the New York Evening Mail, is responsible for the scenario of this novel film, and he has shown himself most ingenious in the handling of the stellar problem. For after all, role plays a very vital part in the making or the breaking of an actor. The extraordinary part about "How Molly Made Good" is that not one of the stars featured in it is called upon to play maid, chauffeur or anything else beneath his dignity and possibilities. Each and every star's part is balanced with the other eleven, so that the wolf of temperament has been given no opportunity to howl outside the director's door. Mr. Mantle has very cleverly solved the star and temperament problem by having these celebrities play just themselves and their own personalities in the picture. "How Molly Made Good" is not hung on the usual hinges of picture melodrama. It is a novelty known as a plot of personality. Each star is given equal opportunity to exploit his own particular personal appeal to best advantage; each and all pictured just as they are in real life.

Miss Marguerite Gale, a very pretty newcomer in the world of screen stardom, plays the role of Molly. The cast includes W. A. Williams, Helen Hilton, John Reedy, James Bagley, Edward Sullivan, Armand Cortes, and William Tooker. Lawrence B. McGill, a well known picture director, staged the play. Credit for the excellence of all the technical detail and photography belongs to William Steiner, a pioneer of long standing in the moving picture field.

MUTUAL HAS "ENTERTAINMENT THERMOMETER."

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual has just put into operation an effective system for accurate reports on what individual pictures on the new program are doing for the exhibitor. From cities and towns served by the Mutual's sixty-eight branch offices reports are made by exhibitors directly and confidentially to Mr. Freuler. By turning to a special file of daily reports the man who guides the make-up of the Mutual's program can tell on the instant how the exhibitor is prospering or failing to prosper with any particular release in any part of the country. The daily reports give Mr. Freuler data on the program used by the house on each day. The attendance afternoon and evening, the weather, the advertising used by the house and the same data for the corresponding day of the year before.

"These reports give me a finger on the pulse of the public and a sort of thermometer for the temperature of the trade," observed Mr. Freuler. "The exhibitor can expect to see the program continually being built up with the films which this system proves are making money as box office attractions, and anything that falls down in this test of public opinion will disappear in a hurry."

ARE INTERESTED IN "PAPA'S WIFE."

The Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., are about to close a contract for a particularly attractive line of consecutive bookings on "Papa's Wife" in New York City and vicinity. Representatives of some of the biggest renters in the metropolis have seen the release and are greatly pleased with it, they say.

"Papa's Wife," it will be recalled, is the new two-reel comedy with which Tom Terriss, well known legitimate actor, is making his bow before the photoplay public as a director of screen comedies. Mr. Terriss has, of course, made a number of feature pictures, at the head of the Terriss Feature Film company, but the releases prior to "Papa's Wife" have all been heavily dramatic in their nature. "The Pearl of the Antilles" and "The Flame of Passion" are the most recent dramas by the Terriss company which are going the rounds of the various Picture Playhouse branch offices at the present time.

"Papa's Wife," Mr. Terriss believes, because it is clean, refined and funny because of legitimate situations and not because of slapstick antics, is the kind of comedy which the exhibitor of today wants. It is said to be the first of a number of high class comedy releases which are to be made by the Terriss company within the next few months.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" ON THE ISTHMUS.

W. H. Rudolph, eastern representative of F. O. Neilsen, of Chicago, received an urgent cablegram from Panama to allow "Guarding Old Glory," Mr. Neilsen's big patriotic picture, to be shown there to Uncle Sam's boys as soon as possible. Mr. Rudolph lost no time in complying with this request, and "Guarding Old Glory" will be seen throughout the Isthmus beginning next week.

This picture is now in its third week at the Strand theater, where it is given a rousing reception at every performance by enthusiastic audiences.

All territory is now sold with the exception of Louisiana, Oklahoma and Arkansas. W. E. Greene, who had already purchased Greater New York and New York State, also closed for New England.

M. H. Blackwell, of Blackwell's Enterprises, Pittsburgh, Pa., purchased western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, these two deals being closed through the New York office. Iowa was purchased by H. K. Ward, of Granville, Iowa, through the Chicago office.

"Guarding Old Glory" is said to have sold faster than any picture this year.

Notes of the Trade

ROBERT WHITWORTH, the well-known English actor, is the latest recruit from the legtimate stage to join the ranks of film stars, having recently been engaged by the Vitagraph company. Mr. Whitworth will be remembered for his appearances with Nazimova in "Bella Donna," and with Phyllis Nielson-Terry in "The Adventure of Lady Ursula." His first part as a screen actor will be in "Wasted Lives," a three-part society drama by Ouida Bergere, upon which Director Theodore Marston is now at work for the Vitagraph company.

Censors Carmen Scene

Pennsylvania State Board of Censors Finds Fight Between Carmen (Geraldine Farrar) and Cigarette Girls Improper—Orders It Cut to a Flash—One Other Scene Cut—A Well Censored State.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

GERALDINE FARRAR has shocked the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors. Furthermore, the prima donna, 5,000 feet of her, in fact, was introduced in the Court of Common Pleas here as evidence in her own behaif. Pennsylvania's Board of Motion Picture Censors has declared Miss Farrar's acting in certain portions of "Carmen" to be shocking and improper.

Andreas Dippel, opera impresario, was one of the witnesses in the hearing. He declared he had seen Miss Farrar in the photoplay "Carmen" on October 1, last, in Boston, where the play was shown in its entirety. It has passed the censors in New York and Chicago and other large centers.

"The film version," said Mr. Dippel, "gives Miss Farrar opportunities for acting and interpreting the role which the opera version would not permit because of the limitations of the opera stage and the music. I considered her acting in the film 'Carmen' a beautiful artistic achievement."

The Pennsylvania censors have ordered that a fight scene between Carmen and the cigarette girls be shortened to a few feet only. They have also shortened a duel between Carmen's lovers.

TWO-DOLLAR SHOWS AT GRAND STREET OPERA HOUSE.

A formal opening of the Chestnut street opera house for the productions of the Triangle films took place on Tuesday, October 5. Likewise it introduced a $2 program. It may be added that a satisfactory audience appeared to be well pleased.

Many favorable comments were to be heard regarding the artistic blending of decorating effects. Everything is of a pleasant neutral gray, with the exception of the red of the seats, which are new and plump and the rows far enough apart to make passage easier than in any other theater in this city. Music was furnished throughout the entire program by a twenty-five piece orchestra, which sat behind gray hangings effectively set off by the red and green triangles.

The question of $2 moving picture shows is still open for argument in Philadelphia, and it remains very doubtful as to whether or no the good citizens of the Quaker City will patronize an institution charging such admission. The Chestnut street opera house will prove a fine experiment and the outcome of this latest venture in moving picture circles is being watched with great interest.

A FINE SHOWING.

The Orpheum theater, at Lehigh, controlled by the Fourth Street Theater Company, under the direction of Harold Heiberger, has certainly proven to be a huge success. Through the efforts of Mr. Heiberger the patronage of the theater has been trebled within the past six or seven months and the attendance is constantly increasing. The Fourth Street Theater Company is composed of the following men: Charles F. Oldt, C. D. Buss, L. F. Heiberger and H. W. Heiberger, and the company is affiliated with the Lorenz theater, Bethlehem, and the Third Street theater of Easton.

LEWIS TAKES "GREAT DIVIDE" PLAYERS WEST.

When Director Edgar Lewis and his group of sixteen Lubin players left for the Grand Canyon to begin work on the "exteriors" of "The Great Divide" they were surrounded by the entire acting force of the Lubin studios who bid them "pleasant journey." Miss Clayton's stateroom was a bower of American beauties, while in the room of Mr. House Peters there was an abundance of the Peters' brand tobaccos. The company expects to be gone about three weeks, then return to Philadelphia to complete the "interiors" of the play, which, according to Mr. Lewis, will be a "bird."

JOTTINGS.

Word comes from Allentown that the Palace theater has been greatly improved of late, the interior having been entirely repainted and the walls adorned by artistic stencil work. In addition to this the theater has been equipped with inverted electric domes, which are kept burning constantly. The price at all evening performances now being ten cents instead of ten cents every other night.

The Zenith Motion Picture Company was recently chartered under the laws of Delaware to engage in the manufacture and sale of moving picture machines, supplies and all sorts of photographic films. The capital stock of the new concern is $500,000, Joseph F. Curtain, Samuel B. Howard and S. A. Anderson, all of New York City, being the principal incorporators.

SUNDAY SHOWS IN JERSEY.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE police of Hoboken and Bayonne issued orders last Saturday (Oct. 9) that all motion picture houses close on Sunday. It is believed that the activity of Sheriff Eugene Kinkead in making wholesale arrests two weeks ago for excise violations prompted the police in closing down the lid.

Last week, however, a movement was begun to lift the lid in Jersey City. Thousands of circulars have been distributed, saying that Jersey City has been unprogressive because of its enforcement of the old Sunday "blue laws."

Last week the picture shows were to have taken a chance at opening in Jersey City, but the Sheriff's visit to Hoboken killed the idea. Many Jersey City people traveled to Hoboken to attend the moving picture theaters there, but came back disappointed.

Here in Newark, however, things are different. Sunday benefits are permitted, so long as they are for a worthy cause. Last Sunday the following theaters had benefit performances: Odeon theater, Loew's, Keeney's, Lyric theater, and many of the smaller houses.

PARAMOUNT THEATER CHANGES.

The Paramount theater, Newark, has changed its policy with the resignation of Oscar A. Morgan, who has been resident manager during the last year. Tali Esen Morgan, new manager of the theater, is also director of the Ocean Grove auditorium. Harry M. Hyams, a local theatrical man, will act as assistant manager. The policy of showing Paramount pictures exclusively will be dropped, and pictures of all the leading producing companies will be shown.

Last Monday was Mary Fuller Day, and she appeared personally at the theater. She was featured in the screen version of "Under Southern Skies." Handsome souvenirs were distributed by Miss Fuller.

Mr. Morgan will join the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and will act as advertising manager of the Famous Players' Film exchanges of New York, Washington and Philadelphia. W. E. Smith, a Newarker, is manager of these exchanges.

STEWART QUITS PROCTOR'S.

Robert C. Stewart, of Newark, who for nearly fifteen years was identified with the Proctor interests in this city and New York, has resigned his position with that firm, and has associated himself with the Quiloa Film Company, a new motion picture producing corporation, with offices in the Candler building in Forty-second street, New York. The company has a studio at Cliffside, N. J., and it is there that Mr. Stewart will act as business manager.

YUDKIN'S EXCHANGE MOVES.

Yudkin's Feature Film Exchange, of which Herbert H. Yudkin is manager, has removed from its old quarters, 197 Market street, to the Strand theater building.

SHOW FOR BERNARDSVILLE.

The Bernars Inn auditorium has been leased to Benjamin Beberfeld and John Roland, of New York, who will open the place as a high-class moving picture house under the name of Beberfeld and Roland. The new lessees will give moving picture entertainments three times a week. They opened Oct. 18.

MISS KING TO STOP AT NEWARK.

It is expected that Miss Anita King, driving a six-cylinder sixty horsepower Kissel car from Los Angeles to New York, will arrive here next week. Miss King, connected with the Jesse L. Lasky Photoplay Company, will stop at the Paramount theater, Broad street, at the invitation of Tali Esen Morgan, the manager. Newark will be the last stop before Miss King reaches New York. A luncheon has been arranged to which twenty-five people have been invited. Miss King will give a short talk in the evening at the Paramount.

NEW JERSEY BREVITIES.

Moving pictures of the grand parade of Crescent Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and visiting Shriners, including Salaam Temple of Newark, were shown recently at Keeney's theater, Newark. The film was taken several weeks ago at Atlantic City, and proved very successful.

The Clinton Square theater, 213 Clinton avenue, Newark, is now under the management of John J. Howard. The place has been thoroughly renovated and remodeled. The theater should be a success, as it is situated in the finest residential section of the city.

The new policy of Oriental Night every Thursday is meeting with the approval of the patrons of the Odeon. "The Masked Dancer" was featured last Thursday. William Okin is managing the novel idea.

HERBERT M. OSBORN WEDS IN WASHINGTON.

Herbert M. Osborn, one of the most popular moving picture men in the District of Columbia and manager of the Pathe exchange in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Building, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends upon his marriage on Saturday, October 9, to Miss Annie E. Smith. The wedding was the culmination of a romance which, according to Mr. Osborn, commenced twenty-seven years ago when both of them first saw the light of day in adjoining towns in Pennsylvania. To make the affair more interesting, they were first cousins.

IN WASHINGTON EXCHANGES.

Leon J. Bamberger, of the New York office of V-L-S-E, paid a flying visit to the Washington branch last week for consultation with Manager Spurrier on the campaign to be carried on in this territory.

Miss Jeanette Blair has entered upon her duties as booker for the Washington branch of the V-L-S-E. Miss Blair has had a long experience in the moving picture business and has spent eight years in mastering the details of her position. For many years she was with the General Film Company in Philadelphia and has been with her present employers since the formation of the company. She is one of the best-known women in the film business and is exceptionally competent.

Rudolph Berger, who formerly represented the Picture Playhouse Film Company, of Philadelphia, made his first visit to Washington last week as the representative of the Kleine-Edison Feature Service Company. Mr. Berger's first entrance into the moving picture business was with the National Feature Film Company with which he remained until it was sold out to the Picture Playhouse Company. For his new employers he will cover the District of Columbia, Maryland and a part of Virginia. He will have temporary headquarters in this city for the time being.

G. A. R. FILM.

Sidney B. Lust, who operates the United Film Service exchange in this city, had made about one thousand feet of film of the parade of the veterans of the Grand Army during its encampment here. He secured some very goods views of the reviewing stand and President Wilson, the various Grand Army posts, the famous Marine Band, known as "the President's own;" the general staff of the regular army, and prominent members of the local and national government. Mr. Lust has already booked the film in a large number of houses in this territory and gave a private exhibition before the members of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, which organization had in charge all of the arrangements for the encampment, at its first fall meeting on Tuesday evening.

REAL PLAYERS AT GARDEN.

Tom Moore announces an innovation at his Garden theater in the personal appearance of a popular player. He has arranged to have Earl Williams visit Washington on October 16 and 17. He will deliver a short monologue at the Garden, and also impersonate several of the characters with which he gained his greatest successes. It is Mr. Moore's intention to present at various times other well-known film stars in person.

To Extend War Tax

Secretary McAdoo Recommends Continuing Federal Seating-Capacity Tax Until Peace in Europe—Points at Which Law Discriminates Against Picture Shows —Burden of Airdomes—Law Should Be Modified.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN all probability the seating capacity tax imposed upon motion picture and other theaters by the act of Congress of October 22, 1914, will be re-enacted at the next session. In a statement for the press, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo says that, "In reply to many inquiries I have received about the revenue measures that will be proposed in the next Congress, I have determined to recommend: (1) That the Emergency Revenue Act, which expires by limitation on December 31, 1915, be extended until peace is restored in Europe, and (2) that the existing duties on sugar shall be retained for several years, or until normal customs conditions are restored. These are distinctively revenue measures, and are necessary in view of the extraordinary conditions now prevailing throughout the world.

"It is impossible to state at the moment what, if any, additional revenue measures may be necessary, as the estimates of the various departments have not yet been received. It is clear, however, that the two sources of revenue I have just mentioned should be preserved, no matter what the departmental estimates may be. Of course, it rests with Congress to say what shall be done. I am merely stating what my recommendations in these particulars will be."

Inasmuch as it affects the motion picture industry, this law should not be reenacted as it is decidedly unjust. It contains many features that are highly discriminatory and if the exhibitors are to be made to stand a portion of the burden, these at least should be remedied.

In the first place, the motion picture theater, admission to which is generally five or ten cents, is placed on the same plane with the legitimate houses for which an admission of from a quarter to several dollars is demanded. This is discrimination as against the exhibitor. Either the tax on the houses securing the larger box office returns should be increased considerably, or that imposed upon the motion picture theaters should be decreased to the same extent. A proper interpretation of the law providing for a tax upon theaters would place such tax on motion picture theaters at $10. This matter was the subject of considerable controversy shortly after the enactment of the law, but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue held it to be the intent of Congress that the motion picture houses should pay the higher rate.

Proprietors of airdomes must pay a tax covering several months during which they do no business, yet they are not entitled to any consideration when assessment is made according to seating capacity.

The rapacity of the law is further evidenced by the fact that should a theater change hands once or several times during the year each new owner or owners would be forced to renew the tax stamp.

The law is full of inconsistencies and represents a very poor piece of legislation. If there be actual need for this or a similar measure to produce funds for the maintenance of the government, it should be thoroughly gone over and more attention paid to the claims of the exhibitors. The latter are patriotic enough to even volunteer the payment of a tax when such tax is equitable, but when proper thought is given to the matter it is seen that they have been unjustly discriminated against. Ten dollars per house is ample and this sum should cover the theater and not the individual exhibitor; it should represent all that should be collected for any one year, regardless of the number of owners. Airdomes should be taxed only for the number of months during which exhibitions are given.

These and such other facts as may come to mind should be communicated to the representatives and senators by the various state leagues and by the exhibitors themselves. The wrongs inflicted by the law should be impressed upon them. It is but natural that if no protest is made it will be taken for granted that all concerned are perfectly well satisfied with the provisions of the law, while, on the other hand, a far more spirited protest should be made than that which was offered when the law was being considered by the committees of Congress.

PROMISE FOR WINTER SEASON.

Reasons Why Picture Men May Be Confident of Reasonable Prosperity.

It is extremely gratifying to note that business conditions in general in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and the Carolinas show a considerable improvement during the month of September over the previous month. With prosperity assured in general business, the exhibitors cannot fail to enjoy an increased patronage during the fall and winter seasons. The following facts are obtained from a report of an official of the Federal Reserve Board rendered to the Treasury Department.

The near approach of the time at which cotton is to be moved finds general business in the above-named states in a much more favorable position than could have been anticipated three months or more ago. In this district there seems to be no nervousness on the part either of producer or consumer. All appreciated the practical value of banking facilities, now at their command, the absence of which last year so largely contributed to the uncomfortable and excited conditions. Not only are collections quite fair for this season, but what is as essential, orders are being placed for the future.

In tobacco, leaf prices just at present are holding very well, while manufacturers are busy on favorable terms.

Cotton milling in several directions is beginning to feel the effect of lack of dyestuffs.

Great improvement is noted in furniture manufacturing lines, an industry of considerable proportions in this district, the movement helping lumber in some slight degree. Building operations, however, are far below normal.

Retailers are doing better and with the advent of cooler weather look for further and pronounced improvement. Labor is fully employed.

Coal is continuing to hold the improved position it has gradually been occupying during the past 90 days.

Banks throughout the district are in an easy position, and in only a relatively few instances, to be found in strictly agricultural sections, is there any evidence of overborrowing. By far the greater number of banks are either rediscounting very modestly or have idle funds awaiting investment.

Conditions as a whole are sound and give excellent promise for the fall months.

RENEW YOUR LICENSE.

Announcement has been made by William P. Richards, Assessor of Taxes for the District of Columbia, of the expiration on October 31, of all licenses of proprietors of theaters. All persons desiring to continue in the operation of playhouses after that date, he states, must promptly renew their licenses.

PITTSBURGH BUSY OVER THE UNIVERSAL MOVIE GAME.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE Universal Moviegame, the latest advertising stunt to be put on the market by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has taken Pittsburgh by storm. It has been running in this city now for two weeks and it seems as though everyone is a contestant. The Pittsburgh Press is the paper in this city selected to run the contest. The Press has the largest circulation in Western Pennsylvania and the exhibitors are elated over this fact and are very confident that they will get the widest publicity.

A large number of Pittsburgh exhibitors have already contracted for the Moviegame, among which are the Regent, Belmar, Schenley Photoplay, Lawrence, Arsenal and Bellevue, all Rowland & Clark theaters.

H. B. DAY TO HANDLE FEATURES DE LUXE.

Harvey B. Day, manager of the Pittsburgh office of Fox Film, has been appointed general manager of the new Features De Luxe department to be inaugurated soon by the Fox Film Corporation, and it is likely he will leave this city within the next couple of months to take up his residence in New York. Mr. Day's successor as manager of the Pittsburgh branch has not as yet been decided.

NEW ALTOONA PICTURE HOUSE DELAYED.

Jacob Silverman, of Altoona, was a recent visitor in Pittsburgh, and while here stated that the large theater he and his brother are building in Altoona had been delayed owing to the inability of the contractors to secure iron structural material and the opening will likely be postponed until the 15th of December. From the fact that Triangle films will be shown in this house it will be named "The Triangle." The prices of admission will be 10, 15 and 25 cents, and the theater will be conducted on a high-class plan.

BUTLER'S ORPHEUM REOPENS.

The Orpheum theater, in Butler, Pa., which has been closed for some time undergoing repairs, is now completed and open to the public.

This house now has a seating capacity of 600, with plenty of room for each patron, the seats being so arranged that there is plenty of room not only between the seats, but between the rows. It presents a most beautiful appearance, being done in green, gold and white with the shades, curtains and other decorations to match. The building has been made as fireproof as possible.

Dominec Paganelli and Peter Grillo, owners of the theater, are entitled to the congratulations of Butler people for the fine theater they have for the pleasure of the people of the city.

SKIRBOLL VISITS CHICAGO.

Joseph S. Skirboll, general manager of the Metro Picture Service, Pittsburgh, was in Chicago last week, where he met the managers of the three western offices, Chicago, Kansas City and Des Moines. All seem enthused over the prospects for the Metro program in the future, as well as its success in the past.

WORLD FILM OFFICE CHANGES.

S. B. Kramer, manager of the Pittsburgh office of the World Film, has resigned that position, to take a position as manager of the Mecca branch of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in New York.

I. H. Hirsch, formerly of the Cleveland branch of the World Film, will succeed Mr. Kramer as manager of the Pittsburgh branch.

Another vacancy in the World staff occurs as a result of the resignation of George W. Lederer, who has been assistant manager to Mr. Kramer. Mr. Lederer has accepted a position in New York City.

AUDITOR HOWELL WITH METRO.

Albert W. Howell, formerly traveling auditor for the Universal Film Company, is now filling a similar position for the Metro Picture Service of Pittsburgh, Chicago, Kansas City and Des Moines. Mr. Howell will make his headquarters in Pittsburgh. He is regarded as one of the best auditors in the country and has devised several systems which have been of great value to the film business.

"CUPID'S GARDEN PARTY."

The following letter from George Le Soir, director of "Cupid's Garden Party," the great Made-in-Pittsburgh photoplay, in which the winners of the Rowland & Clark theaters Movie Star contest were given the opportunity of demonstrating their ability as motion picture actors and actresses will show Pittsburghers that there is real talent in the city for the silent drama.

"Gentlemen: Have just come from laboratory where I assembled the negative of "Cupid's Garden Party," which Snyder (the camera man who took the picture) and myself found to be excellent. No retakes are necessary, the scenes are well lighted and development first class. Pittsburgh should be vain of her amateurs who have turned out a really professional picture."

The scenes of "Cupid's Garden Party" are all familiar to residents of this city. They include Schenley and Highland parks, Forbes Field, Kennywood park, a great steel mill, Pittsburgh Field Club, the magnificent estate of T. N Barnsdall on Negley and Wellesley, as well as many street scenes familiar to all.

B. F. JONES WITH HUDSON FEATURE.

B. F. Jones, Jr., is now on the road for the Hudson Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa. William J. Simmons has also been engaged recently as chief clerk and booker for the same company.

SMOKY CITY SPARKS.

W. E. Richmond, proprietor of the Richmond theater, in Elliott, near Pittsburgh, Pa., has purchased the property of the New Lorenz theater and will operate both theaters hereafter.

S. W. Maywood will open the New Sheraden theater in Sheraden, near Pittsburgh, on or about October 15, with a program of big features.

M. McJanicki, the new owner of the American, at Ingram, near Pittsburgh, intends to make extensive improvements at that house in the near future.

Albert Beach has joined the sales force of Ludwig Hommel & Co., of Pittsburgh. Mr. Beach knows all the ins and outs of the film game and he is expected by his friends to make a great success of his new undertaking.

Harry Storer has sold his Grand, in Wilmerding, Pa., to Mr. Conlon.

Hollis & Smith recently sold two Powers 6-A machines and an asbestos booth to the Pittsburgh Athletic Club.

The Star, in Blairsville, Pa., has been extensively remodeled recently and now presents a handsome appearance. The new equipment which was installed includes Powers 6-A machines, Mirroroid screen and 300 chairs, purchased through the Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh. T. T. Lowman is the proprietor.

Dr. Styber is going to manage the new theater, which is rapidly nearing completion, at the corner of Perrysville avenue and Tygart street, Northside, Pittsburgh. It is an up-to-date house of 420 seats and will be opened some time this month. The equipment includes two Simplex machines, latest model, motor-driven; a 50-ampere Wagner converter, Becker daylight screen.

LOUISVILLE WOMEN OUT FOR LOCAL CENSORSHIP.

Women's Outdoor Art League Appoint Committee to Work for Better Films.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

POSSIBLE censorship of moving picture films to be shown in Louisville theaters was one of the principal topics discussed at the fire fall meeting of the Women's Outdoor Art League, held at the Louisville Free Public Library, on Friday afternoon, October 1. It is proposed to secure a municipal board.

This movement was started by a subcommittee of the educational committee, of which Mrs. Charles F. Fitch is chairman. The sub-committee is composed of Mrs. J. B. Arbegust, chairman; Mrs. C. M. Talcott and Mrs. Eva Kahlert. This committee was instructed at the meeting to urge the creation of the board of censorship upon Mayor John H. Buschemeyer, of Louisville, and the general council.

According to Mrs. Arbegust the object of the movement is to secure wholesome moving pictures at all of the local theaters. Mrs. Morris W. Bartlett, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, was present at this meeting and announced that the State Federation expected to co-operate with the various local clubs throughout the state this season.

FEDERAL FILM INCORPORATED.

The Federal Film Corporation, of Louisville, has incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000, divided into 1,000 shares of the par value of $10. The incorporators are R. Brooks Brown, Walter J. NeVille, Joseph N. Grant and Raymond Anderson. Officers of the company are R. Brooks Brown, president; Walter J. NeVille, vice-president, and Raymond Anderson, secretary and general manager. The treasurer is yet to be elected. The corporation proposes to manuacture advertising, municipal, educational and industrial films, and will not engage in photoplay work of any kind.

GOOD PRICES FOR GOOD PICTURES.

The Walnut Street theater, of Louisville, is demonstrating the fact that advanced prices may be obtained for really high grade motion pictures with a real punch. The Walnut Street theater at one time was operated as a 25-cent picture theater, but for a number of months has been operated as a 5-cent house. A few weeks ago "Hypocrites" was shown at this theater at 10 cents, and "Damaged Goods" was later shown at 10 and 20 cents. The theater paid $100 a day for four days for the first run privilege on "Damaged Goods." It is claimed that this is the highest rental ever paid in Louisville for a moving picture film. Several large productions have been shown in the city on a percentage basis, and other films have been shown on a six or seven day run for $400 to $500, but it is said that never before has a film been shown in Louisville for which the exhibitor paid a flat rate of $100 daily.

HITS IN LOUISVILLE.

Anita Stewart and Earl Williams recently appeared at the Star theater in the great production of "The Juggernaut." This film has been shown in the city on several previous occasions, but this is one of those productions which never grow old. The film was shown in the 10-cent theaters on previous runs, but was exhibited at the Star theater for 5 cents. Johnson Mussellman, manager of the Star theater, recently showed the two-reel Essanay production of Charles Chaplin in the comedy film "Shanghaied," for a Sunday and Monday special. Kathleen Williams in the "Sultana of the Desert," was also exhibited to good crowds. Mr. Musselman recently had the entire interior of the lobby filled with corn shocks to represent an autumn scene. Flasher lights have been placed behind all of the one-sheet advertising frames in such a way that they flash on and off and attract considerable attention.

ROBERT HEWLETT, BUSINESS MANAGER OF UNION.

Robert Hewlett, an operator at the Star theater, has been elected business manager of the local operators' union to succeed Edward Clay, resigned, who had held the position for five years.

FILM CLEANING CONTRIVANCE.

Col. John C. Forth, a well known local operator, has invented and patented a preparation to be used in connection with moving picture films. This invention consists of a liquid which is placed in a contrivance through which the film is passed in such a way that all dirt is taken from the film. The film comes out sharper and brighter and is less brittle than is generally the case with old films. It is also claimed that the use of the liquid prevents new film from buckling Several local houses are trying out the preparation with good results.

DENNIS H. LONG TO WED.

Announcement has just been made in the local papers that the wedding of Dennis H. Long to Miss Mary Shreve Lyons will be solemnized on November 3. The contracting parties are very popular in the leading society set of Louisville, and the wedding is one of the big affairs of the social season.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES.

Robert Painter, formerly manager of Cincinnati office of the General Film Corporation, and later with the Kriterion Film Company's Cleveland office, has purchased four copies of Charles Chaplin in "The Mix Up." This film is composed of four short reels hooked together into a Chaplin program. It went well in Louisville, where it was shown at the Casino theater. Mr. Painter was recently in Louisville, and stated that he was preparing to work the entire South with the film.

It is rumored in Louisville that the great Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown at Macauley's theater some time this fall at regular prices. This theater is the oldest of the legitimate houses in the city and usual prices are $1.50 and $2 a seat. It is understood that the big film production will be shown at the theater as a regular road show, and that a thirty-piece orchestra will be used. Mr. Griffith was originally a Louisville man, and has numerous friends in the city who are expected to take considerable interest in the big masterpiece.

Norman M. Dixon, manager of the Louisville office of the Mutual Film Corporation, reports that bookings on the Mutual Masterpictures have been doubled with the Louisville office during the past sixty days. Mr. Dixon is very busy just now with arranging bookings for the big production of "Damaged Goods." Solid bookings for three straight weeks have been made in the city before the film was first shown. Mr. Dixon is very much pleased with his new offices over the Novelty theater. Paul Lewis, of the company's Indianapolis office, is working out of the Louisville office for a few days, and is obtaining good results throughout the state.

Edward Elliott, of the V-L-S-E office, at Cincinnati, O., was recently in Louisville where he called on a number of the exhibitors. Mr. Elliott and R. L. "Bob" Shrader, formerly of the Louisville office of the Central Film Company, are a hard team to beat, and are making rapid strides.

Fred Dolle, of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, and Henry Reis, of the Ideal theater, of the Broadway Amusement Company, have gone to New York, where they expect to close deals for some additional film service to be used in the chain of theaters which the concerns are operating in Louisville.

THEATERS AND EXHIBITORS.

The Casino theater of Louisville in advertising the "Jewel" in which Ella Hall takes the leading part in the Universal five-reel all-star cast, played up the fact that the picture was a story of Christian Science, and a big business was done on the film while it was shown at the theater for five cents. The picture was formerly shown at one of the ten-cent houses where it also attracted good crowds, including many members of the denomination.

W. P. Worth, of Jefferson, N. C., was recently in Louisville, where he closed a deal with Fred Sheldon, of the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, for machines, chairs and complete equipment for a new house at Jefferson which will have a seating capacity of 300. Mr. Sheldon reports that he is obtaining an excellent demand for two and three-reel feature subjects just now.

Through the efforts of the Frankfort, Ky., Chamber of Commerce a moving picture film has been made by A. E. Irons while the Kentucky Bankers' Association was in convention in the city, and many scenes were taken showing the bankers. The picture will be shown in Frankfort.

OVOCO PICTURE COMPANY INCORPORATED.

Makers of Industrial, Scenic Film, etc., Move to Nashville.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT a meeting held in Nashville, Tenn., on Tuesday, September 28, the Ovoco Motion Picture Corporation was incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000 for the purpose of taking over the business of the Ovoco Motion Picture Company, of Tullahoma, Tenn. The meeting was held at the office of Gov. Tom C. Rye, of Tennessee. Officers elected were Harry F. Green, president and general manager; W. H. Wassman, vice-president; W. H. Hooser, treasurer; A. P. Foster, secretary; James M. Frank, J. C. Collins and E. H. Parker, directors. The incorporators consist of the following well known men: Harry F. Green, W. H. Hooser, John Trotwood Moore, A. P. Foster, Alfred H. Williams, J. C. Collins, L. M. Hitt, James M. Frank, Joseph W. Byrns, Harry S. Stokes, E. H. Parker, Joe J. Roach, Richard B. Herzer, F. A. Sullivan, T. T. McCarley, A. G. Brandau, W. H. Wassman, Alfred Levine, E. E. French, Judge S. F. Wilson, Judge J. C. Higgins, Judge W. C. Cherry, Governor Thomas C. Rye and Aaron Bergeda.

NEW CLARKSVILLE THEATER.

At Clarksville, Tenn., the new Lillian theater has been completed at a cost of approximately $20,000 and will be ready to open during the next few days. The theater is one of the prettiest small houses in the state. The old Lillian theater was burned last fall in a fire which destroyed a large section of the principal business portion of the city.

GOLD ROOSTERS POPULAR.

Although Gold Rooster plays were introduced in Nashville only a few weeks ago, they have already gained considerable popularity and are drawing good crowds at the Crescent theater. Alma Martin and George Probert went very well in one of the productions recently shown at the Crescent. "The Spenders," as the name indicates, represented rather a lively picture, and took well with the crowds.

SEASON'S BRILLIANT OPENING IN ATLANTA.

Good Comedies and Worthy Programs Please Patrons.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THERE are a particularly good lot of comedies at the Atlanta theaters this week, and the bills for the entire week at all houses are better than they have been for months. This week ushers in the winter season of moving pictures and the managers of the theaters realizing this, have put forward their best efforts to start the season very successfully.

SHOWS MAKING OF FERTILIZER.

Prominent Atlanta fertilizer men gathered at the Strand theater Tuesday morning to see two reels of motion pictures brought over from Athens, Ga., by B. F. Dobbs, southern agricultural expert of the American Coal Products Co. The picture showed the history of the manufacture of sulphate of ammonia—the fertilizer for which the company is conducting a southern propaganda—and its actual use in various sections of Georgia. Mr. Dobbs, in a talk, explained the pictures. The fertilizer men were much interested in the exhibition.

BOOKING IN THE LOW LANDS.

T. F. McTyer, of the V-L-S-E, who travels Florida, the Carolinas, Alabama and West Tennesee, and Mr. C. A. Chivers, of the Paramount, who travels Mississippi, each after several weeks' trips, returned this week under the weather, but both are improving rapidly. West Tennessee and the Delta section of Mississippi, according to the two roadmen, are not conducive to good health.

MARIENTETTE RESIGNS.

Mr. Joe Marientette, for a number of years manager of the local office of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, resigned during the past week. It came as a surprise to his many friends over the south, as well as to the colony of exchange men. Mr. Marientette is now in New York, and it is hoped that he will return and continue to make Atlanta his home.

"CARMEN" PLEASES ATLANTIANS.

Mr. C. E. Tandy, manager of the Atlanta office of the Southern Paramount Company, is to be congratulated on securing for Atlanta the second showing of "Carmen." Miss Farrar is Atlanta's favorite in its yearly week of grand opera, and the Lyric theater, where "Carmen" is being shown this week, is playing to overcrowded houses. There have been many box parties and theater parties.

ATLANTA BRIEFS.

The Forsythe theater is running moving picture cartoons in connection with vaudeville.

The moving picture theaters of Waycross, Ga., report the best business of the season there this past week.

"The Climbers," at the Georgian, Monday played to good house. This is the film in which Miss Gladys Hanson (Snooks), the Atlanta actress, is lead. The mere mention of Miss Hanson's name in Atlanta is enough to pack the theater.

Blue Laws in Milford

Mayor of City Near Cincinnati Says Only Works of Necessity and Mercy Shall Be Done There on Sabbaths—Three Arrests Made in a Picture Theater That Opened—Causes Local Feeling.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Puritan Sunday, with the blue laws in full force and effect, has been seen in the very environs of Cincinnati, and while local exhibitors do not feel that there is any real threat for them in the incident, it is still extremely significant as showing that there is actual danger in some quarters to Sunday shows, which are objected to by very few people. The two daughters of Christ Ernest, proprietor of the only picture house in Milford, a suburb of Cincinnati, with Edwin Davis, operator at the house, were arrested last week by the town authorities, on the charge of violating the local ordinance against Sunday labor.

All three were fined $50 and costs, the girls for taking tickets and Davis for operating the machine. The fine and costs were suspended, however. The mayor of Milford takes the position that he is backed up in his action by the state statute regarding the observance of Sunday, and this is the point which lends some importance to his action. He declares that he intends to prevent all Sunday business except where it is in the nature of a charity or a necessity. There was much local feeling over the matter, as it was felt that the arrests were uncalled for, and that the mayor's action was extremely high-handed.

MAHOGANY FOR TRIANGLE OFFICES.

The numerous details connected with fitting up a big exchange office and of getting business started at the same time are keeping C. C. Hite, manager of the Cincinnati branch of the Triangle Film Corporation, moving at an extremely rapid gait. Mr. Hite was in Indiana for several days last week, closing up contracts, and also found time to push the work in the office. The Triangle offices are being fitted up in mahogany, the partitions, wainscoting and furniture all being of this attractive finish, and bid fair to be among the handsomest in the city when completed.

Correcting an Error.

Reference was erroneously made last week to the company as the Triangle Mutual Film Corporation, the word "Mutual" being used by mistake, as it is no part of the company's name, and the company has no connection with the Mutual company.

OPENING OF WALNUT THEATER.

The opening of the Walnut theater as a moving picture house, which took place on Saturday, October 9, was an event well worth marking in the exhibitor's calendar in Cincinnati, as it indicates the addition to local houses of one of the largest and finest in this section. The place has been redecorated throughout, and new seats, of the same type as those used on the lower floor, have been installed in both balconies, making them quite as comfortable as the first floor.

Manager Libson seems to have realized his announced ambition to control one of the finest houses west of New York.

He now manages three of the largest and most popular houses in Cincinnati, the Walnut forming the third of the trio and the Strand and the Family the other two.

The William Fox attractions will be shown at the Walnut, the honor of opening the house going to Herbert Brennon's production "Sin," featuring Theda Bara in a typical part. Performances will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning and run until eleven in the evening, and the program will be changed twice a week. The uniform admission charge of 10 cents will prevail.

CINCINNATI PICTURE MEN FEEL A LOSS.

News of the death in New York on October 6 of M. A. Neff, formerly of Cincinnati, and for several years president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was received in Cincinnati with surprise and regret, as it was not known that Mr. Neff's condition was so serious, although reports of illness had been heard. While local exhibitors, as a whole, did not always agree with Mr. Neff, especially those who were outside of the League, he was generally admired for his energy and ability, and when he moved to New York about a year ago to take up other interests it was taken as a distinct loss to local picture circles. The local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will probably take appropriate action in connection with the death, especially in view of the fact that the body was brought back to Cincinnati, for burial at Rome, Ohio, where Mr. Neff was born.

TO ASK A REVIEW OF CENSORS' DECISION.

Two prominent and popular visitors in Cincinnati last week were J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the interests controlling the great Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," and Theodore Mitchell, formerly a Cincinnati newspaper man, who is also associated with the Griffith enterprise. Messrs. McCarthy and Mitchell were in the city in connection with the recent surprising action of the Ohio Board of Censors in rejecting the great picture, and are making an effort to secure a review of the decision by the censors.

If the sanction of the board can be obtained, it is understood that the picture will be shown in Cincinnati at the Grand opera house, although the regular theatrical season is already in full swing there. The scale of prices which will prevail has not been determined upon, but it is certain to be higher than for any picture which has yet been seen in Cincinnati.

WHAT PATHE MEN SAY.

Reports from the several Pathe branch managers and salesmen who were in the city during the week indicate that the cool evenings are bringing people into the picture shows in their territory in fine style, as business is picking up. J. N. Gelman, from Louisville, was one of the visitors, coming up by way of Lexington, where he reports the Ben Ali as doing well with "Neal of the Navy," while the Lyric is delighted with the new "Gold Rooster" stuff. W. P. Melton, the Dayton man, was in Hamilton and Middletown last week, and found things good in both, as well as in Dayton, while Roy Maurer, of Huntington, reports several nice new contracts in his West Virginia territory.

VIRGINIA NOTES.

Business Changes—Road Men in Virginia—Two New Film Companies.

By Clarence L. Linz, Virginia Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MORRIS MILLER, building contractor of Christiansburg, has purchased the Wilmont theater in that place from Mosby Montague. It is Mr. Miller's intention of continuing the present policies of the house, running a first-class program.

E. D. Hines, who operates the American in Roanoke, has secured a lease to the Paramount theater, also in Roanoke, and has caused it to be closed temporarily. It is reported that Mr. Hines will adopt a new policy for the latter theater and will reopen it in the very near future.

Charles O. Moss, who covers this territory and a part of North Carolina for the Pathe Company, is well pleased with the turn that business has taken. When seen by the Virginia correspondent of the Moving Picture World he declared that the prospects for increased box office receipts during the coming fall and winter are very good. "There is a general air of prosperity in every city that I have thus far visited," he said, "and I find that the exhibitors are inclined to book better pictures.

Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, manager of the Washington branch office of the Fox Film Corporation, visited a number of Virginia cities last week and reports business with him as very good.

A charter was recently issued in Virginia to Vogue Films, Incorporated, of Richmond, to engage in the moving picture business with a maximum capital of $100,000 and a minimum capital of $1,000. The officers are Joseph H. Finn, president, and N. D. Cross, secretary, both of Chicago, Ill.

In the charter granted to the Signal Film Corporation, of Richmond, Mr. N. D. Cross also figures. This company is to engage in the same line of business and with the same amount of capital. S. S. Hutchinson, also of Chicago, Ill., is named as the president of the company.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

Pathe Exchange in Charlotte.

It is reported that two offices have been leased by the Pathe Company in the Latta Arcade, on South Tyron street, Charlotte, Va., and that they will be in charge of Fritz Wathne, formerly of Atlanta. He will be assisted by F. C. Groover. It is stated that the new exchange will be given as its territory North and South Carolina and a part of Tennessee and that it will be equipped for the efficient handling of the business in those states. The North Carolina business was formerly handled through the Washington, D. C., branch.

Charlotte is exceptionally well situated with respect to railroad facilities for use as an exchange headquarters. The Mutual Film, the Universal Film and the Greater New York Film Rental are already established here and there is a rumor that still another company will open offices in Charlotte in the near future.

Asheville in Film.

A motion picture of Asheville, one of a series of travel pictures presented by the Gaumont Company, and made by C. F. Ray, formerly of this city but now of New York, attracted considerable attention at the Strand, where it was shown last week to large crowds. This picture starts with a map of North Carolina on which a beautiful young girl is tracing a line from the central part of the state to Asheville by way of Salisbury and describing a circle around the former city. This is followed by a panorama of Asheville from Beaumont, giving splendid views with the mountains as a background. There are also views of Kanuga Lake, the beautiful Ossawa falls, Fairfield Lake and the falls, and following these come scenes taken on the Biltmore estate. Many interesting dairy scenes are shown, including the various processes in sterilizing milk, the care of the cattle, how hay is handled for the cattle, etc. Other western Carolina views are also shown.

"Captain Bob of the National Guard."

Captain Robert R. Reynolds has returned to Asheville after a several weeks' stay in New York City, where he witnessed the passing of his production, "Captain Bob of the National Guard," by both the National Board of Censors and a special board of censors comprised of army officers detailed for that purpose by the War Department. Captain Reynolds states that the latter required the presentation of the pictures to its representatives by reason of the fact that United States troops and officers were used in the production and permission for such use was only granted upon the condition that the pictures would not be placed on public exhibition without first being exhibited before this board.

Carl B. Rehder, a well-known resident of Wilmington, has been appointed advertising manager for the Victoria and Grand theaters. He has had wide experience in this type of work and is said will make a most useful man in his new position.

A Seeburg orchestral organ was installed last week in the new Royal theater, Wilmington, and was operated for the first time on October 1, to the satisfaction of both the management and the patrons of the house.

IN DETROIT.

Autumn Business Notes—New Theaters and Incorporations—Personals.

The New Empire theater is back to its fall habilitments. The summer finery has been removed and all seats uncovered. Heavier draperies have been put up instead of the lighter weights.

Frederick Ingersoll, of the Knickerbocker theater, is back from an extended automobile trip through the east.

The Majestic theater has a new stage setting that is a great improvement, despite the fact that the old setting was very beautiful.

F. Addison Pelley is the new vice-president and manager of the Grand Circus theater. He has bought considerable stock in the company, which is capitalized at $100,000. A. W. Blankmeyer remains president and general manager. Henry Schantz is secretary and treasurer. Extensive improvements are now being made to the Grand Circus, which will mean an expense of $10,000.

The Krim Circle Theater Co., has incorporated for $10,000. The incorporators are Philip Krim, Leon Krim and Benjamin Alpert.

From latest information the old Wagner baking plant at Grand River and Bagg streets will be remodeled for commercial purposes, and not for motion pictures.

Frank Drew, who is building the new Drury Lane theater, near Grand Circus Park on Woodward avenue, says he will not open it until holiday time.

Roy Bishop has reopened his Globe theater, Grand River and Trumbull avenues. The Globe is really a new theater. Its seating capacity has been doubled and the theater has been redecorated and refurnished throughout. A feature of the opening night was Neddermeyer's uniformed band of 25 pieces, which gave a two-hour musical concert in front of the theater. Part of the time the band paraded up and down the avenue.

The Broadway-Strand theater celebrated first six months existence the week of Oct. 3, and in view of this event, had a double bill for the one admission price. The attractions were "Sin" (Fox) and "The Galloper" with Clifton Crawford (Pathe). Business was so good that General Manager Garson put on an extra performance Saturday morning. "We are doing better all the time," he said to the World representative.

The Temple theater, which plays Keith vaudeville, and the Palace and Columbia theaters, which play small-time vaudeville, raised prices simultaneously on Monday, Oct. 4. All of these houses also show pictures as a part of each bill. The Temple raised on the first ten rows, charging 75 instead of 50 cents at night, and 35 instead of 25 cents at matinee. The Palace and Columbia have a flat price of 15 cents for all downstairs seats. Regardless of the advance, none of the houses report any falling off in business.

G. J. Trask, manager of the Detroit branch of the Mutual Film company, is being congratulated by officials of the company for the splendid business he has worked up on Mutual Masterpictures, which are being exhibited in Detroit's leading theaters.

With Michigan Inspectors

State Fire Deputy Talks to World Man About His Work—Managers Aid Inspectors—Carelessness in Projection Rooms—Why Cloth Sign Rule Was Put Off—Detroit Theaters a Credit to City.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A RECENT visitor at the MOVING PICTURE WORLD office in Detroit was Thomas C. Schafer, deputy in the Michigan State Fire Marshal's office, who has just completed inspecting the Detroit motion picture theaters. He stated that during the semi-annual inspection he had splendid cooperation from the exhibitors, both large and small. "In justice to the theater men, I want to say that most of them seemed desirous of complying with the law and having their theaters fireproof and provided with every means of safety for their patrons," added Mr. Schafer. "Only here and there did we find an exhibitor who thought the law was too stringent and who hesitated about making the changes we recommended. We have noted that each inspection makes the exhibitors more friendly. Some exhibitors went so far as to tell us that they were glad we came around as they wanted to find out if they were neglecting certain details.

"Our greatest complaint in the Detroit inspection, and in fact, throughout the state, is that theater owners are rather negligent in their projection room. Every other part of the theater may be perfect insofar as it complied with the law, but in the projection room we found all the trouble. Either there was waste paper around, magazines, newspapers and periodicals, or loose film, or else the operators would hang their coat and hat in the room, all of which is against the law. We certainly would recommend that theater owners watch their projection room, as that is the place where a fire is most liable to happen.

"The new cloth sign ruling does not go into effect until the first of December, the time limit being extended so as to give the exchanges in Michigan ample opportunity to use up their present supply. If the ruling was made effective at once, it would have resulted in big losses to these exchanges. The agreement to make the date December 1, was entered into between the State Fire Marshal and the World, Universal, Metro, Casino, Wolverine, Mutual and General exchanges in Detroit, some of which have branches in the west and northern part of the state. All of the managers of these exchanges assured our department that there would be no cause for complaint after December 1, and that they would comply with the law absolutely.

"From what we know of conditions in other large cities, Detroit has more fireproof and more beautiful theaters than any. All of the theaters erected within the past year are just as fireproof as they can be and are certainly a great credit to the amusement business. In many instances, greater precautions have been taken than the law requires, but this is a good thing for the industry because it shows clearly that the men who own theaters are just as anxious to safeguard the lives of the public as are the officials in the state department.

"Since the first of January there have been closed in Detroit 24 theaters, all minor theaters. Six large new modern theaters have been erected during that time.

"We have often been criticised because we would not permit the showing of motion picture theaters on second floors and in churches and auditoriums, as prescribed by the new law. I might say in this connection that the present law is a good thing for the men who own theaters; it eliminates unfair competition and is for their protection, because it does not allow those outside of the legitimate moving picture business to compete with him. For instance, a man who owns a theater has a certain cash investment; his building is expensive and he has a certain overhead expense. He built it for pictures and can make money only when showing pictures. Along comes a church or some other institution who wants to show pictures at certain hours of the day. With them it is purely a side issue. Why should not they have to comply with the fire regulations and the law the same as motion picture houses? Don't you see that by prohibiting them from showing pictures unless they do comply with the law we are giving protection to the legitimate theater owner?

At the present time there are 135 motion picture theaters in operation in Detroit. The total in the state of Michigan is about 650.

THE DUPLEX TO BE MANAGED BY E. N. HENNESSY.

E. N. Hennessy, manager of the Fine Arts theater, has resigned and will have charge of the new Duplex theater, being erected on the East Grand Boulevard, which will open between the first and 15th of November.

"METRO MUSTARD PLASTER."

The Detroit office of the Metro is issuing a weekly house-organ in the shape of a blotter, one side of which is coated and contains the reading matter. It is styled "Metro Mustard Plaster." Apply Weekly to Affected Parts. Written in a fit of enthusiasm over Metro Movies. Price One Seed.

A PROPOSED THEATER.

Walter R. Smith, a well-known accountant, has accepted the position of general manager of the Ferry Field Theater Co. This concern is capitalized at $100,000 and plans to erect a motion picture theater seating over 1,200 at the corner of Grand River avenue and the boulevard.

THE FINE ARTS INCORPORATES.

The Fine Arts Theater Co., of Detroit, has incorporated for $35,000. The principal stockholders are A. Arthur Caille, Henry J. Guthard and John J. Walsh. This beautiful playhouse, taken over by the present lessees, is located at Woodward and Charlotte avenues. Originally it was built by Chris. H. Purdith and called the Addison. The new owners have spared no expense in fixing it up inside and out.

WEDDING BELLS.

Announcement has just been made of the marriage on Sept. 14 of Thomas Herbert Ealand, manager of the Orpheum theater, Detroit, to Miss Edna May Powell, a niece of the lessee of the Orpheum and other theaters in Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

PROMOTING A HOUSE FOR GROSSE POINT.

Earl Kirby, associated with the Grosse Point Savings bank (Grosse Point is the millionaire residence district of Detroit) is promoting a $50,000 company to build a theater on Jefferson avenue, near the Country Club. He plans to make it very beautiful, catering particularly to the residents of Grosse Point.

"DAMAGED GOODS" BOOKED.

"Damaged Goods," a Mutual feature, that is attracting favorable attention, has been booked for four weeks at the Grand Circus theater, starting Oct. 18. The admission price during this engagement is to be 25 cents. Manager Blankmeyer says he will run it longer if the attendance justifies.

Combine for Economy

In Streator, Illinois, Four Theaters Have Been Consolidated in Order to Make Profits—Probable Scheme of Operation—What Made the Combination Necessary—Will Not Affect Prices.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ALL four of the playhouses in Streator, a city of 15,000, have been consolidated under one management. The reason is that with competition there is little profit in the operation of the smaller houses at a five-cent admission. The new policy will result in handling practically the same number of patrons in the larger houses, at the same admission, and with reduced expenses.

In the partnership are C. A. Day, owner of the Majestic and Lyric and lessee of the Plumb, and Charles Vance, owner of the Dawn.

The Lyric has been closed, but the equipment and house will be held in reserve. The Plumb and the Majestic, it is believed, will handle the amusement business of the city, but the Dawn will be kept in operation, at least temporarily, to insure ample accommodations. If it is closed as a regular photoplay house, it will be kept in reserve for the moving picture patrons when theatrical or vaudeville attractions are booked for the Plumb.

The pictures for all three houses will be handled by Vance and the dramatic and vaudeville attractions for the Plumb by Scherble. Vance will have an office in the Majestic building.

"My film rental is fifty per cent higher now than it was a year ago," said Vance, "and the price of carbons which are used in our lanterns is about four hundred per cent higher than a year ago. These increases have made it impossible to operate a small theater at five cents and make it a profitable venture. With the larger houses more people can be seated, and in that way the price can be kept down to five cents."

TEMPERANCE WORKERS NOR LIQUOR MEN WANT DRINKING SCENES.

Nobody wants drinking scenes in films? The State W. C. T. U. convention at Waukegan passed a resolution asking that wines and cigarettes not be depicted and the Liquor Dealers' Protective Association in convention at Springfield took steps to have drinking scenes eliminated.

The W. C. T. U. also condemned Sunday picture shows and advocated state and national censorship of films.

The liquor dealers passed the following resolution:

Whereas, An influence more or less detrimental to our industries is exerted through certain manufacturers of moving picture films, picturing the liquor dealer and the saloon in the most unfavorable light, and creating a false impression of both through exaggerated illustrated stories intended to inflame the public mind against the liquor industry.

Resolved, That the association now in conference does earnestly protest against the manufacture and exhibition of such pictures as unfair and unjust as a lawful industry, licensed by nation, state and municipality; and be it further

Resolved, That this association request all affiliated bodies to appoint committees to take cognizance of such future injurious exhibitions and report same, together with name of film manufacturing company and theater where shown, together with date of such exhibition, to the president of their organization; he in turn to transmit such information to the executive committee of this body for suitable action.

SNAPSHOTS AT SHOWMANSHIP.

During a popular child contest in which two Dan Patch racers were the prizes, the Rich theater in Maywood sold a book of twelve ten-cent tickets for $1.00 and gave fifty votes with each book. Local moving pictures were shown by the Empire theater at Morris for the benefit of the Morris band. When Manager W. W. Watts of the Vaudette at Springfield showed "Silver Threads Among the Gold" he named it "Mother's Day" and gave a carnation to every matron who attended. Manager Taylor of the Majestic theater at La Salle showed to the La Salle Commercial Association five reels of film made in South America by the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. The Palm theater at Rockford filmed the baby parade at a local fair and added the pictures to its regular program. C. D. Tinsley of the Superior Film Company of Des Moines, Ia., made a local picture, "The Fire Fighters," for Manager M. W. Stults of the Princess theater at Monmouth.

"La Salle Adopts a Baby," a home talent film, was made for the Family theater at La Salle. S. L. Brawni made arrangements to make a "University Romance" to be shown at Champaign and Urbana houses, the actors being recruited from the University of Illinois and the Twin Cities. "The Arrival of Perpetua" was shown at the Photoshow in Mt. Sterling for the benefit of the Twentieth Century Club.

OPERATOR KILLED BY SHOCK.

Robert Kneedler, operator at the Collinsville opera house, asked the audience to wait a few moments and went into the basement of the theater to adjust a transformer. Five minutes later his brother William, proprietor of the theater, found his body. He had been shocked dead by the electricity. A widow and seven children survive.

NEW PICTURE COMPANIES INCORPORATE.

Illinois Secretary of State Stevenson has issued the following charters at Springfield: The Hiawatha Theater company of Chicago; capital stock, $1,000; incorporators are: E. S. Hartman, C. E. Morrill and Barrett Blumenthal; The Fidelity Film Corporation of Chicago; capital stock, $10,000; incorporators, Michael F. Ryan, William F. Quesse and Robert L. Reid; the Mutual Motion Picture Producing company of Chicago; capital stock, $10,000; Richard I. Gacin, George R. Neff, and Jesse Hamm, incorporators; The National Motion Picture company of Chicago; capital stock, $1,000; incorporators, Richard I. Gavin, George R. Neff and Jessie Hamm, and the State Street Theater company, also of Chicago; capital stock, $600,000; incorporators Aaron J. Jones, Adolph Linick and Peter J. Schaefer.

DECATUR'S STRAND OPENS.

The Strand, Decatur's newest picture house, was opened at Main and Water streets, the busiest downtown corner, by Charles E. and Edwin Dorgan. George Klein's "The Woman Next Door" was the feature. Souvenirs were given to all patrons. The new house is "playing up" its projection which is in charge of Leo Yancey, Henry Kolker in "The Bigger Man" was an early attraction of significance as Mr. Kolker is considered a Decatur man.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IN ILLINOIS.

The Grand theater at Rockford expects to secure an early booking for "The Birth of a Nation." Negotiations have been under way but Manager George B. Peck is said to have been seeking an eight day engagement instead of the three days which have been allotted to the less-than Metropolitan cities of the northwest.

The Temple theater at Alton opened its twenty-fifth season October 10. "The Birth of a Nation" is slated and the other film bookings will follow closely those of the Studebaker and Fine Arts theaters in Chicago. W. M. Savage is manager of this house as well as of the Hippodrome which on October 4 entered upon its vaudeville season, but will continue to use Metro, Kleine and V. L. S. E. pictures.

The United Photo-Plays company of Chicago is sending its Dr. G. A. Dorsey "China" and "Japan" travel pictures out to a few of the larger downstate high schools. Princeton and Joliet had the first bookings. School organizations share in the receipts.

A CHURCH PICTURE HOUSE.

The Community Picture Play House, Central street and Prairie avenue, in Evanston, which has been opened by Covenant church, has as its slogans "Pictures for the Whole Family" and "The spokes in our steering wheel—Purity — Inspiration, Education and Relaxation." Shows are given Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and Thursday and Saturday afternoons at five and ten cents.

CHILDREN'S SHOWS AT PEORIA.

The Child Welfare League of Peoria has issued an appeal to local philanthropists to bring groups of children to the special Saturday morning shows at the Apollo theater. Mrs. Frank Bowen of the League said: "Certainly moving pictures encourage and incite dexterity and grace

A NEW AMERICAN CARBON.

The Grand theater at Rockford recently made a successful test of the carbon invented by William W. Kathan, a veteran operator, who also is president of the Rockford Carbon Company. The company recently sold a million carbons to George Kleine of Chicago.

Theater Changes—Hits—Personal Notes.

Herschberg & Pullson of Joliet have sold the Star theater at Waukegan to Frank Jeffers and Henry Hoffmeyer of that city. Jeffers is owner of the Tenth street theater and will operate both houses. Mondays, Tuesdays and Fridays the Star will be a five cent house and at other times, ten cents will be charged.

The Coliseum at Paxton is now under the management of the Coliseum Amusement company composed of four young men of that city.

John J. Berschat of Aurora has opened the Century theater at Mishawaka, Ind., with vaudeville and moving pictures.

The Clayton Opera house at Clayton was destroyed. It had not been used for a year, but moving picture equipment owned by H. S. Toops was consumed.

The Lyric at Rock Falls has installed a new Minusa gold fibre screen.

Dick Diamond is erecting a thirty-two foot addition to his Castle theater at Havana which will increase the seating capacity to 500.

Fire which swept the business section of Raymond destroyed the Empress theater owned by A. R. McNeal. There was no insurance.

The Rich theater in Maywood has booked "Neptune's Daughter."

Randall Parrish is a native of Kewanee so Manager Chris. Taylor of Dreamland in that city booked the Universal "The Yellow Star" which he wrote, for two days October 17-18.

"The Suburban" with King Baggot was repeated at the Princess. C. T. Dazey, the author, is a Quincy citizen.

"The Juggernaut" played a return date at the Colonial theater at Urbana.

The Princess theater at Quincy announces four reels of first run Universal films for five cents.

The Crystal theater at Decatur showed the films of Odd Fellows' Orphans' and Old Folks' homes on October 8.

HEARD IN MISSOURI.

Samuel Shurman has been announced as the manager of the Fourth Street theater at Moberly, Mo.

The H. & H. Amusement Co. has leased the opera house at Tipton, Mo., from P. F. Ross.

The opera house at Liberal, Mo., owned and managed by John Betz, is to be a moving picture playhouse this winter.

T. C. Hall is remodeling and improving the Star theater at Columbia, and will operate it himself this winter. Mr. Hall is well known in Moberly and Excelsior Springs, Mo., also.

James McDermeit has sold his moving picture theater on North Ninth street, Carthage, Mo., to Ben B. and Porter Blackford, of Paris, Mo.

W. A. Higbee, for 20 years in business in Excelsior Springs, Mo., in various lines, opened the Isis theater the evening of September 30, making his debut as a manager. He remodeled a building he owned into the theater, and has a nice layout.

H. L. BLATTER NOW WITH UNITED FILM.

Miss Katherine Carroll, who, for the past three months, has been handling the United Exchange, has now an assistant, a salesman. This is H. L. Blatter, formerly of Montreal, Canada, and an exhibitor there. He is now working in Missouri territory, and will later cover the field of the United branch, including Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Iowa. The United has had no salesman on the road since June, when H. W. McLoyd quit. The business has been handled by mail, and Miss Carroll seems to have been quite successful in holding customers in that manner.

JAECKE BUILDING NEW HOUSE.

A. E. Jaecke, manager of the Dreamland theater at Herrington, Kansas, is building a new one to take its place. The Dreamland has a fine patronage, running General, V-L-S-E and Metro service, and is a high-class establishment. Therefore, Mr. Jaecke has reason to believe, and the fraternity has, too, that he will succeed even more largely with the 800-seat house he is erecting. An expenditure of about $25,000 or $30,000 is said to be involved, wholly for a theater with no store buildings in connection.

AN INTERESTING SUIT.

J. W. Wendel, who has picture shows in Holton and Junction City, Kan., has been looking toward Hutchinson, a city of over 16,000, for some time. He conceived the notion of giving that town a touch of high life by renting the convention hall, and installing a big picture event. Hutchinson already knows good pictures, with its five houses that are said to be well managed and popular. Mr. Wendel got his plans going well early in September, and got a contract for the use of the hall October 4 to October 16. He was arranging to open with "The Chalice of Courage," and follow with such productions as Marie Dressler's picture and "Mortmain." All was going lovely. The arrangement with Commissioner Flinn, in charge of parks and public buildings, received a ratification by the commissioners September 15. On October 1, unexpectedly, the commissioners rescinded their action, and declared that the hall could not be used for a moving picture exhibition. It is said that one of the objections was the condition of the hall with respect to building regulations affecting picture shows; but Mr. Wendel claims that he has already taken steps to correct any alleged defects of this description. Mr. Wendel brought suit for damages against the commission, to secure the money expended on the enterprise, and such additional compensation as was just. The suit was filed October 7.

Kansas Censor Has Operator Hold Hand Over Lens to Hide Bad Parts of a Film—All He Had Authority to Do—State Censorship Hard on Good Old Films at Prices That Won't Stand Censoring Fees.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Kansas City News Service.

SOME very amusing complications have arisen in Kansas as a result of the censorship law. Complications will undoubtedly continue as long as the law exists and as long as "censorship" is considered necessary for the protection of the public. It was presumed, of course, that as soon as the state assumed the duty of selecting the subjects and scenes for the Kansas people to view that all other organizations of censorship would cease their activities. In many cases, however, the contrary has been the result. The National Board of Censorship is absolutely disregarded by the Kansas state board and the Kansas state board of censorship is in many towns absolutely disregarded by the local authorities and semi-authorities.

At Pittsburg, Kan., one picture was viewed by the local board and eliminations ordered. Nobody had authority to force the matter. So the operator was ordered to hold his hand over the lens while the section objected to was run through the machine. Later, the Kansas board censored the picture. And it permitted to remain practically all the parts that had been hidden from the patrons of the Pittsburgh show. The picture was brought back to Pittsburg, shown as the state censors had O. K.'d it and the people saw the parts that their local board had previously eliminated.

Censorship and Cheap Old Films.

One of the most distressing features of the Kansas censorship law—and the two dollar fee for inspection—is that it practically cuts out Kansas from all the finest films ever made and those which would be a very great value to the young people of the state. But these are old releases which are put out at a low rental and which cannot stand that two dollar fee.

This particular situation hit the Kriterion particularly hard, because the Kriterion has not had any new releases lately. It is said that operations will result in new releases during November which may be sent into Kansas under the censorship laws. A. E. Liles, manager of the Kansas City branch of the Kriterion said that he had laid off Kansas since the order relating to uncensored films was issued by Mr. Ross August 8, but all companies are affected. It is said that there are many complaints throughout the state because of the inability of the exhibitors under this condition of expense to get the classical films that are known all over the country and available everywhere except in Kansas.

Before the order of August 8 was issued, there was a very large number of films that went into Kansas uncensored. The state had to have films and it seemed impossible to have all of them passed on by the state board. Since August, however, many of the agents have been sending uncensored films throughout the state and are still doing so, expressly at the risk of the exhibitor. In such cases, the exhibitor can get either the old releases or the new and they are selecting with the view of pleasing their patrons.

FEATURES AND LONGER RUNS.

Some of the exchange managers at Kansas City are trying to figure out a way to secure to Kansas patrons more of some of the larger films. They saw the practice of changing films daily deprives many patrons of the privilege of seeing them, and that this situation is naturally worse in the larger towns. There is good reason, they maintain, for two and three-day stands of some pictures in towns of 15,000 to 20,000, and even less population, if the exhibitors can be encouraged to advertise the programs vigorously, and so use to advantage the free word of mouth advertising.

In even the smaller towns, the talk which is created by a strong picture will bring crowds the second and third nights. Under present conditions of daily changes the chief appeal to patrons is that "there is a picture show." There seems to be a tendency to expect about the same persons in attendance every night.

Doubtless many experiences along this line will be divulged during the present discussion, and a real working hypothesis evolved.

A NAME WANTED.

The newest moving picture theater in Kansas City has opened on Grand avenue, between Eleventh and Twelfth. It is owned by a group of Kansas City men, with J. H. Goldstein, recently of Oklahoma City, as manager. The house has not yet been christened. Mr. Goldstein is putting on a contest for a good name and is offering a $25 prize. It seats 400 and started October 9 with Mutual service and features. It has two Power's 6A machines.

LOCAL FILM AD MEN MEET.

The Kansas City Advertising Club had a "film advertising" session October 5, at which were present the local manufacturers and distributors of advertising films, and a visitor, Mr. George Porter Smith, representing "Real Publicity Co." Mr. Smith showed a reel of advertising films, and explained the plan of operation of his company. Mr. Smith is running films now at the Benton and the Royal theaters in Kansas City. One of the most interesting features was his display of the popularity of the moving picture, and the attendance of the people at the shows. The Real Publicity company is making contracts with advertisers to run twelve subjects on a reel at the two houses in Kansas City; as other houses are added, the rate of course will be increased, or contracts made for running at a certain number of houses. While prices were not given out, it is understood that the Royal receives a rental of $200 a month, and the Benton a rental of $50 a month. Each of the twelve advertisers pays, it is said, $30 a month for each theater in which the film is shown, with the privilege of having a new picture each month.

The Kansas City Slide company was represented at the meeting by George Wieda, president, and others. This company does almost solely a manufacturing business, making advertising films, or on the order of exhibitors, and sending them to many states.

The Gillette-Runyan Advertising company was represented by Mr. Gillette and J. J. Brown, who makes the pictures for this firm. The Gillette-Runyan company specializes in action scenes, in interiors of the establishments advertised, and direct representations of the members of the firms. It makes contracts with advertisers based on the number of theaters in which it is desired to show the pictures, and the number of changes to be made. It has been particularly successful with advertisers desiring to reach neighborhood trade, and the residence districts, and does not go after the downtown theaters.

There are three theaters in Kansas City which have not made contracts for the use of advertising films, and it is said probably will not do so. These are the Willis Wood, downtown, and the Warwick and the Apollo, residence district houses.

Films at the Lorelei

St. Louis' Big Bath Leased by Gertrude Amusement Company—To Be Changed into a Picture Theater—Will Seat 1,400 Persons on Main Floor—Color Scheme, Details and Decorations.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Gertrude Amusement Company has taken a ten-year lease on the Lorelei Natatorium, at Olive street and Taylor avenue, the building to be changed into a high class moving picture theater. The entire interior will be redecorated and the walls and ceiling treated in trellis panels. An inclined flooring will be placed over the pool proper, and this section will seat about 1,400 persons. The seats and aisles will be spaciously comfortable, while the present walk around the pool will be converted into thirty-four boxes, with a seating capacity of eight in each box. One of the features of the house will be the promenades on the east and west sides, 15 by 125 feet. The management has sacrificed 750 seats in order to leave space for this promenade. There will be no balcony, all seats being on the ground floor.

The color scheme will be old ivory, and draperies, carpets, and equipment will be of the best. There will be a large ornamental canopy over the sidewalk in front of the entrance to the theater. The seats will be so arranged that every seat in the house will have a clear view of the screen, there being no columns or other obstructions. The theater will be known as the Lorelei Feature Playhouse. The lease was consummated by the Landay Real Estate Co., and this firm will also close a long lease with the Gertrude Amusement Company for a large lot across the street, for a high class airdome, which will be erected there next summer, when the Lorelei Natatorium will be reopened for the summer.

LOCAL CENSORSHIP PROSPECTS.

A bill to create a Board of Censors to censor moving picture films before their production in St. Louis was introduced at a meetings of the Board of Aldermen by Alderman Baur, on October 1st. A bill to empower the director of public welfare to censor films was introduced at a previous meeting by Alderman Barney L. Schwartz. Baur's bill provides for three members of the board to be appointed for terms of three years each by the park commissioners. The members are to select one of their number as chairman, and he will receive $1,200 a year and the other two members will receive $900 a year each. Two inspectors at salaries of $100 a month each also are provided for. The board must censor all films except those approved by the National Board of Censors. A fee of $1 for each reel censored up to a thousand feet, and $1 for each succeeding thousand feet is provided. Each film also must bear the stamp of the board for the affixing of which a fee of fifty cents is stipulated.

ANOTHER.

On answering an advertisement in a Sunday paper, Peter Malatis, of 1417 Olive street, was induced to invest $100 in a "great scheme," a moving picture enterprise, by two men in an office on Chestnut street. The men failed to appear the next morning, and Malatis reported the deal to the police.

THE DELMAR NOW MANAGED BY MRS. O. T. CRAWFORD.

Mrs. O. T. Crawford is the latest addition to the ranks of women exhibitors in St. Louis. Mrs. Crawford is the wife of O. T. Crawford, the well known theatrical producer and member of the old Swanson-Crawford film exchange. Three months ago Mrs. Crawford assumed management of the Delmar, one of the largest theaters in St. Louis. The place was in a bad condition, but Mrs. Crawford told her husband she believed she could put it on a paying basis. He was skeptical, the competition is very keen in that neighborhood.

Mrs. Crawford began by making a general cleanup and changing the method of management; she livened the place up by adding ferns, palms and other growing plants in the lobby, and then she changed the name of the house to Rialto. Mrs. Crawford has proved her ability as manager by making the Rialto a very paying proposition, and although she has had several chances of selling the theater, she has refused them all. "I did not know I could manage a theater," she said, "but since I have taken this place and put it on a paying basis, I am going to keep it. It is the most interesting work I've ever done."

New Openings—Business Items—Notes.

The Garrick, on Chestnut street, near Broadway, is undergoing extensive alterations and repairs preparatory to opening on October 10th with an eight weeks' engagement with the "Birth of a Nation" when that feature closes a six weeks' run at the Olympic theater on October 9th. The Garrick, although primarily a straight dramatic house has several times run big photoplay features for a few weeks at a time.

The Hickory theater, at Jefferson and Hickory streets, has opened for the season. The place has been brightened up and treated to general refurnishing and refurbishing.

The Grand Duchess theater, formerly the Hippodrome, at 6th and Walnut streets, which has been picketed by representatives of two different unions, one giving out bills declaring the place fair, and the other branding it as unfair, is at last free from trouble, and both sets of pickets have been withdrawn.

The new Chaplin Comedy, "Shanghaied," was shown at four down town theaters all within a few blocks of one another on the day of release, and every manager reports good business with the subject.

MANAGER PLAME OPENS INDIANAPOLIS OFFICE.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

SAMUEL PLAME, formerly of the Chicago office, Famous Players Film Company, has opened an office for the Famous Players Company in Indianapolis. Mr. Plame has a suite that in point of elegance sets a new mark, and the secret lies in the fact that he is among the first to keep the business office and the storage separate. The paper and packages, the shipping room, made space in office buildings expensive, especially as office buildings demand a premium from film companies because of the extra hazard which they claim is involved. Mr. Plame rented for office business only, and the storage is in the second floor of the Indianapolis Bill Posting Company building. The office and the storage are connected by private line telephone, so that the arrangement is convenient.

J. W. DALE BUYS ROYAL.

J. W. Dale has bought the Royal at Fairmount, Ind., from C. L. Pemberton. Mr. Pemberton built the theater four years ago and has been running it since that time.

VANDAWALKER GOES TO WORLD FILM.

D. M. Vandawalker, traveling representative for the General Film Company in Indiana for the last three years, has joined the World Film Corporation and will cover the same territory. Mr. Vandawalker assumed his new duties Oct. 4.

PERRY DAVIS BUYS THEATER.

Perry Davis bought the Palace, Greentown, from J. E. Davis, and is enlarging the seating capacity, raising the floor and adding a new front and a Power's 6-A. He will call it the Star.

KRITERION MAN FINDS BUSINESS GOOD.

General conditions are improving in Indiana, according to Elmer Brient, traveling representative of the Kriterion Film Service, Indianapolis office, who has just returned from a trip over the state.

"I asked the different exhibitors," said Mr. Brient, "as to what the general conditions were and found business better, especially in Kokomo, Marion, Elwood, Alexandria, Lafayette and Frankfort. The exhibitors are optimistic over the outlook for a good fall and winter business."

BLUFFTON'S FIVE THEATERS.

The five theaters in Bluffton, Ind., are running to good patronage. The Palace and the Gaiety recently opened, and the Star, Mystic and Grand, already had the field. The new managers (the Palace under W. H. Sawyer, the Gaiety under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bommerschein and Jack Belger) are convinced there is room for five houses. Bluffton has been a "dry" town for eight years and the theater patronage has been increasing steadily ever since. This may not be the reason, but it is credited in Bluffton.

HE LET 'EM RUN.

Rev. W. O. Stovall, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Richmond, Ill., has filed a protest with Mayor Robbins against the Skydome, complaining the music at the airdome disturbs the Sunday night church service.

Mayor Robbins' attitude is imminently just. He says, "Aw, let 'em run, it will soon be winter."

A HOOSIER WHEEZE.

Commenting on the $3 movies in New York, a Hoosier editor rises to remark that New York, long famous as the place where you could get more to eat for 10 cents and less for $2 than anywhere in the world, is now extending the reputation into other fields. It is all a question of refinement and cash, of whether one wants his beans with or without the breeze.

FRANK CHAPMAN BUYS COLONIAL AT SOUTH BEND.

Frank Chapman has taken over the interests of C. C. Trump and Patrick Clifford, former owner of the Colonial theater, South Bend. October 3 was the "grand opening" under the new management. Mr. Chapman says he will run features daily.

FRED B. SWANSON TO MANAGE GRAND AT GARY.

Fred B. Swanson, who has been managing the Twentieth Century theater, Gary, for the past six months, will be manager of the Grand theater exclusively in the future. The business at the Grand has been growing so fast that it is necessary to give it undivided attention. A. J Brandon, Chicago, succeeds Mr. Swanson at the Twentieth Century.

MICHIGAN THEATER SOLD.

E. P. Hunter has bought the Michigan theater, Michigan and Jefferson streets, Indianapolis.

NEW EVANSVILLE, IND., AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

The New Majestic Amustment Company, Evansville, Ind., has been incorporated with $10,000 capital stock to conduct moving picture theaters. The incorporators are Philip Skora, Edward H. Meyer, Edward E. Meyer, Arnulf B. Clintura and Oscar Negele.

INDIANAPOLIS TO HAVE FINE NEW HOUSE.

The deal for a splendid new theater in Indianapolis, something more pretentious than the city has ever known or expected, has at last been negotiated, and Morris Cohn, of Denver, and Ben Cohn, of Spokane, are now owners of a ninety-nine year lease on the largest available piece of downtown property in Indianapolis. Messrs. Cohn expect to build a $200,000 house that will be all that a theater should be in matter of appointments, convenience and comfort, with something added in the name of elegance.

The property obtained is five sided, and in all likelihood will be the easiest house to empty that can be found anywhere, size considered.

The rental the first ten years will be $12,000, the second ten, $15,000, and the remaining seventy-nine years, $18,000.

NEW B. C. & C. HOUSE.

Bingham, Crose and Cohen, Indianapolis, are building a new house on South Illinois street, Indianapolis. Messrs. Bingham, Crose and Cohen are the proprietors of several theaters in Indianapolis, also of the Empress Feature Film company. The new house, it is said, will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000.

BRIEF INDIANA ITEMS.

The Crystal theater, Decatur, Ind., is putting on a popularity contest with film stardom in a local production as the lure Manager Harrigan of the Grand, Newcastle, Ind., has arranger with the Victoria Film Company of Cincinnati to put on "Ruth's Romance" in Newcastle the latter part of October. Local talent picked in a popularity contest will be used.

The Why Not theater, Greenfield, Ind., has contracted for a Wurlitzer pipe organ. The instrument, it is stated, will cost $3,000.

John S. Purnett of Jeffersonville, Ind., has sold his theater in Shelbyville, Ky., the Green Dragon, to the Majestic Theater Company of Louisville, Ky.

Manager Kaler of the Royal theater, Newcastle, Ind., has installed a mirror screen and a rectifier.

The New Union theater, Indianapolis, staged another act in the strike on the house. Four union pickets met in police court with sore heads and sore spirits, while two policemen were kept busy denying they had used the night stick. The four started something, or were the victims of starters, and all landed in the lockup.

C. E. Rogers, manager of Crumps theater, Columbus, Ind., has signed up for Fox features, Paramount features, the General Film service, and the Red Rooster features.

Miss Anna Shilt has been appointed pianist at the Majestic, Monon, Ind.

Roy E. Gaines has bought the Princess theater, Huntinburg, Ind., and will operate it in connection with his house at Rockport, Ind. Gaines contemplates opening a theater at Ferdinand, Ind., so as to have enough to do all the time.

The Croxton opera house, Angola, Ind., has opened to pictures and is now giving shows three nights a week, except when a "regular" show is booked for one of the movie nights.

Dickson Brothers, lessees of the Yarnelle and Orpheum theaters, Wabash, have bought the Logan theater of H. S. Logan. The house was rechristened the Colonial.

The Star theater, Hartford City, is remodeling.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Morris have opened up the New Gem at Union City, Tenn.

The Orpheum, Hartford City, is putting on the comic camera work on the unsuspecting local inhabitant.

Christie Rogers has been named assistant manager of the Grand, Owensboro, Ky., succeeding W. A. Wall, resigned.

Gardner and Usher are building a new house at Eighth and Broadway, Mayfield, Ky. W. F. Grau, present manager of the Dixie, will manage the new house.

PRAIRIE STATES NEWS LETTER.

No Need for Special Village Censorship.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

VILLAGE officials in Chisholm have discovered that there already is a state law prohibiting the attendance of minors at theaters which show pictures depicting crimes and the proposed censorship ordinance may not be necessary.

The movement for the ordinance was started by Humane Officer Brown. It was for the purpose of preventing the showing of films dealing with the facts of the Frank case that he urged the council to pass the ordinance. The council agreed with him that such pictures are demoralizing, but does not deem it necessary to duplicate the state law.

New Luverne House.

City Attorney C. H. Christopherson delivered an address at the opening of the New Palace theater in Luverne, formally testifying to the city's gratitude to Manager Herman Jochims for such a beautiful theater. Pictures will predominate in the bookings.

New Theaters—Sales—Notes.

E. R. Crosby will erect a new moving picture theater at St. Charles.

An additional story will be built to the Grand theater at Floodwood, owned by J. H. Mueller.

L. E. Turner, of St. Paul, has purchased the Grand theater at Springfield from C. H. Dunn.

Following a film fire at the Grand theater at McIntosh a new operating room has been built and the house has been redecorated.

George Kaupp, who recently bought the opera house at Blue Earth, announces he will give no Sunday shows.

F. Ransom and W. E. Woodward of Mason City, Ia., have purchased the Strand theater at Fairmont from Harry E. Gilbert.

The Dale theater at St. Paul showed "Rumpelstiltskin" at a Saturday fairy-tale matinee.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

New Theaters Open—Leases—Improvements.

THE Princess theater at Aberdeen, S. D., is adding fifty feet to its length to give 150 more seats. It will be redecorated in golden oak and mottled gold walls.

A new moving picture show will be opened in the Glerum building on Fourth street in Devil's Lake, N. D., by Mrs. Faust, of Watertown, S. D.

A. K. Pay, of the Colonial theater at Sioux Falls, S. D., had 4,000 feet of film made of that city.

Alex Soderlund and Louis Canedy have taken a year's lease on the opera house at Bryant, S. D.

Manager Phillips opened his new Garrick theater at Fargo, N. D., with a Paramount program to capacity business. Cream is the foundation of decorations in the beautiful new house.

George B. Myers of Lake Preston has opened a new moving picture show at Erwin, S. D.

R. C. Gibbs will remodel a cafe at Huron, S. D., for use as a moving picture theater.

IN NEBRASKA.

New Houses and Changes.

AUSTIN KING, of Orchard, and Mr. Drayton, of Neligh, have opened a new show in Orchard.

Paul Hoppen, who sold the Crescent theater in Kearney, has leased the Isis theater in that city.

Everett Karthaas and Leo Lachnit sold the Lyric theater at Humphrey to Jacob Krebs.

Harvey Dimmitt has purchased the Lyric theater at Wymore from A. P. Ake.

A. D. Lord is contemplating erecting a new moving picture theater at Holdredge.

Grant Garner, mortgagee of the Garnet moving picture theater at Blair, bought that house at a mortgage sale. He may reopen it.

The Gem theater at Alliance has been temporarily closed.

Dr. George E. Condra, of the University of Nebraska, showed moving pictures of the resources of the state at the Farmers' National Congress at Omaha.

IN IOWA.

Des Moines May See "Nation" Film.

IT IS rumored in Des Moines that the Majestic theater may become a Triangle Film theater, opening with "The Birth of a Nation."

Sue Theater for Prize Auto.

Effie Condon of Ida Grove has brought suit against a moving picture theater in that town, say press reports, for $800, the value of an automobile which was given away in a voting contest by the playhouse a short time ago and to which Miss Condon laid claim, but did not receive.

Floods Down Pisgah Way.

Floods damaged the moving picture theater at Pisgah, owned by H. W. Kerr, when the Soldier River overflowed. Water was more than waist high in the business part of the town.

Praise for Cedar Rapids House.

A. Fremont Olsen, of the building department of the city of Chicago, went to Cedar Rapids to inspect the Majestic and Strand theaters, both of which he approved. Of the Strand, he said: "No theater in Chicago is more modern or constructed along safer lines."

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS IN TEXAS.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE initial showing of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," in Texas, occurred at the Dallas Opera House, Monday night, October 4th, where the theater was crowded with two thousand people.

The "Nation" engagement has been billed for some time and the advance sale of tickets has been exceedingly large. The length of the engagement in Dallas will be two weeks, with matinee and night showings daily.

Many people who have seen the picture previously in New York, Chicago or the West Coast, have not only helped increase the ticket-sale by their enthusiastic comment to their acquaintances, but almost all of these are purchasing tickets to view the spectacle again.

The prices, from 50 cents to $2, are the highest charged in the Southwest for motion pictures, and is the top price for high class dramatic attractions. With the exception of grand opera entertainments, it is "the top" in the Southwest.

SOUTHERN TRADE JOURNAL TO BECOME WEEKLY.

The Southern Theater News, published in Dallas, a motion picture trade magazine that is sent all over the Southern States, is making plans for the magazine to go to a weekly the latter part of November. It has made quite a success as a monthly.

For Liberal Censorship

Vancouver Picture Men Have a Grievance with Censorship Under Present Conditions—Call for Change to Liberal Party in the Province to Get Chance to Appeal from Unwarranted Decisions.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ANOTHER determined campaign against the British Columbia brand of censorship is about to be launched in Vancouver. Following a carnival of rejections early last week, the writer accompanied two of the local exchange managers on a call at the office of a leading local paper, where an interview had been arranged with the powers that be. A few of the rejected reels had previously been run off for the benefit of the advertising manager, who confessed that he saw not the slightest ground for objection to some of them. Although a definite decision was deferred pending further investigation of the censorship question, it is thought that this newspaper will soon be lending active assistance in the fight.

The climax was reached on Saturday, October 2 (since this visit), when the six-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Island of Regeneration," by Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, was rejected by the censor, and its showing forbidden on the ground that it is an "immoral" picture. Week after week the local film men are treated to the spectacle of an individual of average intelligence ruthlessly slaughtering the productions of the master minds of drama and literature. And from his autocratic decisions there is no appeal, nor will there be until the government which fosters and abets his activities is voted out of power. All suggestions for an appeal board are flatly turned down. Even statistics concerning rejections are suppressed.

To the exhibitors of this province the assurance is given that every vote cast for the Liberal party at the coming election brings just so much nearer the appointment of a new censor, and the establishment of an appeal board to pass on his rejections. The new censor would not be more narrow-minded than the present one—depend on that—and the appeal board has been promised by the Liberal leaders. "The exhibitors," said a leading picture man this week, "be they Liberals or Conservatives, owe it to themselves, their business, and their patrons, to smash any institution that gives to one political job-holder the absolute control over their business. If there ever was a time for exhibitors to work, and work together, that time is right now." Singly an exhibitor can do nothing, principally on account of this club, contained in paragraph 18 of the Moving Pictures Act: (A license to conduct a picture show, it will be seen, must be secured from the censor.)

"(2.) The Censor may in his discretion refuse to grant a license to any person, and may suspend or cancel any license which has been issued: Provided that the refusal, suspension, or cancellation of any license by the Censor under this section shall be subject to an appeal to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council." (This is the only action of the censor on which an appeal is allowed.)

WILL DISTRIBUTE V-L-S-E FILMS IN CANADA.

Although there are no V-L-S-E offices in Canada, the features put out by this organization will hereafter be shown in every city of importance in the western provinces, comprising about one-half of the Dominion. W. P. Dewees, manager of the Rex theater in Vancouver, who is to control the policy of a great circuit now being formed, has inaugurated a system of distribution which foreshadows a general development, and seems an ideal arrangement from the standpoint of the exhibitor.

The features are imported from the V-L-S-E branch in Seattle, and are given first run at the Rex, after which they will be sent over the circuit. "I believe," said Mr. Dewees, "that this system will be quite generally used within a very short time, as it eliminates the expense of conducting an exchange, and permits the showing of a single print over an extended territory with practically no lost time.

"Each exhibitor using the service will pay his pro rata share of the duty on each subject shown, the house with a hundred dollar service paying twice as much as one using a fifty dollar service. Aside from this, there will be no other expense except the express charges. The Rex and Globe theaters in Vancouver, the Columbia in Victoria, and the Province in Winnipeg, have already contracted for this service, and John A. Schuberg (manager of the latter theater), who will have charge of the eastern end of the circuit, is now arranging contracts with exhibitors in Manitoba.

"A representative is about to be sent to Calgary, Edmonton, and other points in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and in a very short time the circuit idea will be in operation on a scale hitherto unheard of in the film industry."

FILMS AT THE WALKER.

Pathe's "Via Wireless" followed "The Spoilers" for a week at the Walker in Winnipeg, Man., thus giving pictures two weeks out of the first three in the regular theatrical season. The Walker is the leading legitimate house in this section of Canada. One evening during the run of the picture Manager Walker set aside 300 seats for the Winnipeg Telegram carrier boys, who marched to the theater in a body.

YE WORLD MAN'S THANKS.

R. H. Scanlon, manager of the Patricia at Powell River, B. C., has just purchased a new speed boat, and on a trip taken in it last week secured two fine deer. The World man was remembered with a delicious roast of venison. (Thanks, Brother Scanlon.) Mr. Scanlon is using Mutual service, and reports good business with "The Diamond from the Sky." The large party of Australian Cadets now visiting western Canada were Mr. Scanlon's guests on the evening spent at Powell River.

UNIVERSAL HAS NEW BOOKER.

W. F. Barrett, manager of the Universal office at Winnipeg, reports that Austin C. Blackwell, formerly of the Picture Playhouse of Toronto, has been added to his staff, and is now in charge of the booking department.

PITTSFIELD'S COLONIAL SOLD.

By Edwin H. McClosky, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Colonial theater has been sold by the Pittsfield Theater company to the Goldstein Bros. Amusement company, of Springfield, which will take possession on October 16 and actively inaugurate its management about November 1. The transfer includes all the real and personal property of every kind. The price is not given out; but the Colonial, the most modern and beautiful theater in the city and kept by its former owners always up to the minute, cost about $75,000 about eight years ago. Since then considerable sums have been expended upon it by the Pittsfield Theater company and local realty valuations have made a marked advance. The Colonial was purchased a few years ago by local business men of wealth, from a public-spirited purpose to assure the best theatrical attractions for Pittsfield.

SAMUEL BERNFIELD.

Samuel Bernfield of Pathe is one of the youngest of New England exchange managers. He is a native of New Haven, Conn., has been in the moving picture business since 1910, when he became associated with the Portland office of the General Film company. He was afterwards transferred to the Seattle branch of the General Film in charge of the inspection room. In 1912, he was sent to the St. Louis office as traveling representative, covering Missouri, Arkansas and Southern Illinois. He then assumed charge of the feature department of the New England office.

Samuel Bernfield.

In March, 1914, he opened the New England office of the Eclectic Film company with but one roadman and three rooms in the Olympia building Scollay square. He now has five roadmen and occupies six rooms. His office help has increased from three persons to twenty-one.

STEPHEN BOGRETT PROMOTED—GOES TO LEWISTON, ME.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

Stephen Bogrett.

MANAGER STEPHEN BOGRETT of the Park theater in Bangor, Me., controlled by the Keith interests and the largest moving picture theater east of Portland, and also manager of the Bijou theater, moving pictures and vaudeville, has been transferred to Lewiston, Maine, where he is to manage the Lewiston theater newly taken over and Lewiston Music Hall. A. P. Bibber, who for several years has been manager of Music Hall, will succeed him in Bangor.

The Lewiston theater is a large new house fully described in the Moving Picture World last January. Its seating capacity is 2,100 and it has one of the largest and best appointed stages in Maine. In the future it will be devoted exclusively to vaudeville while Music Hall, where the vaudeville has thus far been played, will be made a picture house.

Born in Eastport, Maine, Manager Bogrett, was first manager of the Jefferson in Portland and for many summers was identified with summer theaters in Portland harbor. There is no abler press agent in the state of Maine than Mr. Bogrett. His transfer to Lewiston is a promotion and his many friends will wish him high success.

TINKER GOES TO UNITED.

Earle B. Tinker has resigned from the Phoenix Film Corporation as its Maine representative and accepted the position as branch manager of the United Film Service, Inc., of which Mr. F. B. Murphy is president. Mr. Tinker's early training in the business was under the direction of Mr. F. H. Vine, and he has also been associated with such men as Mr. W. R. Seates.

Advertising for Boom

San Francisco Exhibitors Begin Vigorous Campaign for Bumper Winter Trade—Publicity on Scale Not Tried Before—Growth of House Weeklies—Note on Newspaper Advertising and Rates.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITORS in the San Francisco territory are looking forward to a remarkable winter season and preparations are now being made by a number of them for the launching of campaigns of systematic advertising on a scale such as has never been seen here before. At the present time business is undoubtedly being interfered with by the P-I Exposition and this is being felt especially by exhibitors in the suburban cities. The big fair comes to an end early in December and it is anticipated that after a year of such excitement people will not be willing to do without amusement and the prices charged by exhibitors will seem very small, compared with those they have been accustomed to pay.

Among the exhibitors in this field who has already commenced a campaign of publicity out of the ordinary is Mr. Rex Midgley, of the Franklin theater, Oakland. The Franklin News, a four page weekly started recently, has already proved a success. It has been found possible to secure enough advertising to pay for its publication. Devoted almost exclusively to the productions booked for the Franklin, the information concerning these is given in a breezy style.

The success of the Oakland publication has been such that plans are being made by James Beatty, of the Liberty theater, San Jose, and by the management of the Sequoia at Sacramento for putting out similar weeklies. These are not designed to take the place of regular newspaper advertising, but to supplement press notices. Newspaper advertising in California has never been tried out on a large scale by exhibitors, except in a few interior cities. Exhibitors claim that the rates demanded by morning papers in San Francisco are prohibitive and the notices of moving picture houses rarely exceed four inches single column in the display section. At Fresno, however, full page advertisements are frequently run by the management of the Kinema, and at Sacramento several houses have used from a half page to a full page at times.

VALESKA SURATT HATS.

The Emporium, the largest department store on the Pacific Coast, recently devoted an entire window to a display of the Valeska Suratt "Soul" hat, modeled from the headdress worn by this actress in "The Soul of Broadway." The millinery department had a great run on these and the film production was well advertised even before its coming was announced in the daily press. A leading store of Oakland, Cal., will also feature the hat extensively before the film is shown at the Franklin theater.

NEW COMMERCIAL FILM.

Herman Lubfin, a prominent operator of San Francisco, and George Smith, an operator of Oakland, Cal., have opened a moving picture studio at Sixth and Market streets under the name of the Commercial Moving Picture company. A specialty will be made of commercial and local work.

JEWEL CITY ITEMS.

A. W. Goff, coast division manager of the V-L-S-E, Inc., has returned from a trip to Denver and Salt Lake, where branch exchanges were established and are now in working order.

E. M. Asher, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, has returned from a six weeks' vacation spent in the mountains of northern California.

The Fox Film Corporation is advising customers in this territory that after October 15 all film service will be on a cash basis.

J. B. Spaugh, who conducts the Colonial theater at Eureka, Cal., was a recent visitor here, coming down before the rainy season commences.

A. Higgins and wife, of the Unique, Santa Cruz, Cal., were up this week from the famous sea side resort.

The Hayes, on Hayes street, has been sold by Abe Markowitz to Walter Lyons, who conducts the Venus theater on Market street.

Harry Cohen, representing the Metro, is expected to reach San Francisco shortly, coming by way of the Pacific Northwest.

C. U. Robinson, a prominent exhibitor of Monterey, Cal., was here recently to look over new releases and to see the Exposition.

The Golden Gate Exchange has secured the Coast rights to "Guarding Old Glory."

The management of the Washington Square theater on North Beach is again vested in Estes & Roth.

C. A. Riffe, formerly of San Rafael, has opened a moving picture house at 135 Raymond avenue, Visitacion Valley, San Francisco.

George Johnson, formerly of the Regent of this city, has gone to Arizona to engage in business.

A number of local film exchanges are giving up the mounting of posters and are turning this work over to Davis Bros., who make a specialty of handling advertising paper.

Arthur Lucas, a prominent exchange man of Philadelphia, was a recent visitor to San Francisco and the Exposition.

CALIFORNIA JOTTINGS.

H. Richards has opened a moving picture house at Firebaugh, Cal., and installed a Powers Cameragraph No. 6A.

The Progress theater, on Fillmore street, will close for one week to enable the finishing touches to be put on the remodeling and decorating work that has been commenced.

Several changes have been made of late in the operating room of the Empress theater, including the installation of two Type S Simplex machines supplied by G. A. Metcalfe.

President C. C. Moore, of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, has purchased a Power's Cameragraph No. 6A and a Simplex moving picture camera from G. A. Metcalfe. He plans to take pictures and show them at week-end parties given at his out-of-town home.

The Grove theater at Oakland, Cal., has been purchased by Fred W. Schafer.

E. J. Gannon, of Winters, Cal., has purchased a stereopticon outfit and will give illustrated lectures in conjunction with moving picture entertainments.

Olson Bros. have taken over the Myrtle theater at Monrovia, Cal.

E. M. Asher, for some time with the Golden Gate Film exchange at San Francisco, is at his former home at Susanville, Cal., but plans to return to the Bay city in about a month.

The Claremont, at Oakland, Cal., has been sold to S. S. Grange, formerly of Portland, Ore., and Mr. Purdy has purchased rights in several western states for "The Mix-Up."

J. S. Monez has purchased a traveling moving picture outfit and has started upon the road to visit towns having a foreign population. He began his tour at Hayward, Cal.

TRIANGLE FILMS AT THE ISIS.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER BAXTER, of the Isis, announces that, beginning October 24, he will show Triangle films in his house. To those Denver people who have been following the Triangle productions in the trade papers, and the newspapers, this comes as an important announcement. In fact, the exhibitors of this whole territory, of which Denver is the center, are showing great enthusiasm over the offerings.

Walter S. Rand, the Triangle Denver manager, has just returned from a trip to Salt Lake, Ogden, Boise, Butte, Great Falls, Billings and Sheridan, all of which towns he has charge, and reports the greatest enthusiasm prevailing.

AT NEW TRIANGLE OFFICE.

The new Denver Triangle office has been opened, and is one of the finest in the city. It is fitted up handsomely with mahogany furniture, and has all the modern conveniences, including a big fireproof film vault. The offices are conveniently located on the ground floor of the Weight Building. All they lack to absolutely complete it is a projection room.

FINE ORCHESTRA AT PRINCESS.

Manager E. E. Ellison, manager of the Princess theater in Denver, has just employed Carallo's orchestra, one of the best in town, to play at his theater afternoons and evenings. The orchestra is composed of fourteen pieces. It was a great joy to the patrons of the house to have the artistic and yet unobtrusive accompaniment to the pictures. The Princess is one of the prettiest and one of the highest class theaters in town.

MANAGER BUCKWALTER ON TRIP

Manager Buckwalter, of the Kleine-Edison exchange, is on a business trip to Salt Lake. He has been gone about a week, but is expected back in a few days.

"DAMAGED GOODS" COMING.

Harry Lustig, manager of the Mutual exchange, which is, by the way, about the busiest exchange in Denver, reports that "Damaged Goods" is booked at the Princess theater for a week's or ten days' run, at advanced prices. Denver people are curious about this picture, and it is expected to draw good houses.

FRANCIS T. ROBINSON HAS NEW SYSTEM FOR WORLD FILM.

Francis T. Robinson, traveling auditor for the World Film Corporation, is in town improving the system for the local exchange. Mr. Robinson has been in this territory for about six months, but here a few days only.

HIS BUSINESS HELPED BY BAROMETERS.

Manager Buckwalter of the Kleine-Edison film exchange has an unique innovation in his office. Mr. Buckwalter figures that to make the most for Kleine-Edison he must keep the films he handles rented every possible minute. But if he figures on only ten or fifteen minutes between the time that the train gets in, bringing the films from their last renting place, and the time when the next renter wishes to open his show, he is apt to come to grief, if the train should be the least bit late.

Usually, train delays are due to storms. So, to be able to know when he can count on late trains, and make due allowance for them, Mr. Buckwalter has placed eight barometers in his office. These he carefully studies. He can forsee a storm for several days, he says, and thus save himself trouble. His barometers are the first things he looks at in the morning and the last at night.

DENVER NOTES.

Mr. Ledoux, one of the owners of the Empress theater in Omaha, is in town visiting his old friend, Mr. Frank Harris, manager of the V-L-S-E office here. Mr. Ledoux will remain in town for several days.

At a recent private showing the World feature, "Trilby," made a decided hit with Denver exhibitors and critics. The picture was run off at the Empress theater to an assemblage of exhibitors from all over the state.

PATHE TO BOOK THROUGH BUTTE.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DISTRICT MANAGER QUINBY of the Pathe local office for Seattle, Spokane and Butte, spent a couple of days in the city last week on a business trip. He was in conference with P. L. Carroll, local manager, and is making a general inspection trip over his territory.

He went from Spokane to Butte, where he is to open a branch office, and said: "We will make direct releases through the Butte office the same as in Spokane and Seattle. Our bookings on 'Neal of the Navy,' are much better than we expected and the Pantages circuit of theaters have booked them to run serially in connection with their vaudeville attractions."

G. A. HAGER BOOSTING SPECIAL CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

G. A. Hager, manager of the local branch of the Universal and who also does the road work for the territory, wants at present, especially to interest exhibitors in occasional special programs for children owing to the success the Clemmer theater of Spokane in that line each Saturday morning.

Mr. Hager is offering the feature "The Beauty and the Beast" and a good comedy together at special rates as a starter sample of what will be good for a childrens' show. The feature, he points out, is one that will stand repeating and he has bought a brand new copy that he is ready to book.

SECOND RUN FOX FEATURES AT MAJESTIC THEATER.

A. H. McMillan, manager of the Majestic theater has arranged for the second run pictures of the William Fox productions to be shown in his theater three days of each week. The first of these will be shown starting October 10. It will be Theda Bara in "A Fool There Was," which was a good drawing card at the Liberty some months ago. This will be followed October 17 by "The Nigger," or "The New Governor."

Mr. McMillan is doing considerable publicity in connection with this arrangement and, aside from newspaper advertisements started a week ago, is getting out diamond shaped red and green cards announcing the coming changes of program.

SPOKANE HITS.

"Milestones of Life," with Mignon Anderson in the leading role and "The Battle of Ambrose and Walrus" drew well at the Class A theater.

"The Regeneration," from Kildare's book "My Mamie Rose," was a profitable picture at the Casino Theater.

Julius Steger, in "The Master of the House,' 'and The Pathe Weekly were the Liberty's best drawing attractions.

"Little Brother of the Rich," with Hobart Bosworth in the title role proved a profitable attraction at the Rex.

Lillian Gish, star in "Enoch Arden," appeared at the Lyric and the performances were largely attended.

Mary Pickford in "Esmeralda" proved a pleasing attraction to large audiences four days last week. A two-part picture of Sara Bernhardt and her home life also attracted the attention of the audiences.

Raise Statewide

Other Oregon Towns Indicate They Will Follow Portland's Price Raise—All Portland Downtown Houses Now Affected—Some Are Watching Its Effect on Business—Longer Runs to Follow Price Raise.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

ROAD men returning from Eastern and Southern Oregon advise that the indications are favorable to a state-wide raise to 15 cents in all first-class houses now charging 10 cents. All have been waiting for the Portland raise to materialize, which event has happened, and all the downtown houses of the metropolis are now in line. In Southern Oregon the raise has been in mind for some time, but in the eastern part of the state the movement is just being started. W. A. Long, Star theater, Oregon City, advised that he would watch the success of the venture in Portland, and Charles Schram, Grand theater, same town, is now receiving 25 and 15 cents for his big features. Down the river, in Astoria and Clatskanine, there is also much talk of raising to 15 cents.

The raise in Portland's downtown theaters makes the price of admission 15 cents irrespective of seat location and Orton E. Goodwin, manager of the National, is advocating a 10 cent balcony price. The Sunset theater is the only house affected which has signified its intention to run vaudeville in connection with pictures, confining the former part of the program to one act.

LONGER RUNS IN SIGHT.

Following the policy of the first-class houses in San Francisco and Los Angeles, the Peoples and Star theaters will run one program a full week in the place of two a week as is now the practice. The name "Star" will be changed, the new name not being yet decided upon.

"KIRK."

We are printing the photograph of A. S. Kirkpatrick, road man out of Portland, Ore., for the Mutual Company. C. J. Kerr, manager of the Portland Mutual office, does not hesitate to say that he thinks Mr. Kirkpatrick is the brightest and best looking road man in this territory.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is a recent addition to the Portland Mutual forces, having resigned the position of City Traffic Engineer to take over the exploitation of Mutual's new program. One of Mr. Kirkpatrick's innovations is a post card poster which he sends ahead of him announcing his coming as "The Man With A Message."

A. S. Kirkpatrick.

RECORD BUSINESS AT NATIONAL.

With a prospect of 37,000 attendance during the week, the National theater has been doing a record business with "Damaged Goods"—7,180 Sunday, 4,000 Monday, 5,150 Tuesday and the balance of the week unaccounted for, the attendance may warrant holding the picture over another week. Manager Goodwin states the house is the pioneer in the 15 cent field with a regular film program and no added attractions.

PENDLETON'S NEW HOUSES.

Downey and Rhodes have remodeled the old Cozy theater, Pendleton, Ore., and will reopen it under the name of the Temple; 700 additional seats have been installed, making a total seating capacity of about 1,200. The house opens Oct. 17 with Pathe's "The Galloper."

C. Guy Matlock, a prominent theater man of Pendleton, Ore., is preparing to erect another large motion picture theater there. It is said he has already purchased a site, paying $25,000 therefor.

FORMER ANTIPODEAN OPENS PORTLAND HOUSE.

Max E. Gjedsted, formerly manager of the Criterion theater, Sidney, Australia, has reopened the Star theater, Sellwood, Portland. Mr. Gjedsted, who is a recent arrival in the United States, is applying some novel and successful ideas to the management of his house. He has had his theater entirely refinished and some very neat announcement cards told of its opening. Charlie Chaplin on the General program was his opening feature.

SMITH CONTROLS DALLAS.

W. A. Ayers was in Portland recently and stated that he had disposed of the Grand and Star theaters in Dallas, Ore., to O. C. Smith, giving him the control of the town. Mr. Ayers is contemplating purchasing another theater in Portland or vicinity.

PATHE OPEN AT NIGHT.

Walter Wessling, manager of the Portland Pathe office, announces that he has thrown away the key to the front door of that institution and has put on a night force to handle the increasing business. Ed Hudson will have charge of the night shift. "We Never Close" will be Pathe's slogan.

COWBOY FILMS READY.

Films of the two Northwest rodeos, the Pendleton Roundup and the Walla Walla Frontier Days, have been made and are ready for distribution. The Pendleton Roundup Film Company of Portland will handle the Roundup films for the western territory and Max M. Pullman will supply the eastern states.

The Walla Walla Frontier Days, photographed by W. A. Van Scoy and W. Bicknell, will be handled by the photographers and will show in Walla Walla soon. Both of these rodeos are big drawing cards in the Northwest.

CHASING THINGS.

Gus A. Metzger, the hustling manager of the Film Supply Co. of Oregon, which has the reputation of working its films harder than any other concern in the territory, uses his automobile to connect films with train time if the occasion requires. Recently Mr. Metzger drove to McMinnville, a distance of 45 miles, to bring films to Portland which would have been delayed by the regular train schedule.

SOUTHERN OREGON NOTES.

Dr. F. C. Page has leased his theater, the Page, Medford, Ore., to Mr. and Mrs. George Hunt, who will continue Dr. Page's progressive policy. Bert Noyes, former house manager for Dr. Page, will remain in Medford as his private secretary.

The Eugene theater, Eugene, Ore., will show pictures every night except one when Sullivan and Considine vaudeville will hold the boards. The General program will be used.

George Rolfe, who was a visitor in Portland recently, has taken back his old house at Albany, the Rolfe theater.

A new theater is contemplated at Springfield.

Fred Moore, who has been running motion pictures at the opera house, Grants Pass, has his new theater nearly completed and is moving his equipment from his old stand.

EDISON.

THE SEVENTH DAY (Oct. 27).—The cast: Sally Crute, Raymond McKee and Mabel Dwight.

Minnie Hope, a saleslady, is an idealist. She longs for the social life and all the things that wealth and culture can give. Six days a week she follows the Biblical rule and labors at her station at the ribbon counter. On the seventh day it is her custom to "doll up" and imitate, so far as lies in her power, the manners and customs of the wealthy folk. A parallel case is that of Dudley Dreamer, who for six days a week sells onions and beets, longing for the club room, the polo ground, and the private yacht the while. Fate conspires to bring these two together.

Minnie receives from her aunt an elaborate street dress, which, with a hat and parasol purchased from her savings, helps to fit her out most becomingly and stylishly. On the following Sunday she prepares to go out and give Fifth avenue a treat. On this same Sunday, Dudley has made great preparations for a similar outing, and sallies forth "lit up like a cathedral." They meet in Central Park, and each believes the other to be the pampered child of a multi-millionaire, at least. After having become acquainted, Dudley invites the fair "heiress" to dine with him. She accepts, and when they leave the restaurant, Dudley has just sufficient cash remaining to pay the taxi driver at the door of the hotel where Minnie says she stops.

Hardly has Dudley walked around the corner, after bidding her adieu, when Minnie leaves by another entrance, and goes back to her hall bedroom in the boarding house. The next morning, as she is hurrying to get off to work, she goes to the window for the milk bottle which is standing outside. As she reaches out, she is horrified to see her "wealthy" admirer of the day before reaching out of the window next to her's, and taking from the line a pair of none too perfect socks.

He sees her at the same time, and both "tumble." Dudley decides to make the most of the affair, and offers his apologies. Feeling that he has "nothing on her" in the matter of deception, she accepts, and she also accepts his offer to take her that evening, not to the opera, but to the universally popular "movies." And so they find, if not the realization of their dreams, at least the road to happiness.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 13 (Special—Four Parts—Oct. 29).—The cast: Lillian Herbert, Marc MacDermott, Guido Colucci, Carlton King, T. Tamameto, Lina Davril, Mrs. Wallace Erskine and George Wright.

Count Giuseppe Rizzo, pressed by his creditors, marries June Baxter, heiress to a large fortune, for her money. As the wedding party emerges from the church, Phillipa Garrie, once mistress to the Count, but now cast aside, attempts to stab him. Humiliated, and realizing a side of the Count's nature unknown to her, June secludes herself in her home and orders him out of her sight. To avoid notoriety, she leaves town to take up her home near the site of the plant left her by her father. Together, with Clay Foster, superintendent of the plant, she devotes her time to the welfare of her workmen. By threats of creating public scandal, the Count blackmails June, compelling the payments of large sums of money. As their work at the plant draws them closer together, the seeds of love take root within the breast of Clay Foster and with them a deep hatred for the Count, who refuses to give June a divorce.

After a while, however, hard pressed by his creditors, and a heavy loser at gambling, the Count agrees to grant her a divorce if June will make a settlement upon him. June, determined, leaves for New York, and registers at the Count's hotel. Unbeknown to June, Clay Foster follows her to protect her from harm. The Count's demands upon June are staggering and she refuses to comply with them. The Count is enraged and June saves herself only by her presence of mind. Clay Foster enters the scene, and threatens to kill the Count if he does June any bodily harm.

Adventure and complication follow each other in quick succession. Thirteen, the number on the door of the Count's room in the hotel, has begun to cast its spell about. That night, the Count is murdered. Suspicion falls upon Clay, and he is arrested for the murder. Yet, as the numerous complications begin to untangle themselves, we find that the Count was killed, not by June, because of her fear of him alive; not by Clay, because of his hatred for him; not by Phillipa, because he had blighted her life; nor by Antonio, her father, who had sworn to take vengeance, but by one with no personal ties, urged on merely by the sight of the Count's winnings that night, and cursed by the awful spell, unable to escape the talons of number thirteen.

NIAGARA FALLS (Oct. 30).—Beginning at the Horseshoe Falls, we follow the cameraman around the Rapids, until, from the Canadian shore, we see the wonder of the American Falls. Thence, on to Goat Island, where far more magnificent views of the American and Horse shoe Falls present themselves. Our trip leads us around numerous whirlpools and rapids until, from the Gorge belt-line, we get a view of the whirling rapids, at their worst. Millions of gallons of water rush by us at a furious rate; it makes us wonder how man could ever have bridled such power and turned it to his own interests. Yet, in the distance, we see the factories with their water-wheels helping to create the works of man.

The scene changes as the seasons pass. Winter has come and with it, the frost. The beauty of the falls rushing onward as they stand out in a background of snow and ice, is superb. A tablet marks the spot where, in 1678, Father Hennepin, the first white man to visit the country about Niagara, first saw the splendor of the falls. As a Franciscan missionary, he travelled among the Indians, teaching them the ways of the Creator, and learning from them of His great creation. Our minds turn back to how he must have learned, and marveled at the power of God. The journey leads us around the Rapids on the Gorge railway, and here a panorama of the entire country is opened before us.

YARDVILLE FOLKS (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—The zoologists have long Latin names for them, but to us they will always be, just plain chicks and pups. The little red hen with her burden of chicks, wooly Fido with his dreams of sugar kennels and his dread of iron muzzles. How like us humans! We, too, build castles in the air and awake with a start when the iron muzzle appears in our dreams!

LUBIN.

THE INEVITABLE PENALTY (Oct. 25).—The cast: Gilbert Ely, Octavia Handworth, William Wilson and Louis Mortelle.

Alice's father favors Morgan, but she loves Stephen, the dissolute nephew of her father's enemy, and they elope. The shock causes her father's death. Stephen keeps putting off the marriage ceremoney and she returns to her father's home, not knowing her father died. Stephen hastens after her, explains that his uncle is daily expected to die and he will disinherit him if he marries her. Stephen forges a check, cashes it and is caught before he can escape.

On the eve of Stephen's trial, Morgan is working late preparing the case, when a masked figure enters. At the point of a gun, he takes the evidence from Morgan and flees. Morgan pursues. The chase leads to a bedroom and Alice appears before him in negligee. Morgan obtains from Alice the stolen papers. Alice threatens with a revolver and pleads for the papers, explaining that Stephen swore to marry her if she prevents his conviction by stealing the evidence against him. Stephen, in the meantime, escapes from jail, finds Morgan and Alice in the seemingly compromising position, dares Morgan to phone for the police and sneeringly offers to let Morgan have Alice all to himself for a sum of money. Enraged at the insult to Alice and himself, Morgan almost strangles Stephen. The warden and guards arrive and Stephen is accidentally killed trying to escape. Alice faints in Morgan's arms as picture ends.

PLAYING IN TOUGH LUCK (Oct. 26).—The cast: D. L. Don, Ferdinand O'Beck and Eleanor Blanchard.

Rosie Oldgirl tries to win a husband with her newly-acquired wealth. At a dance she corners Don, tries to get him to make love to her and gets into a quarrel with Edith over him. Don is almost out of the room when he hears Rosie proclaim that the man who marries her will get $100,000 on their wedding day. Immediately he determines not to let that fortune escape him. He leaves the icy-hearted Edith and dances with Rosie. All would have gone well with poor Edith had she not mentioned to George, who has just begged her for a dance, that Rosie is offering $100,000 to the brave man who marries her, for she suddenly finds herself alone. Don and George see Rosie home in a taxi, but both are suffering from a scarcity of change. Don feigns sudden cramps and George pretends to have hurt himself getting out of the car. Both are in great pain.

Don calls on Rosie the next morning at 4.30 A. M., but insists on getting the money before they marry. Rosie fools him by giving him a check on a bank in which she has ceased to deposit. While waiting for the minister, Don sneaks away to cash the check, gets to the bank while a run is on and sees the sign reading "Bank busted—no more money." Meeting George, he gives him the check and tells him Rosie is waiting to marry him. George hastens to the minister's house. Don follows to enjoy the joke he is playing on his rival. Rosie and George are married and the two then go to the good bank. Outside Don looks on puzzled and collapses as he sees George and Rosie come out of the bank loaded down with money. Seizing a club, Don pounds his head until a policeman marches him off to the crazy house.

THE MAN OF GOLD (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Kempton Greene.

The sun breaking through the storm clouds discloses an island shore strewn with wreckage and three bodies, a priest, a girl and a man. The priest is the first to become conscious and renders what aid he can to the others. Gathering driftwood, he makes a fire by the elementary method of rubbing two sticks together. As he looks at the girl, his thoughts go back to the day the steamer left. He sees her bidding her sweetheart good-bye and promising to return with her aunt and marry him. Then he gazes at the man and recalls his insult to a girl on board, and the thrashing by the ship's officer that followed. The man sits up, pulls from his pocket a flask, and proceeds to drain its contents. The priest, however, snatches it from him, and revives the girl with what is left.

For months they live as castaways, the priest night and day watching the man, and never letting the girl out of his sight. The man questions the girl, who in turn questions the priest, and when he admits his suspicions, she refuses to tolerate his watchfulness any longer, as she believes in the man's moral honesty. Ultimately she learns the truth and flees to the priest for protection. Contrary to her exexpectations, the priest does not thrash the man, but tells her they must live in harmony until God wills their deliverance. Then he warns the man against further passionate demonstrations, but the man sneeringly declares that sooner or later he will have his way. The priest falls ill and the girl is fearful of what might happen should he die.

In her terror, she throws her arms about the priest's neck and pleads that he live for her. In an instant he becomes a man and starts to enfold her. The man watches outside, sees, and turns away with anger in his heart. He does not see the embrace relax, and the priest's arms fall to his side, nor hear him tell her that he will not die and leave her unprotected. The girl goes for water, and the man enters the shack and accuses the priest of desiring the girl for himself. The priest throws himself upon him and a battle follows until the man is hurled through the wall of the shack. The girl, returning, hides in terror. The priest staggers to the opening and sees the man writhing on the ground a great snake gliding away. The priest and the girl endeavor to suck the poison from the wound, but their efforts are fruitless, and later they kneel beside a newly made grave. The priest tells the girl that when she sought his arm, she did not realize his vows to God, but that it was on account of her loneliness. The day of deliverance comes, and he forces her to meet the rescue party alone. The day that she is happily married, her mind wanders back to the island and she sees the priest sending his benediction across the waters.

THE STRANGE UNKNOWN (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 28).—The cast: Melvin Mayo, Helen Eddy, Dorothy Barrett, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Adelaide Bronti, Robert Grey.

Blanche Clark, an actress, falls in love with Lark Whitney, an American artist, in Paris as he paints her portrait. Leon Bassel loves her and her supposed wealth. She cares nothing for him, but he has great influence over her. Blanche's step-sister, Meta, whom Lark loves, lives in New York with her father, Andrew Clark. Clark suffers a stroke of paralysis and dies. Lark gets the news, and for the first time learns that Blanche is Meta's sister. Leon learns that detectives are after him, and in searching a paper for news, reads of Clark's death. Pleased, he goes to Blanche, but she tells of Clark disowning her when she went upon the stage. Leon persuades her to let him accompany her home with Lark. Meta's mind is slightly affected from grief, but she recognizes Lark and Blanche when they arrive. Blanche is left only $1,000. She grows madly jealous at Meta possessing both the fortune and the man she loves.

The doctor gives warning that Meta must be watched, as she may do herself harm. Leon shows Blanche a prescription of his which causes mental disorder. She agrees to use it on Meta, seeing it is the way to win Lark. Leon thinks to the contrary, hoping to win Blanche after she becomes sole heir. Meta suddenly disappears. Her cloak is found at the river placed there by Leon. The conclusion is that Meta drowned herself, but the truth is that she is imprisoned in the attic. The river is dragged and hope is given up of finding Meta's body. Lark is greatly grieved. Blanche becomes sole heir and she hands over a large sum to Leon. He proposes again, but she refuses. He threatens her, but she defies him. He weakens and decides to wait.

Longing for Lark, Blanche gets him to finish her portrait, again tempting him. He becomes fascinated. Blanche gives an informal affair, and while she and Lark are alone, they see a woman's hand protrude through the curtains at the hall door. Realizing it is Meta, she summons the maid in time before anyone sees Meta. She pretends to Lark the house is haunted, and begs him to go away with her. He agrees, bewildered. The next evening Leon calls, and is told that Blanche is out with Lark. He returns and gains entrance to the Clark home, vowing to kill Lark. While examining his revolver in the library, he sees Meta crouched in the corner, she having escaped again. Leon is severe with her and she scuffles with him. The maid is awakened by a pistol report, and reaching the library she finds Leon dead, and Meta laughing in his face hysterically. She gets Meta back and places the revolver in Leon's hands in time to admit the officers.

Lark and Blanche arrive. They prove an alibi by showing the ends of their theater tickets. Lark finds a few strands of Meta's hair caught in Leon's cuff. He remains silent. An officer recognizes Leon as a much wanted crook in Europe. Blanche shudders, the maid having whispered to her that Meta did the killing. Blanche pretends there is no one in the house. Lark demands to see the hidden woman, and Blanche agrees when he threatens to call the police back. He is taken to the attic room, where he finds Meta mentally deranged. He takes Meta out, and leaves her on a street corner, watching from a distance until he sees two officers take her in charge, making it appear Meta has been wandering about since her disappearance. He and Blanche get a message from the station for Blanche to come, as they think they have found her sister. Meta recovers, the drug having died out, but she is thrown in terror, remembering a murder scene. Lark consoles her by saying it was only a dream. Blanche, filled with shame, returns to Paris, leaving Lark and Meta to their own happiness.

THE WONDER CLOTH (Oct. 29).—The cast: Melvin Mayo, Adda Gleason, L. C. Shumway, George Routh.

William Grant, a young chemist in Armstrong's employ, is in love with Armstrong's daughter, Agnes, but realizing that a poor young man will find no favor with Armstrong, they keep their love secret. One day, while under the influence of liquor, Walter Norton, the head chemist, proceeds to compound some dangerous chemicals. An explosion results. Grant is questioned about the occurrence. He tells the truth, and Norton is discharged. Grant is promoted to head chemist. Believing Grant caused his discharge, Norton plans revenge. He fires at Grant, but thanks to his unsteady aim, the bullet enters a bale of Brazilian fibre. Norton is disarmed and arrested.

Some time later Grant opens the bale of fibre, and finds the bullet flattened out of shape. Concluding there is a possibility of manufacturing a bullet-proof cloth from the fibre, Grant experiments. The result is a great success. Believing that his fortune is made and he will be enabled to marry Agnes, he goes to Armstrong and discloses his wonderful discovery. Armstrong's greed is aroused, and he coldly informs Grant that as the experiments were conducted on his time and at his expense, he considers the invention his property. Grant resigns his position and goes home, completely crushed in spirit. He hangs the bullet-proof vest, with which he had experimented, on the wall, and tries to forget his unpleasant experience.

A few days later, Grant happens to look at the vest and notices that it is badly discolored. He examines it and discovers that the cloth is rotten. Forgetting the fact that he cannot benefit from his invention, Grant proceeds to experiment at home. The new cloth proves successful. Two weeks later, having completed a vest of the new cloth, and wearing it for a test, Grant reads that the government is going to submit a new bullet-proof cloth to a severe test, and that the manufacturer, James Armstrong, will allow himself to be used as a subject to be shot at. Grant, horrified by the possibility of the cloth being rotten, rushes to the test grounds. He meets Agnes and tells her of his fears. Together they force their way through the crowd. Grant's worst fears are confirmed—the vest on Armstrong is badly discolored. Unable to stop the test in time, Grant jumps into the range of the rifle and receives the bullet in his own vest. When Armstrong realizes that his life has been saved, and sees his daughter lovingly embrace young Grant, his attitude completely changes and everything ends happily.

to hit back. Everyone picks on him, from the wife of his heart to the unsympathetic bill collectors and book agents. Boggs observes a bank messenger under the escort of a burly special officer and he decides that a body-guard will solve his problem. He hires a near prize fighter for his "standing army." Then the book agents stand from under and he can abuse his pet enemy over the phone without being afraid of a subsequent beating. He has such an enjoyable time that he spends the evening playing poker in defiance of wifely edicts, and when he gets home he sends the pugilist in first. While she is chasing the bruiser up the street with the "business part" of a hall tree, Boggs slips into his pajamas and throws a bluff that goes, but the next morning the fighter meets his ex-employer and gets square.

KALEM.

THE NET OF DECEIT (Broadway Favorites—Special—Three Parts—Oct. 25).—The cast: Roland Bottomley, Alice Hollister, John E. Mackin, James B. Ross, Arthur Albertson, William McNulty and John Foster.

Unable to purchase the formula of the explosive about to be sold to the government by Mallott, the representative of a foreign power orders Le Farge and Gabrielle to obtain it. Gabrielle, posing as Le Farge's sister, easily fascinates Fanshell, Mallott's secretary. The adventuress also meets David, a fisherman, and engages him in a violent flirtation. Madly in love with the woman, David is stunned when she mockingly spurns his offer of marriage.

Tests have demonstrated the power of the new explosive, Gabrielle renews her efforts to obtain the formula. In the meantime, David, rendered almost insane by what has occurred, determines to kill Gabrielle. Climbing up the balcony, he peers into her room and sees Fanshell giving the siren the formula.

Bursting into the room, David snatches the paper and restores it to Fanshell. Le Farge appears upon the scene and endeavors to interfere, but Fanshell, his eyes opened, makes his escape. After knocking Le Farge senseless, David tries to kill the enchantress, but his hand refuses to drive the knife home.

On her return to the city, Gabrielle finds her thoughts reverting to David. Then comes the discovery of her love for him. Although a review of her life brings the realization of her unworthiness, she resolves to seek David and beg his forgiveness. The fisherman, heart-broken and unable to forget Gabrielle, suddenly finds her standing before him. Although he at first spurns her, David finally comes to the realization that Gabrielle loves him, and takes her in his arms.

THE KNAVES AND THE KNIGHT (Oct. 26).—The cast: Rube Miller, Bud Duncan, Martin Kinney, Ethel Teare, Charles Mulgro and Owen Evans.

It is for the sole purpose of annexing the Vandergraft silverware that Shifty applies for the job as cook and butler. He obtains the position, little dreaming that his despised pupil, Bud, also has designs upon the silver. Bud tries to enter the house, but after being kicked out four or five times by Shifty, comes to the conclusion that he is not wanted about the premises. He tries strategy. Sneaking into the mansion, Bud dons a suit of armor standing in the dining room and prepares for whatever may befall.

The Vandergrafts entertain two learned professors at dinner. Bud's manipulation of the halberd which goes with the armor, creates a fight between the educators and breaks up the function. Ignorant of Bud's presence, and taking advantage of the confusion, Shifty tries to annex the silver. Bud, however, taps him on the head with the spear. Frightened out of his wits, poor Shifty flees. Bud thereupon essays to do a better job than his mentor and rival. He is in the act of garnering the valuables when Vandegraft sees him. The revolver in the rich but honest man's hand causes Bud to flee. Shifty sees him coming and is scared stiff. Eventually, however, he discovers the identity of the man in the armor. Seizing him, Shifty throws Bud into a lake.

BY WHOSE HAND? (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Harland Moore, Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon and Robert Vaughn.

Officer Cornwall, hearing a shot, rushes into the house fom whence the sound had come and discovers Melville lying wounded on the floor. The policeman helps the man to a chair. Investigating, Cornwall discovers a girl hiding behind a screen. The girl begs for mercy and then tells her story. Her name is Violet and she first met Melville two months ago. Fascinated by his attentions, the girl met him secretly. Violet believed all that Melville told her and when he urged her to elope, she consented. Then came disillusionment. Although the man had promised to make her his wife, he abandoned her the day after the elopement. Violet, discovering his residence, entered the house that evening. Angered by Melville's proffer of money, she seized the revolver lying on his table. The man engaged her in a struggle, in the course of which the weapon was accidentally discharged.

Violet's story makes a profound impression upon the soft-hearted officer. He is about to let her go when an old man breaks out of the closet and denounces both Violet and Melville. The newcomer is Miller and he informs Cornwall that the two are crooks. According to Miller, they had entered the room through the window. While Melville engaged him in a struggle, Violet covered him with a revolver. In her excitement, the girl pressed the trigger and accidentally shot her pal. Terrified, she leaped forward, struck the old man with the butt of the revolver and then dragged him into the closet. Taken aback, Violet and Melville confess their guilt. With a sigh of relief, Cornwall picks up the phone and calls up headquarters.

RESCUE OF THE BRAKEMAN'S CHILDREN (Episode No. 51 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Oct. 30).—The cast: Helen Gibson, Franklin Hall, Jennie Antibus, Norma Antibus, Bobbie Antibus, Robyn Adair and Clarence Burton.

Discharged for drinking, Coleman attempts to get even by releasing the brakes on an empty boxcar, to which is coupled a flatcar, allowing them to run wild down the main line on which he knows the president's special is coming. Coleman does not know that his children, Helen and Paul, are playing on the flat car. Mrs. Coleman misses them and, filled with anxiety, approaches the track just in time to see the children on the wild cars that flash by. Frantic, the woman informs Helen of the children's peril.

Knowing that the special is due shortly, Helen commandeers a freight engine held on a siding. Accompanied by Mrs. Coleman, the girl sends the locomotive speeding down the parallel track and overtakes the runaways. Throwing the throttle, Helen lets the engine coast at the speed travelling by the cars and then stations the frightened mother at the air lever. Mrs. Coleman faints, however. Cutting the bellrope free, the telegrapher fastens one end to the air lever, holds on to the other and then jumps from the engine to the flat car. Thus she can stop the locomotive from the latter. This she proceeds to do, after which she turns her attention to setting the brakes on the two cars.

By this time, the special comes into sight. The engineer sees the cars and sets his brakes. Thanks to Helen's work, the runaways are halted in time. Coleman, learning what has occurred, vows never to touch liquor again. At Helen's request the man is not prosecuted.

VITAGRAPH.

THE PRINCE IN DISGUISE (Oct. 25).—The cast: Mabel Kelly, Helen Connelly, Bobby Connelly, Robert Gaillard, Frances Connelly.

Muriel Lacey, a romantic and imaginative child, reads of a Prince disguised as a beggar, so when little Tommy McGuire, son of the family washlady, climbs the fence she at once concludes he must be the Prince in disguise, from the ragged appearance of his clothes. Tommy knows better, but when she insists she is a captive princess and it is up to him to rescue her, he promptly helps her over the wall and they trudge and trudge along the roads until they reach Mrs. O'Brien's home. She is Tommy's big-hearted friend, and after recovering from her natural amazement at seeing him with the richly dressed Muriel, takes them both in and sends word to the police sergeant. The little girl's mother is informed and she and the family doctor fetch Muriel home, after leaving a substantial reminder in the shape of a roll of bills with Tommy. Tommy tells Mrs. O'Brien that Muriel was a nice little girl, but, "wasn't she funny!"

ITSKY, THE INVENTOR (Oct. 27).—The cast: Hughie Mack, Harry Fisher, Florence Natol, Mrs. Nellie Anderson.

Itsky can invent anything from a waterless fish-globe to a left-handed soup ladle, so when Hoozis, a bachelor about to be married, asks him to invent something which will positively wake him up mornings, Itsky says: "Leave it to me." He concocts a wonderful contrivance which works positively all right, but it depends for its motive power on the sun. Consequently, when Hoozis' wedding day turns out to be a rainy, drizzly, sunless one, the apparatus doesn't work and Hoozis sleeps till afternoon. The bride, waiting at the church, becomes hysterical and returns home. Itsky is horrified at the failure of his invention and fears a thrashing. Hoozis rushes to the bride's home just in time to see her remove her false teeth, wig and other artificialities. Overcome with gratitude at the thought of how he had escaped marrying such a "lemon," Hoozis goes to Itsky's home and overwhelms the frightened inventor by his thanks.

makes the serious mistake of neglecting his young and pleasure-loving wife, Rita. Her dissatisfaction grows, until she meets the Count di Turino. The Count is very attentive and almost before she knows it Rita is infatuated with him. One night she elopes, leaving a simple note for Mario, who is stunned. At the count's home Rita is happy, for the Count 's very good to her, but one day her curiosity leads her to try one of several locked doors in the castle-like home, and there she finds the Count is keeping in seclusion an insane wife. Now she knows the reason for the Count's many absences from home, during which he was supposed to be engaged in "diplomatic work." Horrified at what she has learned, Rita forlornly returns to her husband, but he sternly orders her to go back to her titled lover and stay there—she has become one of the Unforgiven. At this point Mario awakes from his terrible nightmare just as his wife smilingly enters the room.

A CASE OF EUGENICS (Oct. 29).—The cast: Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Bobby Connelly.

Mrs. Newlywed and her friends hold a baby show, and Mr. Newlywed, who dislikes babies, nearly has a fit when he returns home and finds the house full of them. His wife takes a particular fancy to the little Drake baby, a prize-winner and a eugenic baby. When its mother takes a short rest in the country she leaves it in care of Mrs. Newlywed, who is delighted, and Mr. Newlywed, who is not. Newlywed secures the co-operation of his doctor, pretends to be suddenly taken sick, and hopes his wife will be so busy taking care of him she will have to get rid of the borrowed baby. The scheme works, and Mrs. Newlywed is kept on the run between caring for her husband and tending the baby, until finally, when Mr. Newlywed develops symptoms of mania, she takes the doctor's advice and returns the child to its mother, whereas Newlywed gets well very quickly.

THE SHABBIES (Special—Two parts—Oct. 30).—The cast: Lillian Walker, Karin Norman, Paul Kelly, Louise Beaudet, Evart Overton, Billie Billings.

The Jones family, known as "The Shabbies," once in better circumstances, live in a cheap rooming house and cook their meals on the gas jet. They are a happy-go-lucky lot, and when, by mistake, they receive an invitation to Mrs. Van De Water's ball, intended for Phillip Jones, a young millionaire, who, tired of being chased by ambitious mammas and anxious to see the other side of life, had taken a room next door to them, think Mrs. Van De Water must be a forgotten friend of their "better days." They utilize the lace curtains and piano cover to make ball dresses, while Margaret's dress coat makes a passable "dress suit" for Dick. Phillip meets Margaret, learns of their plans and, taking a liking to the girl, decides to help them out if possible. All go to the ball and make a great hit in their improvised costumes, but Phillip has to borrow some of the hall decorations to save the situation later, as the weird costumes begin to come apart. After a great deal of fun and embarrassment a joyous ending is provided by the marriage of Margaret and Phillip.

GEORGE KLEINE.

WILFUL PEGGY (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 11).—The cast: Miss Ethel Grandin, Victor De-Linsky, Graham Velsey and Richard Carlyle.

Upon the death of his brother, James Wilbur is appointed guardian of his daughter, Peggy. Being the only child, it had been her father's one thought to insure her future happiness, accordingly, a younug man named William Bronson, found favor in his estimation. His last wish was when Peggy should arrive at a marriageable age she would marry William Bronson. The uncle also approved of her father's choice. At the boarding school which she attended, Peggy, used to having her own way, is continually creating disorder and disturbing the discipline of the classes. Prank after prank follow in rapid succession, until finally her uncle is requested to take her out of the school.

At home, Peggy refuses the attentions of William Bronson, preferring to make her own choice. So her uncle, with the object of "settling" Peggy in life, decrees that he will announce her engagement to William Bronson at her forthcoming birthday party. To avoid the dreaded engagement, Peggy informs her uncle that she is betrothed to "Mr. Stokes," and shows a photograph on the back of which she had one of her young men friends write, "To darling Peggy." This convinces the uncle that she is in earnest and he is furious. At her party, Richard Carson, a very much "wanted" crook, makes an entry and is almost successful in getting away with some "souvenirs" of the celebration when Peggy comes upon him unexpectedly and by a clever ruse commands him to "throw up your hands!". Taken unawares, the thief obeys and, turning around, so frightens Peggy that she drops the improvised weapon, for he is no other than the man whose photograph she has used to put off the hateful engagement to Bronson. At this moment Bronson enters and recognizes Carson as the notorious thief, calls the police and they take charge of Peggy's late fiance.

Despite her wilfulness, Peggy has long since experienced a change of heart so far as young Bronson is concerned and her engagement is duly announced as her uncle intended.

BIOGRAPH.

ARLINE'S CHAUFFEUR (Oct. 25).—The east: Isabel Rea, Jack Mulhall, W. J. Butler and W. C. Robinson.

Disowned by his father because of his wild oats, the young man is forced to earn his living. He is unsuccessful in his search for work. His father calls on a banker with some valuable papers, and as the transaction is a large one, there is an unusual amount of money in the house. Two crooks, aware of this, plan to enter the house. The banker's daughter, on an errand of mercy among the poor, is deserted by a drunken chauffeur, and rescued from her predicament by the young man, who chances to pass by. So well does he acquit himself that he is given regular employment as chauffeur. The crooks trap the girl in a slum lodging, steal her keys and enter the house, where they bind her father and rob him. The chauffeur, suspicious, learns what is happening, summons the police, and then rescues the girl at the risk of his life. Reconciliation with his father follows, and the love affair which has been progressing comes to a romantic climax.

A MYSTERY OF THE MOUNTAINS cial—Two Parts—Oct. 26).—The cast: Ivan Christy, Mary Malatesta, Jack Drumeir, Jos. McDermott, Kate Bruce, Sidney D'Albrook and James Furey.

The mountaineer and his daughter are in dire poverty because they cannot collect money which is withheld by their wealthy relatives. The old man determines to visit his cousin again and ask for the money. Admitted to his cousin's presence, he asks for his money and meets with an indignant refusal. Hot words follow, and he is ejected from the house by the butler. On his way home he thinks of other arguments which may influence his cousin, and returns to make a final appeal. Entering the room, this time unannounced, he finds his cousin dead. The butler enters and accuses him of murder, and he is taken to the calaboose.

On the same day two revenue officers capture a young moonshiner who has been active for some time, and destroy his still. The mountaineer and the moonshiner meet in the calaboose, and the former confides his woes to the young man. Late that night the daring mountain girl approaches the lock-up and passes a file through the bars to her father, who cuts his way out while the moonshiner sleeps. When his escape is discovered, the guard, in an effort to redeem his negligence, offers to search the hills for him. But the sheriff knows how small is the chance of success, and offers temporary liberty to the moonshiner if he will help hunt the fugitive. The young man, whose mother is critically all, jumps at the offer. He locates the mountaineer in hiding with his daughter, and for the girl's sake is tempted to go back on his promise.

Temporizing, he goes first to see his mother, finds her worse and rushes to call the doctor. But the doctor is away on a hurry call. Following his trail, the moonshiner reaches a prospector's cabin, where he finds the doctor attending a man who was found that morning in the hills, wildly insane. Dying, the butler confesses the murder for which the mountaineer was arrested. The moonshiner hastens to the mountaineer with the good news. The girl realizes that he has broken his parole for her sake, and as she thanks him the light in her eyes is more than gratitude.

HARVEST (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Franklin Ritchie, Gretchen Hartman, Louise Vale, Jack Drumeir, Herbert Barrington, Charles H. Mailes, Jack Mulhall and Vola Smith.

Niel Musgrave plans to elope with Mrs. Vane, but his uncle, Sir Athony, threatens to disinherit him; and he goes away with the promise that when she is free he will marry her. In the north of England he meets Brenda, daughter of the Reverend Mr. Marston, and falls in love with her. The old clergyman dies suddenly, and Noel, who dares not marry Brenda openly in defiance of his uncle, takes her to Withiel, on the Scotch side of the border, where, in the presence of her retainer, Hamish, and another witness, they are married according to the Scotch law.

Five years later, Colonel Tressider, Sir Anthony's bosom friend, is on a hunting trip through the North of England when he meets Noel and informs him that his uncle has died, leaving him fortune and title. Moreover, Amy Vane is free to marry him. Noel, tired of Brenda, is persuaded by Tressider to forsake her, inasmuch as Withiel is not on the Scotch side of the border and they are not legally married. Brenda takes their child, Roy, and departs, warning Noel that he who sows shall reap the harvest. Noel marries Amy Vane.

Fifteen years later she dies, and her daughter, Lettice, meets Roy, now a fledgling artist under the assumed name of Mitchell. Noel learns that Roy is his son. Brenda makes Roy swear to obey her blindly, then tells him that he can never marry Lettice. She scorns Noel's plea for forgiveness, even when he tells her that Tressider had been in error about the legality of their marriage. But in the end her pride is broken, and she obeys the dictates of her heart, finding happiness again with Noel and the young lovers.

A TRICK OF FATE (Oct. 28).—The cast: Charles Perley, Augusta Anderson, Hector V. Sarno.

Far from civilization, the prospector and his wife live in a log cabin. One day the man discovers a rich pocket of gold, and declares that the treasure of the hills is his alone. In the midst of his boast a shot is heard. Husband and wife regard each other in fear; their solitude is invaded. Again a shot, this time followed by a cry. The call of a fellow-creature in distress lulls their fears; the man goes forth and returns with a wandering stranger who has hurt his leg. While the wound heals, daily intercourse with the stranger disarms the prospector's suspicion, but the woman still mistrusts the invader of their solitude. Her fears are realized. Without warning the stranger hurls himself upon his benefactor and kills him for his gold, then subdues the woman, who strives to kill him.

Crazed with grief, she plots to get him at her mercy. With a woman's cunning she panders to him, entices him with drink until he falls into a stupor, then binds him to the chair with wet rawhide. The clutch of the contracting thongs arouses him. Vainly he struggles to free himself, and at last shuts his eyes to keep out the sight of the mocking face. But he cannot shut his ears, and hour after hour, until death releases him, he hears the woman's taunt: "Can this gold save you now?"

THE COMING OF ANGELO (Oct. 29—Biograph Reissue, No. 21).—The cast: Blanche Sweet, Jenny Lee, Walter Miller, Charles H. Mailes, Robert Harron and W. C. Robinson.

Young Theresa is favored in the love of Guido, leader of the colony. The day of the wedding is set when the youthful Angelo arrives from overseas. He meets Theresa, and for the first time love enters the girl's life. But she remembers her vows to Guido, and shuns Angelo until love proves too strong for her. Guido has been made the recipient of a fearful trust by some conspirators who need a hiding place for their bomb. When he becomes aware of Theresa's love for Angelo, he deems life empty and prepares to die.

A death feast is spread in his cabin and the fuse of the bomb connected with an electric circuit operated by an alarm clock. But in the midst of these preparations Guido reflects: "Why should I die for his happiness?"—and a great wave of hatred sweeps over him. He inveigles Angelo to the cabin, pretending to wish him joy in a wedding feast, and locks him in with the bomb. But Theresa, fearing Guido's vengeful spirit, comes on the scene and, after a struggle with the man who is not worthy of her love, rescues her lover just as the bomb explodes and hurls Guido into eternity.

The young son of the widow who owns the ranch is approached by representatives of the railroad, who seek a right of way across the property. The boy refuses their offers, and the railroad men seek the aid of the ranch foreman. The latter, by misrepresentation, beguiles the boy's mother into signing a document, but the railroad men tell him the boy's signature must also be obtained. Meeting the boy in town, the foreman attempts to obtain his signature to the deed, but fails. A quarrel ensues, and as the foreman attacks him with a heavy bottle the boy, in self defense, fires. The foreman falls, and the boy makes his escape.

A posse is quickly formed and sent in pursuit of him. He reaches the schoolhouse, where he sees the school teacher's horse tethered beside the door. In his need he urges the girl to lend him her house, and she consents. When the posse arrives in search of him, the girl denies having seen him. But an unruly pupil, with a grudge against the teacher for having punished him, tells the sheriff what he knows; and when the boy returns with the horse, as he has promised, the posse is waiting for him. At that moment, however, a messenger rides up and hands the sheriff a note which reads: "Jackson died of heart failure. No sign of bullet wound on him."

ESSANAY.

INHERITANCE (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Bryant Washburn, Ruth Stonehouse, Sydney Ainsworth, Florence Oberle and John H. Cossar.

Through the dissipation of her grandfather, who loses the family fortune, Alice Ross is forced to accept a position as a cashier in a restaurant. She resents an insult by a fashionable young woman and is discharged. She attracts the attention of the young woman's escort, James Everett, however, and he hunts her up. They become infatuated and are married.

Everett's mother is in ill health and the family physician tells the son he must not make known his marriage to her. The mother is forced to go abroad for her health and her son accompanies her, leaving his wife behind. William Maxwell, posing as Everett's friend, forces his attentions on Alice. He convinces her that Everett no longer cares for her. Maxwell's fiancee, Annette Revere, follows him to the girl's house, where she flies into a jealous rage and shoots him. She flees and Alice is arrested for the murder.

Everett, hearing of his wife's arrest, rushes home and arrives just when she is convicted.

Alice collapses. Annette, overcome with remorse, confesses. But when friends rush to Alice's bedside to tell her she is free, they find her dead from the shock.

THE OUTER EDGE (Special—Three Parts—Oct. 19).—The cast: Henry B. Walthall, Warda Howard, Sydney Ainsworth, Charles J. Stine, Jack Meredith and Thomas Commerford.

A physician is dragged down to the depths by the drug habit, losing position and wealth. After pawning every available possession except a revolver to satisfy his craving for the drug, he returns to his cheap lodging house to end his life.

Half stupefied, he gets into the wrong room, where he finds a woman and daughter almost starved. He takes his revolver and pawns it to buy food for them. His own act of kindness gives him a new view of life and he struggles to break his habit. Many times he almost falls again, but is aided by a nurse whom he had known years before. Finally he throws off the yoke altogether and wins back to manhood and the love of a woman.

THE FABLE OF THE SORROWS OF THE UNEMPLOYED AND THE DANGER OF CHANGING FROM BILL TO HAROLD (Oct. 2).—The cast: Frank Wade, De Wess Seewir and Alice Edwards.

In a certain western town, an early settler had cabbaged all the corner lots and main street frontage. His son, William H., married Leonora—who was of nice family, though they owed money. After "Old Badger" Jimpson had changed his address to "Over There," the large end of the Scads went to William H. and he changed his name to "W. Harold." Harold began to find $100 bills in his clothes when he was looking for a card. This vexed him so he invested in bonds. The next year they threw up a shack with onyx foundation, overlooking the sea. Leonora gave a few dog parties and one for a prince, but these gayeties petered out. At last, becoming desperate, she fell in love with her husband, which gave rise to much scandal, and they had to go abroad to live it down. Moral: Beware of government bonds.

WHEN SNAKEVILLE STRUCK OIL (Oct. 21).—The cast: Harry Todd, Victor Potel, Robert McKenzie and Margaret Joslin.

Simon Slick arrives in Snakeville and buys up all the choice lots in town. That night he and his accomplices attach a hose to a tank car and pipe gasoline to one of his newly acquired lots. Next morning the inhabitants of Snakeville read of how Simon Slick had discovered oil in their town and a mad rush is made to buy up real estate. About this time Slippery Slim discovers the hose and exposes the land sharp. Simon Slick flees, with the entire population of Snakeville in pursuit. He takes refuge in the tank car, Slippery Slim drops a match into the oil tank and Mr. Slick finds himself far out of reach of his pursuers.

THE SPIDER (Special—Two Parts—Oct. 23).—The cast: John A. Lorenz, Ruth Stonehouse and Hugh E. Thompson.

Ruth Arlison, a country girl, is employed as a clerk in a city department store. Each night after work she is met at the door by John Buckland, a chap from her home town, who loves her devotedly. They always have dinner together at a cheap cafe, but Ruth longs for the better things in life. Hartford Medhall, a wealthy old bachelor, sees her one day and persuades her to take dinner with him. John hears of this and suspects the object of Medhall's attentions. A few nights later he follows the pair to the bachelor's apartment and gains entrance. John makes a lunge for Medhall, who begs for mercy. He then makes known to the innocent Ruth the trap that has been set for her.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH (Three Parts—Oct. 23)—The cast: Marie Walcamp, C. E. Horn, Mr. Cummings, Kingsley Benedict, Fred Church.

Helen holds down the day "trick," and her brother Tom is night operator at Bells. Both live with their widowed mother and are the only support she has. Helen and her mother are both worried over the fact that Tom has been running around with one Cummings, who is known as a disreputable character. In an effort to work on the better side of Cummings, Helen begins to treat him kindly, frequently inviting him to go home with Tom for supper. Cummings thinks the girl is "falling for him," and tries to caress her, but is repulsed. Some of the townspeople see Helen and Cummings together and complain to the agent. Helen refuses to explain, and as a result the agent is compelled to have her transferred to another town as the patrons are complaining. Before leaving she exacts a promise from her brother to care for their mother.

One night a few days later, Tom is idly listening to the chatter of the instruments, when he hears a message going to the agent at Station 129, telling of a valuable package on train No. 9, and makes a note of the message, later showing it to Cummings, and his pal, Harwood. The two decide to hold up the express car, and, after a short argument, force Tom to agree to help them. Tom does. They tie the agent up and Tom fakes a message, ordering the regular express messenger to return to the division, while a substitute is to take his place. The substitute is Cummings and after the train starts, they hold up the assistant and succeed in robbing the safe.

Meanwhile the agent has succeeded in sending a message telling of the hold-up and Helen gets the message just as No. 9 is passing her station. She follows in a gasoline car and overtakes the train. Just as she leaps for the engine, the two crooks see her, and as the train begins to stop, they leap out, dragging Tom with them and succeed in getting away on the motor car. The motor car is followed by the train and the crooks throw Tom on the track to hinder pursuit. Helen manages to rescue him by a daring feat from the cowcatcher. The crooks succeed in getting away. Helen and Tom accompany the train into the terminal and she goes up to the dispatcher's office to report. Helen is given a two-weeks' lay-off to recuperate and later manages to find the hiding place of Cummings and Harwood. In her anxiety to see what they are doing, she is captured and tied up, but manages to escape and puts a policeman on the trail. The two bandits are captured, the loot recovered and as a memento of her brave work, Helen's brother is given a chance to redeem himself.

ROOM AND BOARD—DOLLAR AND A HALF (Two Parts—Oct. 20).—The cast: Billie Ritchie, Alice Howell, Henry Bergman, Louise Orth.

The star boarder took up more of the wife's attention than anybody else on the place. The husband couldn't stand this and he wrote a note to his wife telling her she would find his body at the bottom of the lake. He thought this was going to make her feel bad, but it didn't.

Instead it made her feel very good and she celebrated by flirting with the star boarder. Meanwhile husband was about to throw himself to the fishes when a strange influence made him walk across the water and into Madame La Rue's, the Mystic of the East. He got a job there as assistant spook and everything went all right until wifey and the star boarder happened to take a look into the future. They got more than one look and also saw things that were not pleasant. Hubby was in the spook closet and impersonated a spirit so thoroughly that everyone thought they were in—well, not in heaven. The star boarder lost his new friend, the husband got back his wife, and the cops copped some other parties. This is the last time husband ever committed suicide.

POOR BUT DISHONEST (Oct. 24).—The cast: Dick Smith, Peggy Pearce, Hank Mann.

Hank was just an apprentice boy in the brick yard, but he was ambitious and tried to make a hit with the Magnate's daughter. The foreman, however, also liked her, and Hank didn't have much of a chance until her car ran away and Hank got in the way of the car and stopped it involuntarily.

In gratitude the Magnate made him foreman over his vast brick pressery. Hank right away tried to fire the foreman, but several unforseen events happened which Hank wasn't looking for. One was a husky individual who took exception to Hank's being on the lot when he wasn't in good standing with the bricklayers' union.

Also a dynamite house got in the way while Hank was hot-footing it and he had to enter it, although it was very much against his will. He fell in just as the dynamite was about to explode. The foreman and brick maker also entered when they didn't want to, at all, the dynamite exploded unexpectedly. When last seen they were all three going south by east at a very rapid rate.

REX.

LON OF LONE MOUNTAIN (Oct. 19).—The cast: Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney, George Barrell, Marcia Moore.

A new schoolmaster has arrived in the mountain community where Melissa lives with her stern stepfather, Dan Hadley. She has a suitor, Lon Moore, who, although himself somewhat cruel, is nevertheless appalled by the beatings which Melissa receives from her stepfather. The schoolmaster becomes very popular with the women of the community and they watch his goings and comings with fond and coquettish glances.

The schoolteacher acts as protector to Melissa upon more than one occasion and finally induces her to come to school, an invitation which she is more than willing to accept. Lon views this with jealousy, which is easily fanned into a frenzy by the other mountaineers who have decided that something must be done to drive the schoolmaster from their midst, owing to the disturbance among their women folk regarding him. Lon, however, learns the man's true worth, and when a later attempt is made upon his life, he endeavors to shield the schoolmaster and in doing so is himself injured. It is thus that Melissa comes to know Lon's real love for her, and she finds happiness in his arms, grateful that he has been instrumental in saving her friend, the schoolmaster, from injury.

A ONE-CYLINDER COURTSHIP (Oct. 18).—The cast: Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallagher, Neal Burns, Stella Adams, Harry Rattenberry.

The girl has been spending a happy vacation in the city, and her return is the occasion of much joy to her parents. Ray, her beau, also looks forward to her return. But Billie, while in the city, has brushed against "higher culture," and Ray grates on her sensitive nature. Ray tries his best to win back the love of the girl, but she resists all his advances and tells him that in the city everybody rides around in autos. Ray has the courage of his convictions and, scraping together all available funds, he goes to the city and buys the best bargain he can for the money, but the machine is erratic. Sometimes it goes like the wind, and then suddenly stalls, but finally Ray arrives home safely.

In the city Billie has met Neal and they have enjoyed several evenings together, so when she receives a letter from him stating if convenient he would be glad to spend Sunday with her, she is delighted and tells her parents of the city man. They do not like the city man any too much, as they are prejudiced against his kind and do all they can to help Ray's suit along. Ray arrives in the one cylinder machine to take Billie out, and she, in a moment of fun, dresses in overalls, with the statement they may have to get out and get under. They do. While tinkering with the machine, Neal comes by in his "big six," and Billie, recognizing him, stops him. She gets in with Neal and they start to tow Ray back home, but he is dropped when near home and they never miss him.

Neal does not make a good impression on the old folks, but, nevertheless, he proves so attractive to Billie that she promises to elope with him later. Ray gets possession of the note and determines to checkmate the city "feller." Hiding nearby, he sees Neal go for the minister, and, rushing up, he takes the girl and sets out in the car. Neal chases them, but in vain, and they finally arrive where there is another minister. Ray insists upon the girl marrying him, and she, struck by the "speed" he has shown in the getaway, finally promises. When Neal comes up puffing and blowing to take her away, she tells him she has changed her mind.

ALMOST A KNOCKOUT (Oct. 22).—The cast: Eddie Lyons, Jane Waller, Lee Moran.

Newlywed arrives home one morning near daybreak in a sad state of intoxication. He attempts to slip in the house without arousing his wife, but he makes quite a noise and wifie comes in to see what the commotion is. She postpones her lecture to him until breakfast, when, presumably, he will be in a more intelligent state. Breakfast turns out to be a pretty warm affair for hubby. Wifie's expostulations are so vehement that he promises to hook onto the water wagon and come home every night early.

Hubby fully intends to live up to his resolution, but late in the day he meets his chum, Frank Marion, with whom he makes an appointment to meet in a cafe that night. At home hubby telephones his friend while wifie is in the kitchen, but she returns to hear him say, "I will meet you at the Little Cafe, Marion." She calls Newlywed down, but he insists it is all right and later sets out for the cafe. Wifie is determined to know all about her husband's friends, so decides to go to the cafe to watch him. Knowing that a woman will not be allowed in the cafe without an escort, she persuades the janitor to take her, and because he has no suitable clothes, she lends him a pair of her husband's pants and a coat. The janitor leaves, and after getting into the new clothes, returns to Mrs. Newlywed's room, where she is ready for him. But she notices he is not dressed properly and takes him into her bedroom to fix him up.

Hubby and his friend have arrived at the fight ring, but just as everybody is anticipating a big fight, the police come in and close the place. They are forced to leave, and the chum wants him to come out for a "time," but hubby is repentant for his treatment of his wife and refuses, setting out for home instead. Wife suddenly hears a noise and investigating finds her husband unexpectedly returning. She wildly tells the janitor to hide and goes to hubby to prevent him coming to the bedroom. Wifie is quite a strategist and manages to maneuver hubby around for a while. but finally the frightened janitor makes a noise and the fight starts. Hubby chases the janitor down the dumbwaiter and sees his own clothes on the man. Wifie hurries downstairs to help the poor janitor escape, and just as hubby comes down the dubmwaiter, he sees his wife enter the janitor's room. Then hubby starts shooting, but finally wifie is able to explain everything satisfactorily, and hubby agrees that he, too. has been to blame, and promises to be good in the future.

POWERS.

A PURE GOLD PARTNER (Oct. 23).—The cast: Sydney Ayres, Van Duke Sheldon, Doris Pawn, Val Paul, Albert MacQuarrie.

Ray and his partner, Jack, seeking gold in the Canadian Rockies, are disheartened over their lack of success. Across the border lives Ray's sister, Janice, with her grandfather, and as every letter from Ray is filled with praise of his best pal, she writes Ray a letter stating that she is sending a photo of herself and expressing the wish to meet the man of whom her brother thinks so much. Pete Reeves, a ne'er-do-well miner, borrows from the pals on every occasion.

As the partners are crossing a stream one day on their way home, Ray slips and falls. In righting himself, he finds traces of gold. While they are rejoicing over their find, Grey Dog, an Indian, whom the boys have befriended many times and who sometimes carries mail, arrives on the scene and delivers the letter of Janice to Ray. Ray reads the letter and shows the photo to Jack. Pete wanders around and sees the boys' lucky find, which he plots to secure for his own use.

The partners' elation is short-lived, for Ray soon falls a victim to the dread mountain sickness and, in spite of all of Jack's efforts, dies. Before dying he pencils a note leaving his share in Jack's trust for Janice. Reeves sneaks in and gets the paper. Jack decides to take the gold to town and send the girl's share to her. Accompanied by the Indian, he leaves. Pete follows him in an endeavor to steal the gold, shoots Jack, who falls over a cliff. He is only wounded, however, and the Indian, who escaped with the gold, joins him later. He orders the Indian to take the gold to the city, send half to Janice and deposit the other half for him, while he follows Reeves.

Janice, who has become worried over Ray, persuades her grandfather to take her to him and they arrive at the deserted camp just as Reeves, too, returns. At first Janice thinks Reeves is Jack, although she mistrusts his face. Her distrust grows and she and her grandfather leave. Reeves insists upon accompanying them, and forces the old man to get off and walk, while Reeves rides his horse. They stop in a clearing in the woods. Reeves forces his attentions upon the girl, knocking the old man down when he tries to interfere.

Jack returns to the camp and sees a shawl which the girl has left. He sets out on their trail and arrives just as Reeves is forcing his attentions on the girl. Both men fire and Pete drops with a wounded wrist. He accuses Jack of stealing the gold and the girl is about to leave, believing that both men are thieves, when the Indian arrives with the receipt. Jack then explains about Ray's death and comforts the girl in her bereavement. The Indian and Reeves are left alone and when the two young people turn away they see Reeves fall with the Indian's knife in his breast. He has at last paid the debt for many score misdeeds. Jack proves quite a comfort to the girl and as the story closes she begs his forgiveness for doubting him at first.

GOLD SEAL.

THE FAIR GOD OF SUN ISLAND (Three Parts—Oct. 19).—The cast: Mr. Abbott, Barney Furey, "Daddy" Manley, Luella Maxime, Herbert Rawlinson and Miss Hamilton.

Captain Harding, grown rich by illegally collecting insurance on self-destroyed boats, decides to settle down and chooses a home near where Old Ben and his daughter, Alice, fisher-folk, live. Alice and Herbert, a young fisherman, are in love. Captain Harding has long had his covetous eyes on the girl and is awaiting an opportunity to get her in his power. Herbert is in his way, so one day while Anderson, his mate, and sharer of ill-gotten gains, is telling about the ship being short-handed, he sees a chance to be rid of Herbert.

Herbert is shanghaied and forced to work on the ship. There is much liquor aboard and the sailors indulge too freely and neglect the boat, which goes on the rocks. Herbert is cast upon the shore of the uninhabited island in an exhausted condition. Anderson escapes in an open boat, and is later picked up by a passing steamer. Months pass and Herbert ekes out a lonely living on the island. One day while washing in the waters of a creek he finds the sand full of gold.

Old Ben has begun to feel the ravages of time, and is in a precarious condition. Harding has tried every way possible to win the girl from him, but without avail. When her father falls ill he sees his chance, and when the doctor tells them the only thing that will save Old Ben is a costly operation, Harding agrees to pay for it. Anderson returns at this time and tells of the wreck of the ship and death of all aboard. Harding is forced to pretend he is glad to see Anderson, but wishes he had perished, too.

The natives of the South Sea Islands arrive at the island where Herbert lives (which contains the sacrificial stone of their religion), to make their annual sacrifice to the God of the Sun Island. They bring Aloona, a native girl, along as the sacrifice. She is tied to a rock and left, but Herbert sees her and comes to the rescue. With a companion, life on the island is not so bad, and Herbert takes out a large fortune in gold and keeps a constant lookout for passing ships. At last his signal is seen and a boat arrives to the rescue. He takes Aloona and the gold with him.

Anderson continually bleeds Harding for money and at last the latter's patience is exhausted. Words follow and Anderson is beaten off. Harding comes to Alice and takes her in his arms, telling her she must marry him. Alice is stunned but recognizes her duty to her father and willingly agrees. Harding, returning along the cliffs, is set upon by Anderson and in the ensuing fight both men fall over the cliff to their death in the water below. Herbert and Aloona arrive at Alice's home and she is told of his experiences. Aloona is gladly welcomed but sadly wanders away while they are engaged in lover's talk. Her heart reverts to her childhood gods. Securing a canoe, she sets out and the last seen of her is a silhouette far out on the ocean.

IMP.

THE MEDDLER (Two Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: Charles Ogle, Joseph Girard, Robert Whittier, Mary Moore and Clara Byers.

John Ogden and Adelaide Main are in love with each other. A mercenary father and a wealthy suitor come between them and the result is that Adelaide marries Edward Ward. Ward, however, is extremely dissipated and Adelaide soon realizes that her marriage was a mistake. Two years pass, and Ogden decides to leave for South Africa. Before he goes he receives permission from Adelaide to see her. After a pleasant evening's conversation, Ogden kisses Adelaide goodbye just as Ward, in an intoxicated condition, appears at the library door. Ogden steps out of the window onto the piazza and walks away. Ward looks stupidly about the library and then goes upstairs to bed.

Twenty years later Ogden returns to America with a fortune, and becomes a figure in the financial world. Adelaide died a few years after her unhappy marriage. One evening at the club, Ogden sees Ward passing through the room accompanied by his son, Frederick. Ogden becomes acquainted with Frederick and takes a great fancy to him. The older Ward, whose fortunes are at a low ebb, induces Ogden to take Frederick into his office, his object being to obtain inside information to further his son's own interests.

While at the theater one evening, Ogden sees Fred seated directly in front of him, apparently interested in Janet Morris, a singer. Ogden doesn't know that Janet comes of an excellent family, and that, owing to her father's death, she has supported her mother since she was sixteen years of age. Nor does he know that Fred and Janet have known each other since they were school children, and that Fred therefore was not being victimized through a silly infatuation for a stage favorite. Otherwise, he would not have meddled in their love affair to save Fred from going to perdition.

There is a great activity in a certain stock known as C. D. O. which is controlled by Ogden. The elder Ward tries to obtain inside information in regard to this stock from Fred, who, being loyal to his employer, declines to comply with his father's request. So Ward gets into Ogden's private office surreptitiously and finds there a scribbled order which reads, "Buy C. D. O. offered at market," but he doesn't see Ogden return to his office and add to the order the words, "when it touches 70 or below." Ward plunges on C. D. O. There is a terrible flurry in Wall Street when it becomes known that C. D. O. has passed a dividend. Ward has bought at 88 and the stock drops down to 74, and he is wiped out.

We next see Ward contemplating suicide. Fred, with a view of obtaining a raise in his salary, goes to Ogden's house. He informs his employer of his approaching marriage, but is told by Ogden that he is opposed to his marrying an actress. Meanwhile Ogden has written a note to Janet, asking her to come and see him after the theater in regard to an important matter. At the theater Fred is shown the letter by the doorkeeper, who is acting under instructions from Janet, and he immediately takes a cab to his employer's house. Janet arrives at Ogden's house, and while seated in an anteroom the elder Ward enters, pistol in hand. Ward curses Ogden and tells him he has come to settle a score of long standing. Janet has crept up behind him, however, and prevents him from becoming a murderer. Fred bursts in the door and Ward is soon overcome, but Ogden bids him depart and sober up. Then Ogden realizes that he has acted the part of a meddling bungler. He takes Janet's hand and puts it in Fred's, with a firm resolve to make amends by furthering the interests of the happy lovers.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 18—"The Underground City"—Two Parts—Oct. 17).—Kitty is surrounded by natives who brandish their spears, while at the other end of the island Count Frederick is proclaimed a white god for killing a duck with his automatic, which he succeeded in saving. On a deserted part of the island, Roleaux, unconscious of the beach, comes to and starts in search of food and water. Two of the natives grab Kitty and bring her to their chief who orders the girl cast into his hut.

At the other end of the island, Frederick notices two natives that he has not seen before rush to the chief and start talking excitedly. Asking the chief what it is, he explains that a strange white creature has been discovered at the other end of the island. Frederick, hoping that it might be Kitty, explains to the chief about her, and asks for a few men to help him search the island for her. This the chief grants, and Frederick starts off with a goodly number of the natives as his escort. In the chief's hut Kitty is annoyed by the chief's attentions. Kitty refuses to accept them and he orders her made a sacrifice to the sacred fire.

On the day set for the fire sacrifice, hundreds of natives are bowing and praying at the fire as Kitty is led on. As they are about to throw her into the pit, a strange creature dressed in an old tattered sailor suit appears, and, grabbing Kitty from the natives' arms, mysteriously disappears. The natives, thinking it is the curse of the fire god, fall on their faces and pray, as Frederick and his men discover them. In the arms of the strange demented sailor, Kitty is carried through strange underground passageways, and brought into a weird place, where he shows her the hull of an old ship, bags of gold and a crater with flames shooting out at intervals. Back in the kingdom of Gretzhoffen, Sachio, feeling satisfied that Kitty and Roleaux are safe in America, continues his search for the other part of the charred paper. Disturbed in his search by the nearness of a guard, Sachio discontinues it for a while and joins the king and his intoxicated friends in the room above.

To return to Count Frederick and his band of natives: They demand of the chief the release of the white woman in their possession. Much frightened, the chief explains her strange disappearance. Disbelieving his story, the two chiefs get into an argument, which finally brings about a small-sized war and hand-to-hand conflict. Escaping from this, Frederick tries to search for Kitty, leaving the natives fighting among themselves. With the aid of one of the natives, Frederick succeeds in gaining an entrance to the hidden underground chambers. The old sailor, realizing some one is near and about to take Kitty from him, seizes her in his arms. As the footsteps grow nearer, the demented sailor takes her to the mouth of the crater, raises her above his head, and awaits the entrance of the intruders as the episode closes.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

THE CAMPBELLS ARE COMING (Four Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Francis Ford, Grace Cunard, Mr. Denecke, Duke Worne, Harry Schumm, Lew Short.

On ascending the throne, after father's death, Nana Sahib is informed that the pension given his father during his rule by Queen Victoria of England is stopped, and he sends his agent, Azimooah, to see Queen Victoria and intercede for him. On arriving in England, Azimoah sees Queen Victoria, who refuses the petition on the grounds that Nana Sahib was only an adopted son of the former ruler. Azimoah, on his return trip to India, meets a little Scotch lassie, who is on her way to join her father, a missionary in India. Azimoah becomes infatuated with the lassie, but on his arrival loses track of her until Nana Sahib sees her and desires her for his harem.

The uprising breaks out in India against England. The treachery of the Sepoys, the brutality of Nana Sahib and his followers, the extreme cruelty exercised upon the women and children and the anguish and suffering of the English followed closely upon her arrival. During the rebellion the lassie and her father are taken prisoners and thrown into a fort. Nana Sahib sees her there and takes her by force to his palace and makes her the favorite of his harem, much against her will. She, realizing the usefulness of fighting him, pretends to like him and therefore is given her way in the palace. While he is out with his men, by a ruse, makes her escape and informs her father and the English colonel of the plans of Nana Sahib and his men. They are able, with her information, to make some headway against the Sepoys, but she is again captured by Nana and taken back to his palace.

When Campbell arrives to relieve Lucknow, with the lassie's sweetheart, who she had left in Scotland, Nana Sahib is taken prisoner, but escapes and returns to his palace to kill the lassie before her sweetheart can save her, but her sweetheart gets there before Nana and rescues her. Nana escapes, but is driven to the jungle, where he is left a prey to the wild beasts without food or drink. The lassie is reunited with her father and sweetheart and returns to Scotland with them—happy.

YOU CAN'T BEAT IT (Oct. 20).—The cast: W. B. Parsons, Constance Talmadge, James O'Shea.

Bill Pike, recently married, hits his home town about seven in the evening, and immediately is seized by a bunch of his old cronies who drag him into a hotel to have a game of poker. He protests wildly and at last escapes long enough to phone Dill, his young wife, who is anxiously awaiting his return. "I've missed the 5.15," he wires. "Will be home on the 11 o'clock express tonight." Then Pike goes back to the game. At home, Mrs. Pike fidgets. A telegram arrives, telling her that her brother Steve will be there at 11.30. Steve expresses pleasure at the prospect of meeting Dill's husband. When the friends come out of the hotel, they are a trifle "lit up." A sleeping cabby attracts their sense of humor. Gently lifting the man onto an upturned soap-box, they help themselves to his duster and tall hat. Bill gets into the cabby's regalia, and, climbing onto the box, drives off at a smart pace.

Brother Steve, coming from the station, hails Bill and his equipage. He piles in and orders himself driven to Bill's home. Pike is a bit confused, but takes his passenger to his own house lickety-split. Steve and Sister Dill fall into one another's arms. Meanwhile, a thief has helped himself to the silver, which he has jammed into a suit case, and made his escape. As Steve vacates the cab, Raffles jumps in. Pointing a revolver at Bill's head, he orders him to drive at breakneck speed. Dill and Steve pursue the flying cab with cries of "Stop Thief!" A mounted policeman at last rounds up the robber. Pike, now completely sobered, restores his turn-out to the cabby, puts on his coat and hat, takes his bag, and goes home. He surprises his wife in the arms of a strange man. The next instant, however, he is warmly shaking the hand of "Brother Steve." The suit case drops, falls open, and reveals all the family silver. "Yes, a hard battle—but I got it," admits Pike, secretly realizing that the thief must have run off with the wrong bag. Dill throws both arms about her intrepid husband.

MISS TRILLIE'S BIG FEET (Oct. 11).—The cast: Edith Thornton, Joe Burke, Max Ulrich, W. G. Don and Will Browning.

Miss Trillie is beautiful to look upon—but she is afflicted with big feet. She and Little Billee fall in love and they are affianced. He gives a big reception in his studio—Little Billee is an artist—for his betrothed. Svengali, a musician and hypnotist, is among the invited guests. During the festivities, Miss Trillie stubs her bare toe and runs a splinter into it. Little Billie cannot get it out, so Svengali brings his mesmeric powers to bear upon the murderous sliver—and it is instantly extracted. "Anybody with feet like that ought to be a prima donna," remarks Svengali to Gecca, the violinist—and determines to get the girl in his clutches The following night, in a cafe, the hypnotist attempts to work his spells upon Miss Trillie. Incidentally, he fascinates half a dozen other people before he can get control of the sweetheart of Little Billee. Taffy, the Laird, and Billee arriving find Miss Trillie in a trance. Consternation reigns. Then, the lover, remembering his fair lady's inordinate fondness for ice cream, hastens to procure some of this sweet restorative. Trillie revives. Svengali has lost all charm for her. The ice cream has done it.

RIP VAN WINKLE BADLY RIPPED (Oct. 18).—The cast: Will Browning, Edith Thornton, Joe Burke, Jack Morisay, Lila Davis and Charles Hutchinson.

Rip Van Winkle has a fortune to leave to his daughter. The burgomeister hears of it and decides that Dora Van Winkle shall marry his son, Piet. He takes Rip into custody and feeds him on salt herring, until he has worked up for the old man a terrible thirst. The burgomeister refuses to give Rip anything to drink until he has signed a paper saying that his daughter shall marry Piet. The deed completed, Rip is let loose. He drinks the river dry. Intoxicated by the stimulating draught, he wanders up into the mountains with his faithful dog. They fall asleep. When, at last, he awakes he finds that his beard has grown four feet long, and that a pigeon has built its nest in it. His dog, also, is three times the size he was when they climbed the mountain. Rip rushes back to town, upsetting everybody by his phenomenally hairy appearance. His wife falls into one faint after another. But Rip is in time to foil the burgomeister's plot, and Dora is given to the man she adores.

CENTAUR STAR FEATURES.

THE BLOOD OF OUR BROTHERS (Three Parts—Oct. 27).—The cast: Crane Wilbur, Celia Santon, Carl Von Schiller, E. Collins, Harry DeRoy, Victor Rottman.

Kindheart is a shepherd employed by Infirmity. He wooes Devotion, the daughter of his employer. Valor, the girl's brother, discountenances Kindheart's presumption, and strikes the simple shepherd in the face, but the humble lad refuses to retaliate, explaining that he cannot harm anyone. Valor brands him a coward before a gathering throng. Later Valor, while hunting in the mountains, falls to the bottom of a ravine, and is badly wounded. Kindheart finds him and carries him to his home. Valor begs forgiveness for his former hostility and the two swear eternal friendship. Ewes straying from the herd are devoured by a panther. Finding the trail of blood, Kindheart follows it to the panther's lair, and kills the beast. Valor witnesses the deed and proclaims Kindheart's fearlessness to the villagers. Valor removes all his objections to Kindheart's marriage to his sister. The lovers' troth is plighted and Devotion becomes the promised wife of Kindheart.

Later, while the wedding is being celebrated, Braggart, a recruiting sergeant, with a company of soldiers, makes his appearance and announces that war involving their country has been declared. All the able bodied men of the village enlist, except Kindheart, who exclaims: "I cannot shed the blood of my brothers." Everybody turns against him except his wife, Devotion, and Infirmity. The months pass. A baby is born to Devotion and Kindheart. Near the village is the camp of a company of renegade soldiers, who raid the community, killing many helpless women and children, among them being Devotion, her baby and Infirmity.

Returning from the hills Kindheart is horrified at the sight that greets his eyes. On the walls of his home he discovers a picture with a bloody hand imprint clearly defined; and he swears to find its owner. With his violin and the bloody imprint he starts on his mission. Time passes. Kindheart's face becomes haggard and his hair unkempt. He wanders from camp to camp within the enemy's lines, a wandering musician, telling fortunes. By means of a smoked glass—a method of his telling fortunes—he obtains finger prints. These he scans at night in the hope of finding the replica of that on the bloody picture which he always carries.

His wanderings lead him to a wayside inn. Here Lust and Loot, the soldiers who killed his family, and their companions, are making merry. Kindheart enters and Lust commands him to tell his fortune. As he looks at the sooty imprint on the paper before him Kindheart recognizes the impression and knows he has come upon his family's murderer. The soldiers fall asleep. Kindheart withdraws the bloody print and compares it with the sooty paper. The marks are the same. Lust awakens and sees Kindheart making the comparison. He is about to kill Kindheart when the shepherd springs upon him, and avenges the death of his loved ones. Kindheart dashes off on a horse belonging to one of the soldiers, and days later he comes upon a detachment of the enemy's troops. In his madness to kill Kindheart seizes the rifle of a fallen soldier. In fiendish glee his rifle sends missiles of death for his own brothers.

The directing officer raising his sword to call a charge falls with a bullet in his brain. Kindheart assumes his place. The battle is a hand to hand conflict. In the foreground Kindheart meets Valor. Not recognizing each other the two engage in a furious fight. Valor falls wounded and as Kindheart bends over him, he recognizes Valor. Night finds him still beside Valor's body. A party of soldiers, gathering the dead, come and take the body away and Kindheart is left alone. At last he is in his native mountains again. An untended flock of sheep is scattered about. A lamb lies in the foreground with a broken leg. Kindheart looks about him. He tenderly picks up the lamb and soothes it like a child as the picture fades.

mine while the king is showing it to Ada. A joyful renion follows.

The king is jealous of Jack and resolves to poison him. He bargains with a witch woman, who has previously given him a love potion to use on Ada. It is put in her food, but, of course, fails. Through the offices of an old hag the plan is not carried out and the king, upon learning of it, makes Jack a prisoner. Again the old hag intervenes and the whole party escapes just as the king is about to feed them to the lions. The king and the natives start in pursuit. Meanwhile Stanley and his party go forward, meeting with numerous harrassing escapades. They are mired in a swamp, encounter a cyclone, are nearly swamped by a rise of the Congo, engage in a fight with the natives, but finally outwit their pursuers.

CLIPPER.

THE IDOL (Three Parts—Oct. 30).—The cast: E. Forrest Taylor, Helene Rosson, Jack Prescott, Al Fordyce, Ashton Dearholt and Robert Klien.

Cecil Fordyce, a famous actor and idol of the public, through fast living, becomes a drunkard and losesc his engagement, and is unable to secure work. He goes down and out and in five years has sunk to the lowest degradation. Joyce Ferdon, an emotional actress, is cast to play the part of a Salvation Army lassie and seeks atmosphere in the meetings of the army. One night Cecil Fordyce is thrown from a saloon into the street as the Salvation Army passes by. Joyce rescues him and he, through her influence, attends the army's meeting's and is converted. He secures employment at manual labor, rises to be foreman of a street gang. In the meantime, Sigmund, an obscure musician at the theater, falls in love with Joyce and forces his attentions on her. She repulses him. He loses his position and plans vengeance. Through him and two Italians, employed as laborers in Fordyce's gang, Joyce is lured to an obscure cafe where she is rescued by Fordyce after a fight. Called to a rehearsal, Joyce, writes to Fordyce that she has deceived him. Becoming reckless, he begins drinking, but stops at a vision of Joyce. Rehearsal night he goes to the theater where the understudy of the leading man has been taken ill. As Joyce and the leading man emerge from the stage entrance, Sigmund shoots at Joyce, but wounds the leading man. Fordyce, standing near, captures Sigmund. The leading man and the manager recognize Fordyce as the former great actor, he is given the part and learns it in one night. The next night he plays the part in a brilliant manner and comes back into his own. He is recognized by the public as its former idol and is given a great ovation.

RIALTO.

SUNSHINE AND TEMPEST (Three Parts—Oct. 6).—The cast: Florence Tempest, Marion Sunshine, Flavia Arcaro, Sidney Mason, John Reinhardt, Henry W. Pemberton, Louise Kent, James Levering and Jack Hopkins.

Nancy and Juanita, mountain girls of Tennessee, are in love with Fletch Bird, a young mountaineer. He marries Nancy, and twin daughters are born to them. Juanita puts a curse upon the mother and the babies. The curse is fulfilled when, a few months later, Fletch deserts Nancy, and flees the country with Juanita, taking the baby Phoebe with him. Later he abandons Juanita also, and buries himself in the city. There he plunges into a life of dissipation, and is killed in a drunken brawl. His baby girl is adopted by Major Slater. To support herself and Carol, Nancy operates an illicit whiskey still.

Later, the girl and her lover, Dave Talbert, manage the still together. Carol is visited by visions of another girl, very like herself, living in an unknown city, and Phoebe, simultaneously, receives intimations of her country sister. Meanwhile, Juanita dies. Bitter to the end, she pledges her son, Spivey, to keep alive her hatred for Nancy. He betrays to Major Slater the location of Nancy's still. Dave Talbert is caught, but Phoebe intercedes for him, and he is given a light sentence. The city twin's visions urge her into the mountains, where she takes a country school. She discovers Nancy and Carol. Phoebe falls in love with Spivey, who repents under her influence, and Janita's curse is broken. Dave and Carol are reunited. The twin sisters and their sweethearts celebrate a double wedding.

THE CARD PLAYERS (Three Parts—Oct. 20).—The cast: William Roselle, Lucille Taft, Charles U. Davis, Madge Orlamond and Wm. Steiff.

Fremont, a stock-broker, plays poker; his wife is a bridge friend; their son Carl, inherits a craving for card playing, for which he neglects his studies, his business, and his sweetheart, Nita. Carl asks his father for money, and is told that no more gambling debts will be paid for him or his mother. His mother overhears this, and takes money from her husband to pay a gambling debt. Carl is accused of the theft, shields his mother and is cast out. As Nita bids him good-bye, his friend and classmate, Zimar, invites him to accompany him to India. Carl declines. A year later the ragged Carl wanders the streets, his gambling passion stronger than ever. He is knocked down by a man, who, sorry for his action, tosses him money. With this, Carl wins more money, which he gives a poor woman in a generous spirit. His studies completed, Zimar returns and gives an exhibition of his hypnotic power by curing Nita's headache. He proposes, and when Nita tells him she loves only Carl, the noble Zimar tells her he will cure Carl and make him worthy. Carl is located by the crystal.

Unable to borrow money with which to gamble, Carl robs the poor woman of the money he gave her, and is captured by her husband. Nita and Zimar appear, and Carl is hypnotized and taken home, where Nita makes the parents realize their responsibility for Carl's passion. Zimar tells them he will cure this craving by causing Carl to experience a gambler's hell. In a hypnotic trance, Carl plays cards with Nita and his parents, and Nita wins. Carl creeps to her room, steals her winnings, and when she awakes, stabs her. Her body changed to the Queen of Hearts. He flees, and is intercepted by his parents, whom he also stabs. He gambles with Nita's winnings, and draws the Queen of Hearts, which changes to a picture of the dead Nita. He finds Nita in his nurse, after he has become a maniac. He finds Nita and his parents in the death chair, and, in the final horror, finds Hell's flames full of playing cards which assume their forms. And in the end of the terrible trance, Carl and his mother are senseless and Zimar announces that they are cured. Nita, believing fully in Zimar's power, is perfectly willing to marry Carl.

TOURING WITH TILLIE (Oct. 26).—The cast: Frank Borzage, Neva Gerber, Lucille Ward.

Tillie Gray and Aunt Pansy are touring in their auto in the Santa Ynez Valley in California. They prepare their wayside camp, gather firewood and Pansy captures a stray chicken. Cliff Burridge, owner of the ranch appears, and warns them away, claiming the chicken. Tillie indignantly pays for the chicken and they leave. Burridge repents of his action, pities the hungry women, resolves to follow and protect them. He kills two chickens, follows the women, and leaves the chickens at their night camp unobserved, together with a whistle and note. The ladies are instructed to blow the whistle if they ever need help.

They keep the chickens. Aunt Pansy blows the whistle, Cliff appears, and is thanked for his gift. The ladies tour leisurely, camping as they go. Cliff follows at a distance. Two weeks later he proposes and is interrupted by Aunt Pansy blowing a whistle in a field nearby. He rescues her from an enraged cow. Tillie plans to escape from the persistent suitor. Cliff follows but loses them. Two tramps invade Tillie's camp, raid the supplies, terrorize and rob the women. Aunt Pansy blows the whistle. Cliff appears and in a fight is shot in the hand. He drives off the tramps with a hot poker. He renews his suit and Tillie decides to accept a half ownership in Cliff's Santa Ynez ranch. Aunt Pansy is delighted.

The next morning Carol receives notice that a rich uncle has died in California and left her $3,000, the check for which is enclosed in the letter. She determines to buy a bungalow to surprise her husband. She visits a real estate office; is taken by the agent to inspect a bungalow. An auto agent also tries to sell her a car at the same time. Her husband unexpectedly discovers that Carol is keeping something from him, and becomes quite jealous. He follows her to the bungalow, finds the auto agent and the real estate agent, thrashes them both and accuses his wife in a jealous rage. Explanations follow, both are reconciled, and Johnny buys the bungalow.

THANHOUSER.

THE SCOOP AT BELVILLE (Two Parts—Oct. 12).—The cast: Lorraine Huling, Bert Delaney and Harry Benham.

The city editor told the girl reporter to interview a young man who inherited $10,000,000 and who is spending it very rapidly. The girl reporter, in interviewing the millionaire, learned that he had settled down into a life of complacent laziness and felt vague pity for those who were compelled to earn their own living. She secured other good material and wrote an excellent story. The following morning the young millionaire got the surprise of his life when he read in his favorite paper an article criticising him in a semi-humorous manner, and remarking that while he pitied the poor, still he himself could not earn a dollar a day if thrown upon his own resources For a moment he was angry, and then reflection made him change his mind. "She is right," he said to himself. "I am an idler, but I shall prove to her and to the world that I am capable of earning my own living."

A year passed and still no word of the missing millionaire. Then the search for a missing embezzler absorbed the attention of the various newspapers. A report that the fugitive had been seen in a small country town caused the girl to be despatched there to locate him. She arrived in the town in company with the reporter of a rival paper, but they made common cause, and went to the jail where the embezzler, who had just been arrested, was confined. There the reporters gained a confession from the prisoner, but the rival reporter managed to slip away and reached the telegraph office before the girl. He told her that he intended to keep the telgrapher busy until after the newspapers went to press, so that his paper should secure "the scoop" and the girl's paper be beaten.

A recent storm had destroyed telephone communication, so the plucky girl hired an automobile and went out at full speed for the neighboring town. An accident to the automobile left her on a lonely road several miles from town. The only person in sight, besides herself and the chauffeur, was a telegraph lineman, who was just descending a pole. She rushed to him to ask for assistance. The lineman turned to greet her, and she recognized the missing millionaire.

"I am making more than a dollar a day now," he said. "So I guess you were wrong."

The millionaire lineman with his pocket kit cut into the wire and telegraphed the girl's story to her newspaper, while the rival reporter fumed and fretted, wondering why communication was cut off. When the final word had been sent and a "scoop" assured, the millionaire lineman turned to his fair companion.

"I said I would work for a year," he remarked, "and my time is up tomorrow. Won't you marry me and help me spend that ten million?" And as a good little girl should when the right man proposes, the little reporter said yes.

JOHN T. ROCKS AND THE FLIVVER (Oct. 17).—The cast: John Holden, Mignon Anderson, George M. Marlo and Arthur Bauer.

The advantage of having the endorsement of a prominent and wealthy citizen was thoroughly appreciated by the "Flivver" manufacturers, but try as they could, they were unable to accomplish it. John T. Rocks, the richest man in the world, had been approached by clever representatives of the motor car company, but he declared that he never had ridden in an automobile and never would. The Flivver Company had a rule providing for the prompt discharge of any of their employees who married if their salaries were under $1,000 a year, so when the young clerk who was earning only $800 was married, he was told that his services were no longer required. The youth suggested that if he was made a salesman for the company at a much larger salary that there would be no necessity for dispensing with his services, so the head of the company, having a keen sense of humor, told the clerk if he could get John T. Rocks to ride in a "Flivver" that he would get the coveted position, otherwise his services would be dispensed with at once.

The young wife remembered that her old aunt lived in the country not far from the handsome home of Mr. Rocks, so the young couple decided to spend their honeymoon with the aunt. John T. Rocks was an enthusiastic fisherman, and he was in the habit of driving out in a single-seated buckboard to a lonely lake several miles from town. The newlyweds discovered the millionaire, and while his attention was attracted in fishing, the young people untied the horse and buckboard and sent it galloping down the road. The fisherman pursued, but he was unable to catch up with his horse, and while he was walking home, he was overtaken by a Flivver, driven by the bride, who offered him a "lift."

The millionaire found his new acquaintance very charming, and soon was smiling and chatting with her, unaware that his picture had been "snapped" by a camera concealed by the roadside. The camera was operated by the young husband, and when the picture was received by the "Flivver" Company they wrote him that the salesman's position was his.

The young couple's joy was short-lived, for when the millionaire saw an automobile advertisement in a daily paper containing a picture of himself and the girl, with the caption, "John T. Rocks Rides in a 'Flivver,' Why Not You?" he realized that he had been tricked and wrote to the automobile people demanding the young man's discharge. The "Flivver" people deemed it best not to arouse the wrath of the richest man in the world, so they telegraphed the young husband that it was necessary to comply with the millionaire's demand for his dismissal.

The honeymooners were heartbroken at their ill fortune, and their amazement can be imagined when the millionaire called upon them and offered the husband a position, on account of his great nerve, as his private secretary at a very handsome salary.

FALSTAFF.

CAPERS OF COLLEGE CHAPS (Oct. 11).—The cast: Riley Chamberlin, Burnett Parker and William Carroll.

A college glee club composed of musicians increased the funds of the college organization by giving entertainments. Two members of the club were sleepyheads and when the time came for the boys to return to college, the wide-awake ones took all the money from the sleeping members and left town. When the sleepyheads woke and found that they were "marooned" they were very wrathful. Seeking employment, they obtained it as musicians in a dance hall where they were successful. One of the principal diversions besides the dancing was furnished by an earnest reformer, who made it a practice of stealing into the place and calling upon dancers to repent. The reformer always kept an eye out for the "bouncer" of the place, who had many times seized the crank and cast him bodily into the street.

The young musicians soon made enough money to take them back to college, and departed with the good wishes of their employer. Graduation day came and then one of the sleepyheads made plans for his wedding. His friend and companion sleepyhead was to be best man. Invitations were sent out to their friends, but the dance hall owner was not invited. However, he read about the wedding, and liking his former musicians decided to attend the wedding. The wedding day arrived and the uncle of the bride turned out to be the dance hall reformer. He looked at the groom and best man in a puzzled manner, and remarked that he had seen them before, but at present could not recall where. However. the reformer said that he would soon remember, as he had a good memory.

With this comforting assurance he turned to meet the other guests, and as the two college boys were wondering what they should do they glanced out of the window and saw the dance hall owner coming up the steps. They waylaid him in the hallway and kept him there, and when the bride came downstairs her future husband confessed the truth. Her sense of humor saved the situation, and she greeted the dance hall owner cordially. The newcomer was recognized by the reformer, however, and he hastened away to tell his sister, the bride's mother, that she was about to add a dance hall musician to her family. But before the reformer could find the girl's mother the situation was saved by the appearance of the dance hall "bouncer" who arrived at the house with a message for his employer. The old fear came to the heart of the reformer as he saw his enemy and he rushed from the house. The marriage took place, and the story ended happily.

BING-BANG BROTHERS (Oct. 14).—The cast: John Lehnberg, Colin Campbell and Riley Chamberlin.

Their real names were Peter McCormick and Henry Benson, but professionally they were known as "Bing-Bang Brothers," because their act was quick and noisy. These performers were at liberty. They were behind in their rent and the kind-hearted landlady was getting nervous. An important theatrical agent, whom the brothers managed to see, refused, after witnessing their performance, to sign them up. However, being in dire straits, the brothers accepted an engagement at a joint salary of $15 per week with the Mayville Carnival Company. Arriving at Mayville they found that the carnival failed before it started, owing to the fact that the daughter of the treasurer eloped with a drummer, taking the bank roll along. Bing and Bang were busted, and far from New York. They pawned all the clothes they had in their large hamper trunk, but only obtained a little more than the price of one ticket to New York. So it was decided that Bang should come home as baggage, for they could send the trunk as baggage without extra cost. At a junction halfway to New York the hamper containing Bang was dumped out by mistake. A porter started to trundle it to the station, much to the sorrow of Bang. The agent stormed when he saw the baggage and directed that it be sent on the next train.

The vaudeville agent who had rejected the act of Bing and Bang happened to be waiting at that same junction. With him was a young woman, and they both knew that the man's wife would be very angry if she heard of the business trip. But the vaudeville agent had "fixed things," he explained by sending "wifie" picture post cards from Pittsburgh, mailed by a faithful chum. They sat on the hamper, and Bang, inside, was making notes of the conversation on his cuff and shirt, for he recognized the man's voice. In due time the trunk arrived in New York, and Bank told Bing what he heard. Bing and Bang dropped all other business and devoted themselves to watching the agent's office. The day he arrived they followed him into his private room and told him they had a new act, adding for fear he might violently throw them out, "It is love at a railroad junction—taken from life. Very interesting."

The agent's guilty conscience told him he had been found out. Bing and Bang drew forward a trunk, seated themselves upon it, and went through the love scene of the agent and the girl, notes of which Bang had taken down on his cuff and his shirt front. The agent yielded, he was quick witted, and he knew what would happen if the story reached his wife. "How would you boys like 30 weeks on the Pacific Coast to be followed by a year in Australia?"

They accepted, and were thoroughly happy. The agent was happy, because he sent them far away. What the audiences in the Far West and Australia thought has not been reported.

RELIANCE.

THE QUEEN OF THE BAND (Two Parts—Oct. 10).—The cast: Adoni Fovieri, Frank Bennett, Gladys Field, Jack McDermott, Phil Gastrock, George Walsh, O. MacDiarmid, Jack Cosgrove.

Zoah, queen of a band of crooks, receives word from one of her agents abroad, telling her that a priceless Kaffire diamond has been shipped to the firm of J. Jacard & Son, In New York City. That night she and her band lay plans to obtain the gem. The next day Jack Lyle and Ethel Dawn, two of Zoah's accomplices arrive at Jacard's and ask to be shown antique lockets. Fred Watson, a third accomplice, dressed as a messenger boy, arrives at the window of the store and awaits a signal.

After looking at lockets, Lyle asks to be shown diamonds—"big ones." The clerk shows the stones, but they do not satisfy them. He then sends for the proprietor, who orders the Kaffire diamond brought from the safe. This is the signal for the two crooks to get busy. Dawn engages Jacard in conversation, while Lyle opens one of the lockets and leaves it on the table. The clerk returns with the most precious stone of them all. Dawn gives the signal to the waiting Watson. The disguised crook enters with a message for the owner of the store, bumps into Lyle and knocks the diamond on the floor. During the confusion, Lyle slips the Kaffire stone into the open locket. When the diamond is discovered to be missing, Dawn and Lyle are searched, but nothing is discovered on them. Mr. Jacard and the clerk believe that the messenger boy has had something to do with the disappearance of the diamond, and suspicion is removed from the couple.

Dawn and Lyle return to Zoah and give her a description of the locket in which the diamond is hidden. Next day the queen of the band goes to the jewelers, discovers the right locket and purchases it. As Zoah leaves the store, she meets Ramar, the great detective. He recognizes her as a crook he had met in London, and immediately connects the robbery of the Kaffire with her. He follows her car at a discreet distance, and discovers her residence. Then he returns to Jacards and asks to be shown a duplicate of the jewelry purchased by the woman. On seeing the cavity in the locket similar to the one she purchased, he surmises that the diamond was carried away in Zoah's purchase. Ramar forges a letter, supposedly from the owner of the house in which Zoah's band lives, which permits him to enter it to do some paperhanging. In disguise, the detective and his assistant overhear conversation through a crack in the library door which incriminates the gang. Unfortunately for them, the curtain pole falls, with the heavy curtains on it, exposing the listening detectives. The two men are unable to escape. Zoah binds and gags them, but they are saved from a horrible fate to which the heartless leader of the thieves had planned to submit them, by the arrival of the police.

THE EVER-LIVING ISLES (Two Parts—Oct. 17).—The cast: Eugene Pallette, Bessie Buskirk, James Cosgrove, Mrs. Hanforth, Harold Goodwin, Charles Mack, Harry Moody.

In the reign of James the Second, in England, Carlos, a rover of the Spanish main, on a visit to Provincetown in the New World, meets Prudence, daughter of Captain Josiah and Temperance Hafley. He falls in love with the maiden, who is suffering from a strange malady which Carlos cures with precious herbs from his own realm, the Ever-living Isles. The Puritan selectmen believe the Spanish tradesman to be a sorcerer, and banish him. Prudence runs to the edge of the shore, and as her lover's galleon sets sail, flings herself into the sea. Carlos turns back the ship, rescues Prudence, and tries to persuade her to go with him. But she wins him over, and together they go back to Provincetown. Carlos is captured, sentenced and is about to be hanged, when a messenger from King James brings a proclamation stating that no magician or sorcerer may remain within the colony. The Spaniard seizes his opportunity to escape. He claims Prudence as his bride.

THE PENALTY (Two Parts—Oct. 24).—The cast: Eugene Pallette, R. J. Bowles, Lillian Webster, A. Witting.

The story opens with a love affair between the boy and the girl. In riding along a mountain trail, they dismount in order that her saddle may be fixed. The boy's horse is startled and runs away. He mounts her horse and goes after him. The girl in trying to reach some flowers below the edge of the trail falls. A surveyor, looking through his instrument, sees the girl clinging to brush on the side of the cliff, calling for help. He hurries to her and rescues her. He is invited to her home and is made welcome by her parents, whose gratitude knows no bounds. The boy objects to the friendship which grows up between the girl and the surveyor, but she disregards his feelings in the matter, and this friendship ripens into love. The boy is heart-broken, and

The girl and the surveyor are married. She gets a message that her mother is dying, and makes preparations to go immediately to her mother's home. Her husband accompanies her. They become lost in the desert and endure the horrors of a sandstorm. Here they are attacked by Indians, who have been excited to enmity by certain occurrences in the little Western town. The boy has followed the girl and her husband into the desert, intending to make an end of the latter, but when the Indians attack them, he joins them and makes common cause with them. The boy is wounded, but they are successful in their resistance to the Indians, killing so many that they are enabled to reach a place of safety. The boy thus proves by his unselfish devotion to their cause that he is a real man.

THAN-O-PLAY.

THE LONG ARM OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Three Parts—Oct. 16).—The cast; Kathryn Adams, Wayne Arey, Morgan Jones, Robert Whittier.

After three years spent in New York the girl returns to the little village where she was born. She meets her sweetheart. After relating her experiences in the city they talk about their school days and recall the time when the sweetheart whipped another schoolboy who is now village judge and the richest man in the community. The judge later sees the girl, and is attracted by her beauty; but she refuses to have anything to do with him. Her actions arouse the jealousy of the judge. One day two strangers come into the village, one, unassuming, goes to the aunt of the girl to board. The other, flashy and fresh, insults the girl, and her sweetheart again defends her.

The flashily dressed man visits the office of the judge. He has an envelope that contains the reason for the judge's wealth. The smuggling of opium is his real source of income, and the message that the flashy person brings tells of the coming of a shipment of the drug. It also enclosed a warning and a photograph of a new secret service agent who has been put on the case. And the photograph is of the man boarding at the home of the girl's aunt. The judge has a circular sent out by the Secret Service Bureau offering $5,000 reward for the capture of the smugglers. He takes the picture and the circular to his rival. The photograph, he lies, is that of the smuggler suspect. The circular offers enough money for the youth to marry the girl if he will aid in the capture. The lover agrees.

That night the judge tells the lover he has heard that a shipment of opium will be left tied to the buoy at Saw-Tooth Reef. An hour before dawn they start in the judge's big boat. But when near the buoy the judge claims that, owing to the submerged rocks, he cannot get his big boat close enough to the buoy to get the cans of opium they see tied to it and which they wish to secure as evidence. The rival offers to swim, just as the judge knew he would. The judge offers him the use of the small, covered life-boat that is lashed to the cabin, but the younger man claims it isn't necessary. When he reaches the buoy and gets the opium he observes his traitor friend speeding fast away. The judge gets the real shipment of opium and hides it in his office.

The judge then goes to the secret service agent and tells him that he has located the smugglers. One of them, he says, is clinging to the Saw-Tooth Reef, helpless. As they start out to the buoy, another boat piloted by a figure in oilskins shoots toward it. They see the man on the buoy rescued. They chase the rescuing boat, but it escapes. Enraged and thwarted the judge and the secret service man return to the shore. They go to the judge's office, where calmly smoking in a chair at the judge's desk, is the man he left on the buoy and seated by the secret panel that hides the opium is the figure in oilskins. But the judge thinks only that the plan which went wrong has now righted. He runs to his rival and declares him under arrest. Willingly he lends the secret service man the handcuffs to snap onto the wrists of his enemy.

With a lightning-like movement the secret agent snaps the cuffs on the judge's wrist as the figure in oilskins presses the secret spring that reveals the hidden store of the smuggled drug. Then that figure throws aside the disguise and stands revealed as the girl who tells the judge that she was hidden in the small boat that was lashed to the top of the motorboat cabin throughout its trip, and that she observed all. It was she who rescued the champion of her childhood days and she, too, gave the information that snapped the handcuffs on the wrists of the guilty man, for it was not a mere visit that she paid to her old home. She had been sent there by the same man who sent the quiet stranger. She also is one of the sinews in the long arm of the secret service.

For a minute there comes a cloud over the joyous happiness of the man who loves her. She has gained success as a secret service agent. He is poor. But love is greater than all other things to the girl. She tells him that the $5,000 reward is for them both. It means a little home and happiness.

OUT OF THE ASHES (Two Parts—Oct. 25). —The cast: Winnifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen, George Field.

Dr. Thorne, a well-known surgeon, nearly causes the death of a patient while operating. Though no one knows the truth, this accident is due to the fact that Dr. Thorne had just returned from an all night vigil following an extra hard day's work, when almost worn out he was called to perform a serious operation. Dr. Thorne takes a stiff drink to help him along; the drink takes effect on the already worn out nerves of Dr. Thorne and he almost faints during the operation. The matron noticing the odor of whiskey thinks he is drunk, and Dr. Thorne is disgraced.

Thorne decides he will go West to try to forget. Arriving at a small mining camp, he accepts the position of bookkeeper for the "Silver Bell Mine." Here he meets Madge Turner, the wife of Joe, the foreman, a bully and a brutal character. Madge finds happiness with her baby. Jim, a fool, is a helper around the camp kitchen, and is devoted to Madge and her baby. Thorne and Madge are mutually attracted. Thorne also wins the friendship of Jim by giving the lad a little charm which Jim admires and later saves the fool from one of Joe's brutal attacks. Madge, the baby, Thorne and Jim spend many happy hours together, but Joe discovers this and forbids Madge to continue the friendship.

The baby meets with an accident. Madge is told that only a specialist can save the child by an immediate operation. Madge gives Joe all her savings to at once secure the services of Dr. Dane, a clever surgeon, whom the camp doctor tells her is in the nearest town. Joe starts, but passing the saloon, he accepts a pal's invitation to have a drink and forgets his errand. Thorne hears of the accident; he rushes to Madge and finds her nearly distracted at Joe's delay. Thorne looks at the baby and realizes the immediate need of an operation, tells Madge who he really is and promises he can operate and save her baby. Joe, half drunk, is told that Thorne is with his wife, and starts for home in a drunken rage. Jim, who has been told to mount guard, and not permit any noise, as the least disturbance may prove fatal, sees Joe coming. He remembers Madge's strict command, "No one must make a sound, Jim, I can trust you;" he looks round, sees a large carving knife and rushes out at Joe, kills him in the struggle, thus preventing him from entering the house.

The operation is successful. Jim does not realize in the least what he has done. Later the doctor, Madge and the baby are brought together.

MUSTANG.

BUCK'S LADY FRIEND (Three Parts—Oct. 23).—The cast: Art. Acord, Lawrence Peyton, Sylvia Ashton.

Buck Parvin is an actor of Western roles in the Titan Moving Picture Company. He seems to have something on his mind. Montague, the director, misses him when he is needed for a scene, and later "bawls him out." One day Buck appears at the studio rigged out in flashy, new, store clothes, and asks the cameraman for scraps of film showing a scene in which Buck appeared. Buck tells his friend, Ben Leslie, that he wants the film to show to a lady friend to convince her that he is a regular "movie" actor. Buck invites his lady friend to accompany him to the theater to see "The Sheriff's Pal" in which he acted. To his dismay, the film has been cut, and his only appearance is in the distance. He tries to explain, but Georgina leaves in dusgust and Buck follows.

The next day Buck upbraids Montague for "cutting" most of the scene in which Buck registers "when fifteen feet would have saved his life." Montague is astonished, amid great hilarity on the part of the onlookers. Buck is posted on the call-board for appearance in "When Knighthood was in Flower" as a marquis. He is jubilant and invites Georgina to come to the studio next day if she wants to see some real acting. At the appointed time, Buck dresses for the part, and is much concerned over his bow legs which are painfully prominent in his costume. Georgina appears at the studio, and is detained by the door-keeper. She pokes him with her parasol and "butts in." She enters, hot and angry, and upbraids Buck for being detained at the door.

Dick La Rue, the leading man, interests Georgina at once, and she promptly loses interest in Buck. La Rue flirts with her and Buck becomes jealous. He expostulates, and she lets him know she will do as she pleases. With bovine coquetry, Georgina responds to La Rue, while Buck becomes wild with rage. A fight ensues between Buck and La Rue, at which Georgina stalks out, not deigning to remain where "people don't act gentlemanly." Buck philosophically accepts the collapse of his love affair and attends to his more important injuries.

THE SHERIFF OF WILLOW CREEK (Two Parts—Oct. 22).—The cast: E. Forrest Taylor, Anna Little, Louise Lester, Jack Richardson, George Webb.

Ralph Watson, the sheriff of Santa Rita, loves Madge Harvey, an orphan, who lives with Jane, an older woman. Bill Gleason, Ralph's deputy, takes a liking to Madge, who repulses his advances. Ralph delays proposing to Madge until Jack, his younger brother, appears after an absence of several years. Jack and Madge immediately take a fancy to each other, which Ralph discovers, thus losing his opportunity of asking Madge to be his wife. He resolves to interfere, then changes his mind, thus sacrificing his own love for the sake of his brother, having promised his mother on her death-bed that he would take care of Jack. Later Madge and Jack are married.

One day Gleason, the deputy, opens the mail and discovers a poster from a sheriff in Nevada, offering a reward for a man wanted there for a crime. Gleason notices that the photo and the description answers to that of Jack, and calls Ralph's attention to it. Ralph ridicules the idea. Gleason informs the Nevada sheriff that he has the man he wants, and the Nevada sheriff comes and arrests Jack in Ralph's office, Jack confessing to the crime. Jack is taken away and serves his time. Gleason tells Madge what has happened and she refuses to believe it. Ralph threatens to kill Gleason if he says anything more about it and tells Madge that Jack is called away on important business in connection with a mining deal. Jack also writes a note to Madge to the same effect. Later Ralph writes a note to Madge, telling of a big gold strike, and signs Jack's name to it, also inclosing money.

Gleason makes advances to Madge and is "fired" by Ralph. He meditates revenge. Later Jack is released from jail and returns home. Gleason meets him on the way from the train and a fight follows with revolvers, which ends by Jack capturing Gleason through a ruse. He lands him in jail. Madge thinks Jack is returning from his mining expedition, and there is a joyful reunion, Ralph looking on.

PLAYING FOR HIGH STAKES (Two Parts—Oct. 29).—The cast: Anna Little, Jack Richardson, Walter Spencer, Mary Gladding, Louise Lester.

Bert Andrews and his sister, Nellie, go to Lone Star, where Bert is to assume the duties of treasurer of the Gold Reef Mining Company. Nellie takes with her their old nurse, "Aunt Nancy." The big man of the camp is "Dandy" Jim, so-called because of his personal neatness, so different from the usual type of mining men. "Dandy" Jim is the sole owner of the Lone Star Saloon. He has lived in mining camps all his life, and his knowledge of women is based on the only type he has ever known—the women of the saloon and dance hall; and there is no doubt in "Dandy's" mind that all women have their price.

"Dandy" meets Nellie and realizes that she is the woman he has dreamed about—a woman who cannot be bought—but in spite of his conviction, he cannot bring himself to believe that such can possibly be the case. Bert falls into evil ways and goes from bad to worse. Several times "Dandy" hides Bert's escapades from Nellie. Bert plans to rob his employers and elope with "Handsome Liz." "Dandy" discovers the plot and on the appointed night dopes Bert's drinks, and discovers that the young man has taken money from his employers. He secretly banishes "Handsome Liz" from the camp and restores the money to the company's safe. When Bert regains consciousness, he discovers his loss and frantically appeals to Nellie for help. She goes to "Dandy," who agrees to give her the money if she will come to his house that night for it. She goes. He locks the door and hands her the money, and as she takes it, asks her if she is willing to pay the price. Like a tigress she turns on him, declaring that not even to save her brother from disgrace will she sacrifice her honor.

CUB.

THE LITTLE DETECTIVE (Oct. 22).—The cast: George Ovey, George George, Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully, Goldie Colwell and Jefferson Osborne.

The fashionable Ferndale section is thrown into a state of excitement by a series of daring robberies. At breakfast one morning Mr. Goodrich learns from the morning paper that the night before the neighborhood had again been visited by burglars and thousands of dollars in money and jewelry carried away. Determined to guard his house against intrusion he writes to a private detective agency for men. His daughter, Goldie, is commissioned to deliver the note, but, meeting Jerry and Hank, two admirers, she suggests that they take the place of two detectives. The job, giving them an opportunity to be near their inamorata, Jerry and Hank accept.

Having the freedom of the house, Hank sees how easy it is to rob it and succumbs to temptation. He despatches a note to Bill, a rather tough customer, and instructs him to play burglar, promising to show him the way. The proceeds are to be divided fifty-fifty. Jerry learns of the plan and decides to foil it. That night Bill enters the house and is being escorted to the safe by Hank when he clumsily falls over a chair. The noise awakes Mr. Goodrich, who, armed with a rifle, starts after the conspirators.

In the meantime a real burglar has entered the house. The shots meant for Bill and Hank make him seek cover and he wraps himself around with a pair of draperies. But Jerry has witnessed the act and decides to prove himself a hero. While Mr. Goodrich is telephoning for the police Jerry keeps a close watch on his quarry. When they arrive Hank and Bill have escaped, but Jerry, being an outsider, is collared as the burglar. He insists that there is a mistake and calls for Mr. Goodrich to prove it. To the rich man he explains that the burglar is hiding and points out the place. Then with a rush he captures him and turns him over to the police.

Mr. Goodrich is delighted with Jerry's watchfulness and wishes to reward him. Jerry spurns Money. He asks for the hand of Goldie. Mr. Goodrich gives his consent, but suggests that Jerry first consult Jack, Goldie's husband. As Jerry turns to Goldie he is amazed to see her in the arms of her husband, who has just entered. With one parting look he falls into a faint.

CASINO.

A CORNER IN CATS (Oct. 10).—The cast includes Cissy Fitzgerald, Bud Ross.

Strangers in Boomopolis are a great curiosity. Cissy and Jerry, arriving in town, have everybody agog. They take a cab and drive to a large building placarded, "To Let." Here the owner meets them, and Cissy and Jerry pay the rent in advance from a large roll of bills. While Cissy engages the owner in conversation, Jerry hooks the money from the landlord's pocket. The newcomers go to the only hotel. As the bell-boy is about to leave the room, Cissy hands him a five-dollar bill. Buttons, in his excitement, trips over the travelling bag, and Jerry gently reclaims the five-spot. A few days later a sign is hung out on the rented building, stating that Cissy and Jerry will pay cash for every cat delivered to them. All kinds of felines are brought them, for which they give fifty cents a head. Meanwhile, the wily urbanites have sent to the city for six hundred rats. These are uncrated by night, and turned loose in Boomopolis. The next day cats are in great demand. Cissy and Jerry announce that they will furnish choice mousers at fifteen dollars apiece, and ordinary cats at ten dollars. The rush on cats is great, even at these prices. That night Cissy and Jerry leave town. Coming across a stray cat, they take him along as mascot. They christen the animal "Cash."

Frank shifts the blame to Martha, who is cast out. He then takes the paste pearls to Coral who detects their worthlessness, and is upbraiding him severely when Hamilton Cress, a playwright, and one of Coral's many admirers, enters, and throws him out.

Here follow a maze of plausible, logical complications, in which Frank, dying of a bullet wound, confesses Martha's innocence to Sam, who traces her to Cress' office, where she had been sent by an agency, and arrives just in time to save her from a vicious attack. There is a reconciliation as the picture ends.

WHEN MICE MAKE MERRY (Pathe—Animated Cartoon—Oct. 11).—Those two notorious pilferers, Willie Smaller and his pal, Pete Sniffer, with a price on their heads by all housewives and self-respecting cats, steal forth from their lair, to forage on defenceless pantries. But Pussy Feline, the greatest of modern sleuths has, so to speak, "smelled a rat," and has sworn on his nightly honor that never a drop of skimmed milk shall wet his whiskers till the social outlaws are run to earth. He comes upon Willie unaware, and as he slips toward him, every whisker bristling, Pete Sniffer, alias "The Adroit" from his vantage place on a cupboard shelf nearly blinds him with pepper, and the greatest of all modern sleuths has to beat a hasty, undignified retreat. It's rather a hot repulse, but the veteran of many a mouse melee has his tail up now, and seeing Willie enter a stocking, counters sharply for a flank movement on the left. A short, sharp stroke, and down comes the stocking from the line. But here another force enters the field. Dinah, the kitchen queen, flaps in, and the sight of a stocking unpropelled by a leg, actually scurrying along the ground, is too much for her delicate organization, and she faints. This is but one of the many merry-making incidents of this film, which works from a giggle in the first scene to a howl at its climax.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS—Part 9—(On same reel as foregoing).—In this educational series you see close-up views of those wild fowls it often takes hunters hours to get within gunshot of. Among the web-footed birds, the duck is best known. Here are shown many species, both wild and domestic, disporting themselves in their favorite element. The greatest source of food is found in shallow pools and ponds. The great crested grebe is a fresh water migratory bird, whose nest, built in the marshes is frequently floated off, the bird continuing to brood. Next is shown the sea gull, powerful of wing and endurance, and well-known on both shore and lake. The black-headed gull, is black only in the springtime, its head feathers turning black from their usual grey. Next we see pictures of young gulls, and then the booby, a member of the gannet family, and found principally in semi-tropical countries. The last is a beautiful picture of the gulls, startled from their rookeries, sweeping, floating, gliding forth, and hovering over the turbulent waters.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD (Episode No. 2—"Three Rings and a Goat"—Pathe—Two Parts—Oct. 11).—Marjorie Warden and her sister Hazel, whose father has been ruined by a criminal clique of financiers, have, with the aid of J. Rufus Wallingford and Blackie Daw, started out on a crusade of vengeance. Elias Boggers, who, through the death of Marjorie's father, has made $40,000, is the next victim, and, with Blackie Daw as a "capper," J. Rufus deigns to talk business with Bogger, and finally consents to sell him a circus which he (Wallingford) had never before seen!

Wallingford then goes to the circus grounds, and bulldozes the crooked manager, on the bluff that he has been sent to investigate the financial condition of the circus by the owner. The next day he takes Boggers to the big show, and the deference with which he is treated assures Boggers of his ownership. The bland J. Rufus sells "his" circus to Boggers for $65,000, and straightway secures the assistance of the whole company to make Boggers sick of his ownership. After many ludicrous experiences, Boggers gladly sells the big show to the smooth Wallingford, for just enough loss to balance his theft from Marjorie's father.

Wallingford's next experience relates to mud baths and is entitled "A Rheumatic Joint."

NEAL OF THE NAVY (No. 7).—"The Gun Runners"—Two Parts—Oct. 14).—Having been deprived of her inheritance—the map of Lost Isle—by the smuggler Hernandez, Annette Ilington determines to proceed to Santa Maria, Lower California, in search of the original grant. She sends a letter to the Fathers of the Santa Maria Mission, explaining her claim, and enclosing her photograph. Inez Castro gets hold of the letter, and substitutes her own photograph for Annette's, rewriting the letter. The Hardin party start for the south, but stop off at Dolores, where Hernandez, Ponto and their strange bruteman servant are consummating a deal to provide the revolutionists with arms.

Think this over

A business without system and accurate records is like a ship without a rudder.

A Movie Theatre without system and accurate records is a good illustration of a man trying to fill a bucket with a hole in the bottom of it. You do a strictly cash business, therefore the ratio of your loss through cash errors is greater than even the big department store, which does a part credit business.

Neal Hardin, now a gunner, sent with his mates to protect American interests in Dolores, does not know either of Annette's or Hernandez' whereabouts. When Hernandez learns from Inez that the Hardin party is in Dolores he incites the revolutionists to pillage their home, and kidnap the American women. An attack is made, and while it rages, a faithful black is sent to the U. S. sailors, for succor. The sailors, led by gunner Hardin rout the revolutionists, but not in time to save Annette, and Mrs. Hardin, who, with Neal, are captured and thrown into prison.

The next episode will deal with their escape, and is called "The Sun Worshippers."

JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOR (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Wright Kramer, C. Aubrey Smith, Mary Laston, Richard Hatteras, Ida Waterman, Ben Hendricks, Charlie Butler, Jack Sherrill, Etta De Groff, Elaine Ivans, Sidney Mason.

John Glayde, one of the master minds of America, becomes oblivious to the claims of his wife, Muriel, on his affection, in his mad strife for power. This finally results in Muriel's rebellion, and she accepts an invitation from some friends to go to Paris. There her beauty attracts the attention of Trevor Larode, who begs a sitting. The intimacy of the studio leads to Larode's falling in love with Muriel much to his mother, Lady Larode's, dismay. She wires Glayde to come on in order to prevent a scandal and he, made suddenly alive to his peril, drops his work and hastens to Paris, where he tells Larode that his calls on Mrs. Glayde must cease. The affair has gone too far, however, and Muriel and young Larode elope that night. They are overtaken by Glayde, who, in his masterful way is about to put an end to the artist, when, in a powerful scene, Muriel tells him it is not love, but pride in John Glayde's Honor that makes him wish to kill, and he is crushed with the realization that he has forever lost her love. And the play ends with him sadly realizing that in gaining power he has lost that which he most needed to enjoy it.

WILFUL WALLOPS FOR WEALTH (Starlight—Oct. 16).—Those two politicians, diplomats, envoys, arbitrators, soldiers of fortune, and general good-for-nothings, Heinie and Louie, are confided in by an irate father, and promised $1,000 should they succeed in breaking his daughter's leg, to save her reputation! This may sound queer, so be it known at the outset, that Mabel, the daughter, has aspirations to become a ballet dancer, and the Old Man has a desire to make her "toe the line"—in quite a different way, however, and even at the expense of making her toe it with a broken leg.

Heinie and Louie accept before they hear the proposition, the matter of a broken leg or two only serving to make their work more interesting. They invade the ballet school, make way with the master, and proceed to take charge in order to carry out their crooked work. The sight of some of the future ballet sensations, leads Heinie to remark "der human knee iss not a blace of amusement—it's a joint!" and they proceed with their raid. After a funnybone-cracking struggle, they finally manage to clamp Mable's leg to the table, and are doing their darndest to make it a two-piece affair between the knee and the ankle, when Mable's beau, and a cop arrive, and they are routed. They rush off to get a "leg-up" on the one thousand "bones," and just collect when Mable arrives and proves to her father that her "understanding" is still perfect. Heinie and Louie, as usual, almost win!

THE FATAL CARD (Famous Players—Sept. 30).—The cast: John Mason, Hazel Dawn, Russell Bassett, Helen West, David Powell and W. J. Ferguson.

A notorious gambler and card cheat, George Forrester, rules a little western town with an iron hand. The men of the town plot to catch him cheating and do, but his men save him from danger. In the same town lives Gerald Austen, or Aitkens, who had left his tyrannical father in the East and made good in the West.

Later, Forrester and his men rob a payroll messenger for Austen's enterprise. Forrester is apprehended and is about to be hung when Austen saves his life. The man has just been scribbling a message to his daughter who lives in the East and who believes her father a prosperous mine operator. On being saved he tears the card in two and gives half to Austen, saying that if he ever needs a friend that will be his passport. Forrester then returns East, rejoins his daughter and assumes his real name of Marrable. Austen also goes East under his real name of Aitkens and the men later meet but do not recognize each other. Austen falls in love with Margaret Marrable.

Marrable's happiness, however, is curtailed by the arrival of his former western associates who threaten to expose his identity if he does not aid them in robbing Austen's father of a shipment of English bonds. He is forced to consent. The gang rents offices opposite those of Austen and await the day of shipment, July 4. Fortune plays into their hands when the boy visits his father to obtain consent for marriage to Margaret. The father refuses and a stormy quarrel ensues, which employes overhear. The son leaves his walking stick. The conspirators enter the office. In order to quiet the elder Austen they hit him over the head with the stick. The blow kills him. The boy returns to make up; finds the door locked and leaves. The others then escape, taking the key with them.

Later, the son overhears the gang dividing the spoils. He makes his presence known. They tell him that his death is inevitable. He asks Marrable to take a card out of his pocketbook. Marrable finds it. It is the fatal card. He now knows that Margaret's fiance is the man who saved his life. In gratitude he takes upon himself responsibility for the crime and makes a supreme sacrifice, paving the way for the lovers' ultimate happiness.

ZAZA (Famous Players—Oct. 4).—The cast: Pauline Frederick, Julian L'Estrange, Ruth Sinclair, Mark Smith, Charles Butler, Walter Craven, Maude Granger, Blanche Fisher and Helen Sinnott.

Zaza is a popular singer in one of the gayest music halls in Paris. She leads a very tempestuous life and is much sought after by the beaux of the city. One night she meets Bernard Dufrene, a man about town, behind the scenes, and after a frivolous flirtation, falls in love with him. It is not long before he establishes her in an apartment where they live happily for several months.

Her infatuation for Bernard is the only real and lasting emotion that Zaza has ever experienced and she dedicates her whole crude nature to the task of making him happy. It is therefore a terrible blow to her to find that Bernard is married and has a little daughter. Stung to the depths of her savage nature by his duplicity, Zaza's first thought is for revenge.

With fiendish accuracy she hits upon the plan of going straight to the wife of her betrayer and announcing herself as his mistress. This she believes the best way of obtaining the vengeance she craves. While still consumed with this passionate hate, she sets out on her mission. However, she meets the little daughter before she has an opportunity of denouncing her lover to the mother of the child.

The sweet simplicity of the child, her ingenuousness and her thorough generosity so touch Zaza that she cannot bear to crush the child under the weight of the scandal that she knows will follow such a disclosure as she is about to make. The daughter therefore saves the father from disgrace.

Totally disillusioned, Zaza now dismisses her lover and returns to the stage. Devoting herself utterly to her art and aided by the steeling power of a personal tragedy, she becomes the idol of Paris. Deprived of her other love, she seeks that of the public. Hearing of her triumphs, Bernard comes to renew his attention to Zaza and she, in the supreme struggle of her life against the overwhelming love she still has for the man, conquers her own emotions and sends him back to his wife and child who are still in ignorance of his double life. Zaza, with Bernard forever dismissed from her mind, devotes herself still more zealously to drama, in which she wins enduring fame.

A GIRL OF YESTERDAY (Famous Players—Oct. 7).—The cast: Mary Pickford, Gertrude Norman, Francis Marion, Jack Pickford, Donald Crisp, Marshall Neilan and Glen Martin.

John and Jane Stuart have been brought up with strict, old-fashioned conservatism by their Aunt Angela. So great has been the effect upon Jane that she does not even garb herself in modish gowns, but adheres to the styles long since abandoned by society. The aunt's extreme economy builds a false barrier between the Stuart children and the Monroe family, their next door neighbors, with the exception of Stanley Hudson, who becomes a constant visitor at the Monroe home after he has caught a glimpse of Jane over the garden wall. The attraction proves mutual and friendship ripens rapidly.

Meanwhile John, Jane's brother, has found the life of Puritanical primness so irksome that he has fallen in love, for contrast, with a rather wild crowd whose chief pastime is gambling. Only the intervention of Jane saves him from the quick wrath of his aunt. A sudden turn in the tide of the Stuarts' affairs comes when Jane inherits a large fortune. The first effect is noticed in John who promptly sets out to live the sort of existence he has always craved. Jane, however, continues to live in the same old way and to wear the same old clothes.

The Stuarts' sudden acquisition of wealth makes them very much sought after by the people from whose circles they were formerly barred. At a reception given by the Monroes, Jane appears in a lovely old-fashioned gown which looks so sweetly simple in contrast to the flaunting gorgeousness of the other dresses that she becomes the belle of the evening. Later, in accordance with John's wishes, she arrays herself in the Parisian latest and appears equally charming.

LETTERS FROM A SELF MADE EXHIBITOR TO HIS SON

No. 2

New York City, Oct. 8, 1915.
My Dear Bill:

It was only to be expected that just as soon as the news leaked out that you had taken over the theatre and were about to purchase new equipment you would be visited by every projection screen salesman in the country. It is only natural, too, that these salesmen should object violently to your having decided on RADIUM GOLD FIBRE without any apparent hesitation. Those boys, you know, are selling screens for a living and their living depends upon the commissions which they earn.

Just slip them this little line of talk when they are persistent. Tell them that you are not interested in experiments. Tell them that you are not asking for the earth with a little gold fence around it—that all you want is the best projection which a screen can give and that your observation in the best theatres throughout the country, among them the MILLION DOLLAR STRAND in New York City, has convinced you that this best projection is to be secured with the aid of a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. Tell them the kind of sales talk the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE people used when you placed your order with them. Mention the fact that they promised faultless projection and sold you a "service of satisfaction" covering a period of five years.

I was in the Candler Building yesterday and the RADIUM people said that your screen would be ready for you on schedule time—and when they say so they mean it, for I happen to know that this is the way the RADIUM people are doing business. THEY ARE MAKING GOOD ON EVERY PROMISE GIVEN.

Yours,
DAD.

Stanley's social standing has captured the imagination of one of the season's debutantes who declares a love-war upon the unsuspecting Jane. Other wiles failing, the enamored one finally bribes an aviator to take Jane in his aeroplane and to lose her in order that they may not make landing in time to go upon a cruise for which the whole party has been invited. But she finishes her flight in time and embarks with the others. On the first day out the other girl stages one scene which interrupts Stanley's proposal to Jane and another which saddens Jane greatly. But eventually the boy claims the prize which was always his for the asking.

BLACKBIRDS (Lasky—Oct. 14).—The cast: Laura Hope Crews, Thomas Meighan, George Gebhardt, Raymond Hatton, Jane Wolf, Florence Dagmar, Evelyn Desmond, Edward Harley and Frederick Wilson.

Young Hawke, son of a famous New York detective, is stranded in Algiers. In reply to his cablegram for money his father tells him that the famous Bechel-Isaacs gang, who for years have been smuggling jewelry into the United States, is operating again. He challenges the youth to apprehend them.

To Bechel, head of their gang, the crooks turn over jewels they have stolen in the bazaar of Abdullah Isaks, who is Abie Isaacs on Second avenue, New York. They are turned over to Leonie, a young and charming smuggler, who has slipped fortunes in jewels past the customs officers. The gang learns that Hawke is on the trail. So Leonie is ordered to smuggle nothing, but to follow the Crockers, a wealthy American family, and substitute an imitation for a $10,000 prayer rug which they have bought. She meets and falls in love with an adventurer, Trask, posing as a titled Englishman but really trying to steal some of the Crocker jewels. Young Hawke trails Bechel, knowing of the change in plans.

The gang trails the Crockers to their Detroit home and Hawke gets a job as sleuth to watch their diamonds. Leonie has so fallen in love with Trask that she cannot do the rug trick and takes the imitation, as she thinks to Bechel. It is the genuine, however, that has been substituted by Hawke. Stealing toward her pal at midnight, Leonie discovers Trask opening the Crocker jewel safe. Realizing that they are both crooks, both declare their love and resolve to turn straight.

Hawke, from a place of concealment, has heard the love scene and, in sympathy with them, lets them go. However, he follows them to see the eventuation of their plans. Leonie and Trask go to the headquarters of the gang. Leonie hands over what she believes to be the imitation rug, really the genuine. As the lovers are trying to get away, the place is raided by the police. Hawke gets Bechel and the gang with the goods on them, but allows Leonie and Trask to go, free to love each other and to be honest.

IN THE PALACE OF THE KING (Essanay—Six Parts—Oct. 11).—The cast: F. J. Ratcliffe, Richard Travers, Arleen Hackett, Lewis Edgard, Lillian Drew, Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain, Thomas Commerford, Sydney Ainsworth.

"In the Palace of the King" is wholly a romance of the court of Spain, in which Don John of Austria is in love with Dolores de Mendoza, daughter of the commander of the King's Guard. The action opens with the victorious return to Madrid of Don John and his army after defeating the Moors and conquering Granada for Spain. Don John is acclaimed by the people as a national hero and his popularity arouses the envy of his half-brother, King Philip II of Spain, who opposes his relations with Dolores. Perez, the King's secretary, and the Princess Eboli, lady in waiting to the Queen, meanwhile are involved in a conspiracy to overthrow their sovereign, and plot to use Don John's love for Dolores as a vehicle to attain their ends.

The King, when he learns of Don John's affection for Dolores, orders the commander of his guard to put an end to the attachment, and Mendoza, torn between love for his daughter and what he considers loyalty to his King, finally orders Dolores put under lock and key and threatens to kill Don John if he attempts to see her. Through the quick wit of Inez, blind sister of Dolores, the latter is enabled to escape and meets Don John. She tells him of their danger and he hides her in his study. Perez and the Princess Eboli take advantage of the situation and the princess offers to take Dolores away from Don John. Mendoza consents, but the princess, in the darkness, fails to recognize Inez, who had changed clothing with Dolores and when Inez slips into a secret passage she believes it was Dolores who escaped her.

Perez informs the King that Dolores is to be found in Don John's quarters, and the sovereign, raging, goes there and accuses his half-brother of conspiring to dethrone him. Arguments follow, in which the King stabs Don John, and, Mendoza, ever loyal, agrees to shoulder the blame for Don John's death, and announces to the assembled court that he killed him. King Philip craftily weaves a net of evidence around Mendoza, but Dolores, who, hidden in Don John's study, had heard all that passes, rushes in and threatens to expose the King's falsehood unless her father is released. The King, fear-stricken, signs an order for the release of Mendoza. Meanwhile the court jester learns that Don John is not dead, but merely slightly wounded, and Dolores is summoned. A priest is obtained and the sweethearts are married, just as the king and other court officials arrive, and a general rejoicing ends the play.

THE MAN WHO COULDN'T BEAT GOD (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Oct. 18).—The cast: Maurice Costello, Thomas Mills, Denton Vane, Edwina Robbins, Marion Henry, Robert Gaillard, Estelle Mardo and Naomi Childers.

Martin Henchford was a man of peculiar character. He believed that he could erase from his soul every vestige of the scar of murder; that he could destroy in his own mind every memory of the deed he had committed. In short, that he could beat God and the inner consciousness of soul. He had, years before, grown up on the spacious Rexford estate, and as the son of Lord Rexford's gardener, had become an employe. Goaded on by the smallness and cruelty of the Lord, and after receiving a stinging blow across the face, he kills him, and so conceals every trace of his deed that he is not even suspected. Later he goes to New York, where he secures work in the construction gang tunneling under the big river. He takes a prominent part in a daring rescue during a sudden flooding of the excavation, and as he brings out the last drowning man he does not see in the prostrate form his fellow-laborer, but instead, a vision of the man he had killed back in England. Thus starts an ever increasing series of visions produced by conscience. Promotion, honor and wealth become his; he marries a beautiful girl, and still he is haunted more and more by those terrifying visions. He is drawn almost irresistibly back to England, and there, on the very spot where he had struck Lord Rexford down, Martin is attacked by heart failure and dies.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Episode No. 23, "The Double Cross"—Two Parts—Oct. 4).—As the picture opens, Luke Lovell is seen stealing a ride on the rear of the magnificent coach that bears the "Mad Millionaire," as John Powell becomes known, and the plotting four who are gradually wrecking him. They have succeeded in convincing him that it was not reality but his imagination that saw Esther and the hunchback on the road with their hand organ.

When Luke's presence is discovered, with a few deftly directed whip-lashes from the practiced hand of the coachman, the gypsy is forced from his perch. As he sits dejectedly at the side of the road nursing his wounds, he sees Esther and Quabba slowly approaching. Not wanting to meet them, he hides behind a tree.

Luke Lovell has followed Esther and Quabba to Sankey's stable, where the owner has hidden the diamond from the sky. A sheriff has been advised of the possible whereabouts of the diamond and he, with his posse, have arrived in their auto just prior to Quabba and Luke. As the two gypsies stand there, the diamond is recovered from the overpowered stableman, and passes from hand to hand right before their very eyes.

Homer Graydon, an elderly millionaire who has been paying attention to Vivian, reads the story of the valuable gem which is to be auctioned with the balance of the circus effects, and promises Vivian to get it for her. Luke calls at the Powell mansion and gains admission, his intention being to blackmail either Blair Stanley or Arthur Stanley, alias John Powell. By ruse, Blair calls in police and has Luke arrested.

Meanwhile, Marmaduke Smythe, the English lawyer, calls at the Powell mansion seeking word of the heir to the Stanley Earldom. Flushed and excited with wine, Arthur stands up and declares himself not "John Powell," but Arthur Stanley of Virginia, the Stanley Earl, and announces that he will buy the diamond from the sky at the circus auction. Overcome by this sudden announcement, Marmaduke falls back in his chair.

Luke Lovell has been searched at the police station, and a Wells-Fargo express money-band found in his pocket. The evidence looks dark for him, and he is thrown into a cell to await a hearing. He manages to send word to Esther of his arrest; and when she calls to see him, begs forgiveness and swears a return to his old-time gypsy allegiance.

At the once gay and boisterous scene of the circus, an auction is being held. Two money-powers are pitted against each other in eager determination to own the diamond. As the auctioneer opens the bidding, Arthur Stanley's bid of $10,000 is quickly raised to $15,000 by Homer Graydon. Amid a buzz of excitement, the mad millionaire doubles the bid. The crowds gasp as the bids go up and up; then a mass of humanity blots the auctioneer from view as he knocks the gem down to the winning bidder. And another chapter is brought to a close with the question on every lip—"Who gets the diamond?"

THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE (Triumph-Equitable—Sept. 27).—The cast: Julis Steger, Austin Webb, Grace Reals, Margot Williams, Ralph Morgan.

The husband is bored to death by years of association with his wife, whom he deems old-fashioned and settled. A governess, young and beautiful, comes to the house. The father, master of the house in every sense of the word, is infatuated with the governess' description of life in the city where one remains young even at four-score years.

Many conversations occur between the man and the governess, and, one day he tells his wife that he is tired of her and that he is going away to the city with a younger and prettier woman. Time passes and the master of the house sees the other side of the governess. Her family is a lot of parasites who live on him.

The man, broken in health, his spirit revolting against present conditions, feels a longing away down in his heart for his old-fashioned wife and their three children and the old home that is a home. In a frenzied burst of anger he strikes her, casts aside the woman and the unpleasant associations with her and, older, wiser, sadder and penitent, he returns to his wife and fireside.

THE PRICE (Triumph-Equitable—Oct. 4).—The cast: Helen Ware, Wilmuth Merkyl, James Cooley, Blanche Douglas.

A young girl, reared in luxury, is thrown penniless upon her own resources. She becomes secretary to a great artist, who, in younger and poorer days, married the landlady's daughter. In need of inspiration, the artist turns to his charming secretary. Believing that she loves him, the girl submits, but finds her mistake, when, meeting a flourishing physician, she learns true love. Both the physician and the artist want to marry the girl, the latter promising to get rid of his present encumbrance. Fearing that the physician will learn of her past, the girl refuses his offer of marriage. The artist, having a weak heart, drops dead at her feet upon learning that she does not love him; whereupon the girl becomes the physician's bride.

The artist's widow, seeking vengeance, after a protracted discussion between the physician and his wife, secures the position of housekeeper in their home. She plants seeds of jealousy within the wife by telling her the physician loves his adopted child, whom he has brought up from infancy. The wife flies in a rage, charging her husband with infidelity; whereupon the widow, making her revenge complete, reads a diary to husband and wife foolishly kept by the artist, telling of his relations with the former secretary. In her frenzied protestations, the wife also reveals the fact that it was her rejection of his love that caused the death of her lover. Attempting suicide, the wife is prevented by her maid, who shows her the folly of such an act. The wife, impressed by the recital, decides to live down the past, and try to win back her husband's love.

cumstances, breeds My Lady, and Blue Grass, a striking colt, is born. Another year and the Colonel starts to break and train Blue Grass. Another colt is born. Finances become tighter.

In the meantime Warren meets Virginia, the Colonel's daughter, a love affair resulting. The Colonel, compelled to sacrifice the second colt, sends his son, Morgan, who, forced to accept a much smaller sum than expected, stakes the money on a "sure tip" and loses. In his anger the Colonel casts him off, ordering him out of the house. Kelley, in an effort to buy My Lady, meets Virginia and determines to get her, as he determines to get the mare.

Just before the race in which Blue Grass is entered, the Colonel, badly in need of money, sells the mare to Kelley upon the latter's promise to sell her back, in the event of Blue Grass winning the race. The Colonel uses the money received for a side bet on his horse, and Kelley frames the race against him. Morgan, now Kelley's cashier, meets Warren, who. on learning Morgan's identity, brings about a meeting between him and Virginia, and caught red-handed by the Colonel, is forbidden to see Virginia again. On learning Kelley's intentions, Morgan quits Kelley. In the race, Blue Grass is left flat-footed by the bribed starter, but starts after the rest and wins. Warren, learning of Kelley's plot to steal My Lady, evens up old scores, bringing about a reconciliation and all ends as it should.

THE BLUDGEON (Equitable—Oct. 18).—The cast: Kathryn Osterman, John Dunn, Frank Beamish, Clara Whipple and Roy Applegate.

Carl Evendorr, a chemist, lives happily with his wife, Irene, and their little daughter, Rose, until he perfects a formula, which brings him a fortune, and he is persuaded by Irene to move into more pretentious quarters. Here Irene falls into the hands of Mrs. Wharton, a social leech. At their first entartainment, Irene, persuaded by Mrs. Wharton, appears in the costume of Odalisk, which brings men to her feet. Carl remonstrates, but to no avail. Funds run low and Irene wins large sums intentionally lost to her at cards. Carl, perfecting another formula, leaves to sell it.

Mrs. Wharton, pressing Irene to pay her debts, finally tells "Stoney" Brooke, one of her admirers, how to win Irene. Returning home, the formula sold for a small sum, Carl finds his wife in Brooke's arms. To save his life, Brooke falsely confesses his guilt. Irene divorces Carl, he taking the blame, and later, Hillman, a lawyer and friend of Carl's, marries her.

Brooke threatens Mrs. Wharton, demands money and she causes his arrest. Ten years later on his release Brooke obtains money from Irene by threats, and about to leave, he is met by Mrs. Wharton. A struggle ensues and Brooke Shoots Mrs. Wharton. Carl, now working in a laboratory, plans to see his daughter. He rushes in and is seen bending over Mrs. Wharton, just as Irene and the police enter the room. Hillman gives himself up, thereby saving Carl. Brooke dies and Hillman passes away in his cell. Finally Carl and Irene come together. contented, if not happy, in the love of their daughter, Rose.

SALVATION NELL (California Motion Picture Corporation—Oct. 24).—Nell Saunders, who lives with her poverty-stricken parents in the New York tenement district, is compelled to do all sorts of menial work to support her family and, incidentally, to provide money to satisfy her father's craving for liquor. When she is unable to do so, she is abused by him. Yet in spite of the fact that she is remarkably pretty, she keeps on the path of virtue. One morning she receives a few dollars for her laundry work, but her father takes the money from her by brutal force. Her pals, Jim Platt, of doubtful reputation, Sid McGovern and Myrtle, arrive just in time to save Nell from further harm. After spending this money on drink, her father comes home and demands more from his wife and daughter. Unable to get it, he raises a beer bottle and kills his wife. Terror-stricken he proceeds to the saloon again and, as he cannot pay for the drinks, is thrown out of the place. His head strikes the pavement and the police find him dead.

At this moment "Halleluja Maggie," a Salvation Army lassie, arrives on the scene and tries to comfort Nell and to induce her to join the Salvation Army. While walking along, they meet Jim, Sid and Myrtle, who succeed in persuading Nell to live with them. In the course of time, Nell and Jim fall in love, yet Nell refuses to live with him. Finally, when she discovers the beginning of an "affair" between Jim and Sal, she consents to do so. After they leave, Sid asks Myrtle to live with him, but she refuses, saying she prefers to live in luxury and to start on the "Golden Path."

A year later Myrtle is installed in a luxurious apartment by an old roue. Jim has become a drunkard and forces Nell to get work so that she may supply him with money. Myrtle impresses upon Nell that she is foolish to waste her time on Jim and that she might do as well as she does herself, but Nell refuses to even think of such a plan. One day, while she is scrubbing the floor in some restaurant, Jim arrives, takes her money and goes off with Sal. A little later, she has finished her work and is approached by a tough fellow who wants to take her to her room. She resents this, but he forces his way in and from the window points out Jim and Sal kissing each other. Jim arrives, and a fight ensues in which he throws his antagonist down the stairs. The police arrive and take Jim along. He is sentenced to five years in jail, and Nell, in despair, joins the Salvation Army, to become one of its most ardent and faithful members.

Some time elapses. The Major of the Army proposes to Nell, but she tells him she is determined to wait for Jim and to convert him also. When she is given permission to visit him in jail. he repudiates her insistent request to join the Salvation Army. The Major renews his marriage proposal, and Nell tells him all about her past life. Some time later Jim is released from jail. He meets one of his former pals who induces him to rob the old roue that night. Nell hears about this, and while Jim hesitates to carry out the crime, she prays at the foot of the stairs. Conscience-stricken, he decides at last to reform. Meanwhile Myrtle, who has adopted "The Golden Path," has sunk lower and lower, until finally, having become an habitual drunkard, she is led off to prison. At this moment the Salvation Army arrives on the scene, with banners flying and music playing. The Major, Nell and the new recruit, Jim Platt, are seen among its members. Nell harangues the assembled crowd with prayer. Truly, indeed, "Man's extremety is God's opportunity."

KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE SERVICE.

VANITY FAIR (Edison—7 parts—Oct. 6).—The cast: Mrs. Fiske, Leonie Flugrath, Yale Benner, Helen Fulton, William Wadsworth, Richard Tucker, Robert Brower, Frank McGlynn, Bigelow Cooper, George A. Wright, Maurice Stewart, Jr., Helene Strickland.

Becky, a child, is left an orphan by the death of her father and is consigned to the tender mercies of the Misses Pinkertons, who conduct a fashionable school for girls. Becky feels keenly the semi-charitable nature of her life, and, when kindly-hearted Amelia Sedley invites her home, she eagerly accepts. It is then that Becky, the child, becomes Becky, the adventuress, cold, calculating and selfish.

With the entrance of Becky into the peaceful Sedley home comes misfortune. Sedley goes bankrupt. Old man Osborne promptly breaks the engagement between Amelia and his son, George. Becky lays her traps for Joseph Sedley, Amelia's brother, and nearly succeeds in her designs on that self-satisfied young man. Urged by his faithful friend, Captain Dobbin, George marries Amelia. This change throws Becky into new surroundings. She goes to Queen's Crawley and enters the most active sphere of her existence.

Her adventures with old Pit Crawley, her marriage to Rawdon Crawley, their poverty—Becky's flirtation with Lord Steyne and her subsequent separation from Rawdon, the Battle of Waterloo and the death of George Osborne are all faithfully portrayed incidents of Thackeray's novel.

THE MAGIC SKIN (Edison—5 parts—Oct. 13).—The cast: Everett Butterfield, Mabel Trunnelle, Bigelow Cooper, Frank A. Lyon, William West, George A. Wright, Nellie Grant, Harry Linson, Sally Crute, Robert Prior.

Ralph Valentine and his father are musicians of proud and aristocratic ways and are so wrapped up in their art as to be oblivious of their poverty. Their faithful servant, Joseph, has been wont to withhold the threats of debtors from them, but there comes a time, shortly after the father's death, that Ralph must be told the truth. Joseph tells everything and suggests that Ralph accept money that he has saved and go to Paris, where he may show the world his art. Ralph does so and goes to live with the Gardins. His uncle, Victor Valentine, wealthy and fond of gay life, invites him to live at his home provided he will leave behind his foolish dreams and fancies. Ralph refuses, preferring to remain where he is. He wins the love of Pauline Gardin and is quite content. Through his Bohemian acquaintances he meets Mme. Flora Margot. This tired, blase young woman makes a pet of him and enraptured by her dazzling beauty he longs to satisfy her every desire. Attempting to do so, he becomes indebted to impatient creditors, who demand immediate payment or his arrest.

Pauline, ignorant of his infatuation with Flora, assists him out of his present difficulties with her own savings. Realizing Flora's fast waning affection, he resolves to regain it by buying a certain anique necklace which he knows she covets. The antique dealer demands an exorbitant price which he is unable to pay. He is further disheartened when one day he finds her in the arms of his uncle, and he rushes forth intent upon suicide. About to throw himself into the river, a vision of Flora appears before him and he resolves to secure the necklace at any cost. The dealer of the antique shop is busy when he enters and Ralph wanders into a room where there are curios upon the walls and tables.

Curiously examining the various articles, his hand suddenly touches a secret panel which springs back, revealing a marvelous painting of the Christ. A spiritual influence comes over him, so profound is its impression upon his mind. While awaiting the attendance of the dealer, he becomes greatly interested in a peculiar skin which has writing upon it in Sanskrit. Sitting down he becomes drowsy and falls asleep. The writing changes into English, which reads that the possessor of the skin has only to wish and his wish will be granted, but that with each desire the skin shall grow smaller and the days of the possessor grow less until death is the penalty at the last wish. The dealer approaches and Ralph is amazed to behold him now in the form of a devil. The devil asks if he desires the skin and Ralph, fearfully undecided, suddenly thinks of Flora and agrees to take it.

What are his desires and his terrible anguish as the talisman grows smaller have been woven into a story of weird and mystic situations.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

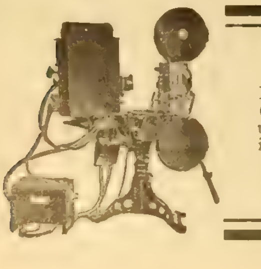
MY MADONNA (Five Parts—Popular Plays and Players—Oct. 25).—The cast: Mme. Petrova, Guy Coombs, Evelyn Dumo, Albert Howson, James O'Neill, Albert Derbil, Yahne Fleury.

Robert, a poor artist, has a vision of a wonderful Madonna. He seeks a model vainly, until he meets, accidentally, the beautiful Lucille, a woman of the demimonde. She is drawn to the shabby artist, and forsaking her fashionable acquaintances, goes to pose for him. The two fall in love and Robert paints a wonderful picture of the Madonna, using Lucille as his model. Unknown to Robert, Lucille persuades an art merchant she knows to purchase the picture, which speedily brings Robert fame and fortune. The artist and his model are married, but with the access of wealth Robert grows cold in his devotion.

Robert meets the Baroness, a woman of the world, who comes to sit for her portrait, and spends most of his leisure with her. Later he meets the Baron, her husband, who has known Lucille before her marriage, and is delighted at Robert's interest in his wife, to whom he is quite indifferent, because he thinks he can thus win Lucille's affections. Robert comes to keep an appointment with the Baron at his house and finds him lying dead in the hall, having just been killed by a workman whom he had wronged. He picks up the knife with which the crime has been committed just as the Baroness and her servants enter. Convinced that he is responsible for the death of her husband, the Baroness accuses Robert. He is convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Lucille, whose devotion to Robert remains undiminished, and who resolutely believes in his



PERFECTION IN PROJECTION

Because the mechanism of the American Standard MASTER MODEL Projector consists of comparatively fewer (but better made and stronger) parts, and because all useless and questionable "improvements" have been eliminated, its longevity is assured, and the excellence of its work remains unimpaired even after six or seven years' usage. Another thing: the maintenance cost is low; users rarely have to spend one dollar in twelve months or more. It will repay you to find out what you can about the MASTER MODEL. innocence, becomes a charity worker, devoting her wealth and talents to the poor. A dying workman confesses to her his guilt in the death of the Baron and Lucille takes his deathbed statement in the presence of a notary and the police officials. Robert is freed, but does not seek his wife, believing that she no longer cares for him. Broken in spirit, he goes to the church for consolation, where his painting of the Madonna is hung, seeking solace for his hungry heart in viewing the portrait of Lucille. There the two meet and are reunited before the Madonna.

ASSOCIATED FILM SALES CORP.

SHOT AT SUNRISE (Monte—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 25).—General Nuisance, of the army of the invasion, finds it necessary to secure certain information relative to the strength of the enemy. Accordingly he entrusts this delicate mision to his daughter, Rena, who disguises herself as a peasant woman and secures admittance to the enemy's line, where she makes the acquaintance of Colonel Nutt, who falls in love with her and imparts the secrets she was sent out to obtain. Major Fritz, Rena's lover, is attached to General Nuisance's staff, and worries greatly over her absence. At last he pleads with the general to be allowed to go and search for her and obtains permission. Donning his disguise he sets forth on his way, but the disguise is so perfect that he is picked up by a detachment of his own men who refuse to believe his identity and plan to execute him.

Meanwhile Rena is having her troubles. Having the desired information in her possession, she attempts to leave the hostile camp, but Colonel Nutt cannot bear to have his sweetheart go away. He has her imprisoned in the official tent. Major Fritz, pleading with his captors for clemency, receives nothing but jeers. He is ordered to be shot at sunrise. At the same time Rena makes a last attempt for liberty. She sends the orderly for Colonel Nutt and when he arrives she skillfully ties him to the tent post by his whiskers and escapes in his uniform. As she dashes out of camp on horse the alarm is sounded and the pursuit starts.

The firing squad hauls the regimental cannon in front of Major Fritz and fires. Disobeying the orders of the officer in charge of the firing squad, Major Fritz dodges the first few balls, much to the gunners' disgust. Meanwhile Rena and the pursuing soldiers are drawing nearer. The officer in charge reprimands Major Fritz for moving during the discharge of the cannon and returns to his men. Another shot is fired, but the incorrigible Fritz dodges the ball and it lands among the fair Rena's pursuers. They turn and flee in dismay while Rena dashes on and into the midst of the firing squad. The officer in charge recognizes her as little Rena Nuisance, the general's daughter, and listens to her story with interest. Then she discovers Fritz straining at his bonds and inquires why he is to be shot. The officer explains the doubt as to his identity but Rena assures them he is Major Fritz. Apologies are offered after Fritz is released and Rena takes him back to her father and explains that Fritz's clever dodging saved both her life and the valuable papers she carried for the empire.

THE WOLF GIRL (Federal—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 25).—Silas Strong, a woodsman, lives with his daughter, Lona, who is a wild wood sprite, devoted to her father. She is loved by, and loves, Bert Dixon, but refuses to marry him and leave her father. Bert leaves for a trip north. Shortly afterward Broderick, the lumber king, and his son, Fred, visit the camp. Fred is attracted by Lona, and she resents his familiarity. Silas, learning of Fred's attack on Lona, gives him a severe beating. Plotting vengeace, Fred plans with two toughs to do away with Silas. The plan is carried out and Silas is found dead.

Lona is heartbroken, and, learning the cause of his death, seeks justice. However, money saves Fred, and he is acquitted of all suspicion. Alone, Lona plans to avenge her father's death, and a few days later follows Broderick and Fred to the city. In the city Lona gets employment as a cabaret dancer, and comes face to face with Fred. He, not recognizing her, falls victim to her alluring personality and shortly after gets her a position with his fiancee, as nurse to her little sister. When the opportunity arrives, Lona gets Fred in a compromising position, assures his fiancee of his duplicity, and their engagement is broken.

Like a wolf, Lona trails him down and whenever given the opportunity, gives him a bad record. Later, he is a marked and ostricized man. He sinks lower and lower, until, one night, he is shot during a raid on a gambling den. Taken home, a nurse is called, and she proves to be Lona, who has been studying in a hospital. Left alone with him, she arranges her hair, etc., as she was in the woods, and faces him. She tells him who she is. Weakened and sapped, Fred can stand no more, and falls back dead. Lona has avenged her father's death. Returning to the woods, Lona is greeted by Bert, and they pledge their troth.

THE RECKONING (Romona—Three Parts—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 25).—Dick Clyde, in love with Louise, who returns his affections, is refused consent to marry her by Jasper Hamilton, her father, who has in view a wealthy marriage of convenience. Clyde leaves for an indefinite trip and is gone over a space of two years, during which time Louise writes him at first but gradually ceases as she hears nothing from him, Hamilton intercepting his letters. At last Louise yields to her father and agrees to marry Robert Howe, a man in position to aid her father greatly in his financial distress. Upon the eve of the wedding a dinner is given at the bride's home. That same evening Dick Clyde arrives in town and takes rooms at a hotel. After a struggle with his pride, he calls Louise on the telephone and learns that her wedding dinner is to be held on that eve. She invites him and he accepts. The table is laid and the guests are gathered. Dick arrives and is presented to each in turn until he meets the groom-to-be. A faint flicker of recognition passes across his face, but Howe does not recall him.

Dinner finished, the ladies leave and the coffee is served. Over their cigars an opportunity is afforded for which Dick Clyde has been waiting. He leads up to a story relating to his travels and tells his tale, the tale of a brute. The story ends with the days of pathetic waiting of the little wife he has left in the foreign country from which he fled. The little wife still waits. All condemn the man whom Dick has portrayed—except one—Robert Howe, whose face is ashen. The men adjourn to the other room where the ladies wait. As he crosses the threshold Howe's eyes meet Dick's and he knows that his case is hopeless. He excuses himself and leaves hurriedly.

The evening wears on. Dick, talking to Louise, explains that he wrote her regularly. She realizes her father's baseness but points to the ring upon her finger and refuses to consider his proposal. As they talk the phone rings and Dick is called to it. The clerk at the hotel where Dick and Howe both stay is agitated; a few minutes before a shot was heard, the room whence it came was opened and Howe found lying dead. A note for Dick is being held at the hotel and upon Dick's arrival he finds the dead man's confession and the request that Louise be spared the knowledge of his past. The one barrier being removed, Dick later goes to Louise, after the shock of the tragedy has passed, and again tells his love. This time he is rewarded and also receives repentance of Hamilton for the part he has played by delaying his daughter's happiness.

BREAKING INTO SOCIETY (Santa Barbara—Rel. Wk. of Oct. 25).—When Stumpy gets into an argument in the Bowery lunch-room in which he works as waiter, he grows careless and drops a bowl of noodle soup over an old man's head. A free-for-all fight starts, and Stumpy finds himself without a job. So he leaves the Bowery and makes for the country—by freight. On the same car he finds an old pal, and uniting their fortunes, the two drop off together at a small station.

Ambitious Mrs. Justgotrich, who has been vainly trying to break into local society, has been snubbed by her aristocratic neighbors from the next estate. So she is boiling over with resentment when she spies Stumpy and his pal at their toilet by the wayside. She gets an inspiration and decides that the pair shall be the instruments of her venegance. When she offers them $500 each "just to be her guests," they need no urging, and soon they are installed in her home, waited upon by the butler, who has a few moments before kicked them off the porch, and delighted with the chance to doll themseves up.

Meantime Mrs. Justgotrich invites the woman who has snubbed her to "meet her old friends, Baron Eyeland and Count Yourchange." The appeal of foreign titles proves irresistible to the haughty one and she comes. But, alas! the charms of two pretty maids work havoc with the hearts of the psuedo-nobles and likewise with Mrs. Justgotrich's plans. Maids and tramps abandon her, after wrecking her fine car. Her social aspirations are forever destroyed.

"MINUSA SCREENS"
THE MAGNET THAT "DRAWS THE COIN!"

"Minusa Screens" are so "MAGNETIC" they simply draw in the coin. Why shouldn't they? This screen gives the pictures all their "natural beauty," just as the camera saw them, and insures your patrons against "EYE STRAIN." That's why "Minusa Screens" attract such crowds. It's ten times as good a show for the same money, so why should they strain their eyes looking at "Cloudy Pictures" on a poor screen?

If you are progressive, and believe in giving the public more than they can get elsewhere, then by all means install a "Minusa Gold Fibre Screen," "BUILT BY BRAINS," to fit YOUR theater.

Let us have your specifications NOW, as it takes ten days to build the screen that "DRAWS THE COIN."

Write or wire today for prices and samples.

Because it means more money for YOU, that's why

The reason a moving picture owner wants the best is because it means more money flowing into the box office. You may have a good location and fine films, but for complete success you need

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

They give brilliant, distinctive pictures because of their even illumination and sharp definition of the entire area thrown on the screen. That is why exacting operators demand Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with our lenses; the same you can procure through any film exchange.

REMBUSCH SCREENS

SILVERFIBRE—"The Picture and the Price"

We had a customer the other day who wanted a cheap screen but at the same time a screen that would be first class. When we showed him our Silverfibre he was certainly surprised, first with the wonderful picture and then the price. Imagine buying a seamless screen, metallized through and through, costing little more than a common sheet, and if there is anything better offered by anyone, anywhere, you don't have to pay me. Look at the list of screens we make, then write us for prices and terms. We will do the rest.

If you have a large wide house you must have our new screen, Glory Light. You never have seen a great picture until you have seen it.

BETTER AND CHEAPER

There was a time when only a few exhibitors could afford a Rembusch Glass Mirror Screen. That is all past. In our new factory we are able to make ten screens, where we only made one before, and with less labor and at the same time make them better.

Therefore you can now buy a Glass Mirror Screen about as cheap as a metallized screen.

Are you not about ready to quit dubbing around with all kinds of cloth screens? They don't last. Show me one that has not lost one-half of its pep in the first six months' use, and I will give you one of my six theatres and give you your choice.

I traded for a larger size this week. We opened the little one at the factory and found it as good as the day it left the factory EIGHT YEARS ago. Is there any better proof of the pudding? Buy a Rembusch Glass "Mirror Screen" and you will be cured of what is the matter with you.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR PRICES AND TERMS OR WRITE US DIRECT TODAY.

MAKE'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips of assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Get Your Tickets Promptly?

Ever ask yourself that question? Ever stopped to think of the discomfort, the tiresome, needless delay to which you are subjecting your patrons out there at the ticket window?

Put yourself in the patron's position. Suppose you had to stand out there these chilly fall evenings gradually getting closer to the ticket window, but at snail's speed. And when you finally reached the window, you found a ticket seller, nervous and "rattled" by the rush, fumbling around to tear off your tickets and then doing some more fumbling around for your change.

Then, when you reached the ticket chopper, there was a boy causing you further delay by having to poke around in that ticket chopper trying to make the tickets go through.

Wouldn't it disgust you? Wouldn't it arouse your anger? Wouldn't it make you swear you'd rather stay home? And remember you're no different than the general public. Human nature is the same the world over. You're juggling with "good will"—the element that makes or breaks a theatre.

TICKET OFFICE EQUIPMENTS

expedite the handling of crowds. They save time, save money, and create "good will." They embody all that is newest and best in Ticket Sellers, Ticket Choppers, Change Making Machines, Theatre Record Ledger Systems, Ticket Boxes, Tickets, etc. They are used in leading theatres everywhere and are designed to meet practical needs by a practical theatre man,—Mr. Arthur Caille, President of the big Majestic Theatre of Detroit, and owner of many smaller theatres.

The Caille Ticket Seller

Sells tickets ten times faster than the hand method. Eliminates errors. Every ticket sold is automatically registered by a register under lock and key. Delivers tickets in any quantity, and, mind you, separately. They can't lie across the knives in the chopper. Tickets are delivered by simply pressing a button. For tickets of different denominations, additional sections are installed. Each section has its individual motor for direct or alternating current. Every machine thoroughly guaranteed.

Caille Ticket Choppers

can be furnished for hand, foot or electric operation. They tear the tickets to shreds, making it absolutely impossible to use them again. Every chopper fully guaranteed.

Our Lightning Change Maker

does the calculating and delivers the change direct to the customer in the twinkling of an eye. It shortens the time of transaction, prevents errors and disputes with customers. Has a very simple keyboard conveniently arranged like a typewriter. Easy to operate, fully guaranteed.

The Distinguished Star of the Legitimate Drama, George Fawcett, in "The Frame-up"

Eighteenth Prize Release
Broadway Universal Features
Released Nov. 8.

Written and Directed by Otis Turner.

To put the street railway franchise through for the easy money there was in it, the Big Boss knew he would have to elect his own mayor. The ward politicians said Alderman Luke Simms was "too honest," but the Boss nominated and elected him, saying "Every man has his weak spot, and I'll find Luke's." But using Honest Luke as an easy way to "graft," even through his love for his wife, who, by the way, was the Boss's discarded mistress, was another matter. When the Mayor's secretary discovered that the Boss had ruined his sister, things began to happen, and the "big fellow" learned that such trifling matters as love, fidelity, loyalty, honesty and self-sacrifice were mightier weapons than he had ever fought before. So the climax comes with a punch that thrills and leaves an audience gasping. George Fawcett's tremendous personality looms large in this big drama. Maude George plays a heavy emotional role with gripping realism. Harry Carter makes a powerful and dominating Boss. The balance of the cast is talented and well chosen. Otis Turner again proves his wizardry in both the story and the directing. If the average feature producer had this big play he would charge you a week's receipts for the bare rental. As a matter of fact, you will find it hard to book as strong a feature elsewhere at any price. Broadway Universal Features are the biggest and the best pictures being released today. Don't trifle with your luck. Book now, while you have the chance.

Herbert Rawlinson in "On the Level"

Prize Society Comedy Drama
Gold Seal—2 Reels
Released Nov. 9.

Directed by William Worthington.

You couldn't feel sorry for Herbert Rawlinson, no matter how much he was up against it—in a picture. He always looks happy, never worried, darned easy to look at, and the way he can carry a light comedy scene (and wear good clothes), has made him the film favorite of finicky fans for fair. He is so good in this particular picture that he's going to appear in a lot more of the lighter sort. Herbert takes the blame for a brother's misdeed; but he laughs his way through it and out of it and incidentally marries the comedy servant, who proves to be the leading woman he has written a play for. A bully picture.

Billie Ritchie in "Silk Hose and High Pressure" With Louise Orth and Henry Bergman

Prize Comedy Scream
L-Ko—3 Reels
Released Nov. 10.

Directed by H. Pathe Lehrman.

D'jever see a Jap acrobat balancing on the end of a pole that was fastened to the ground by nothing at all? Why, say, guy, that's nothin'! Absoballylutely nothin'. Take a slant at the L-Ko comedians doing the same stunt on the end of a stream of water. I guess that's high pressure for you. And the "Silk Hose"—well, there's a big bunch of the "merry-merry" in this laff-getter that supply that part of the title. For Pure Fun purposes and for original absurdities this comedy is there from silk hose to high pressure. A great headliner for a comedy night.

"Hearts That Are Human"

Prize Melodrama
Big U—3 Reels
Released Nov. 11.

You can talk all the highbrow stuff you like, but there's one kind of picture play that gets 'em all, my friend, low-brows and highbrows both, and that's a well made "mellerdrammer." If the girl is wronged, so much the better. If the hero gets her, and the villain "gets his," and there's some real sob stuff generously distributed, you can bet that it will fuss up the fans' emotions so that they will have a perfectly lovely time. There's no sham or pretence about this sterling play, and it is pure melodrama that gets to everybody. Also, it so happens that the play is well acted, well directed and most realistically staged. We cut it three reels to give you good measure and you can bet it's as full of punches now as a Kentucky Colonel at a New Year's reception. You'll like it and the coin it brings you.

"The Doctor's Crime" with Charles Ogle

Prize Criminal Drama
Imp—2 Reels
Released Nov. 12.

Directed by C. H. Weston.

As a criminal the Doctor was in league with the old boy himself. He was a dope fiend and that explains his ingenuity, but it doesn't explain the tremendous power and punch in this fine photoplay. It isn't all unpleasant and the acting, the sets and the direction are all on a big scale. Tensely dramatic situations lead to a rousing climax and the ending is not weakened by pleasing everyone who sees this drama of action.

"What the River Foretold" with Sherman Bainbridge, Edythe Sterling and John Holt

Prize Western Drama
101-Bison
Released Nov. 13.

Directed by Wm. Franey.

Here's a secret, brother. We're telling it to you because you are entitled to know. Western dramas go big when they are made by the Universal. If any one tells you western dramas don't go any more, tell them to see "What the River Foretold." It's big and beautiful. It has mystery, romance, adventure, marvelous scenery, a real story, fine acting—but what's the use. You know Universal Westerns are as different from the average riding school cowboy chase as a Broadway Universal Feature is from a slap-stick comedy. Two partners drink from the river. One rising looks up stream, and never again tells the truth. The other looks down stream and the desert claims him. This is the Indian tradition and around it has been fashioned a play worth all the ordinary Westerns you ever booked. If you want to know how good real Western pictures can be, get this one.

"The Masked Substitute" With Wm. C. Dowlin and Gloria Fonda---Universal Beauty Contest Winner

Prize Romantic Drama
Laemmle—2 Reels
Released Nov. 14.

Directed by Wm. C. Dowlin.

Ping! Ping! No, another Indian did not bite the dust. But Bill got the fellow that had been fooling with his gal—and then, come to find out when her mask was off she wasn't Bill's gal at all. But the mix-up makes a mighty fine picture with a ball room at a country place and a half dozen dozen maskers more or less. And the love interest is strong and Bill and his girl live happily ever after—we hope. 99 out of every 100 fans will say this picture is great and you'll enjoy it, too.

You Can Book Essanay Releases Without Looking at Them!

The reason is that Essanay's beacon of excellence guides you to the best programs. Most exhibitors are busy men. They have not the time to scrutinize every release before they book it. When an exhibitor finds an Essanay release, he can say: "Go ahead and book it in. I don't need to see it. You can always bank on an Essanay."

MUTUAL PROGRAM

The Problem—Its Answer

You—the exhibitor—are continually confronted with the problem of selecting pictures that will prove money-makers for you and at the same time please your patrons. Analyzing this problem, the conclusion is that you must have productions with two primary essentials—drawing power in its relation to cost—and merit.

As possessing these qualities "The Blood of Our Brothers," a three reel Centaur Star Feature to be released on the Mutual program, October 27, is offered to you.

The drawing power of this feature in connection with its advertising possibilities rests principally in the story and the star. The biggest topic of the day—peace—is the keynote sounded in "The Blood of Our Brothers." It is a topic of universal interest and appeal. The star is Crane Wilbur, one of the most popular leading men in motion pictures, the mention of whose name on a lithograph is sufficient to induce patronage.

There are no extra booking fees for "The Blood of Our Brothers" to counteract whatever increased patronage is to be gained by showing it. The picture is released in the regular Mutual service without additional rental charge, giving you an opportunity to increase your business without additional expenditure.

Though to all purposes a drama in the interest of peace, "The Blood of Our Brothers" is not a wearisome preachment. Treated in allegory, with its locale and characters typical of no country or nation, the story is given a colorful and picturesque charm, lending a strong contrast which adds to the power of the moral.

Thousands of dollars have been spent in staging it and the returns are prominent throughout the picture. Without fear of contradiction it may be said that "The Blood of Our Brothers" is in every way the most ambitious undertaking ever attempted in the production of a release for regular program service.

Edward Sheldon's famous play was one of the biggest money-makers ever produced on the speaking stage.

The picturization of the play should prove one of the biggest money-makers ever offered to motion picture exhibitors.

It is not a drama of the religious type, but the Salvation Army is used as the background for a gripping story of life in a big city.

It is a story of the temptations which the city offers to young girls, a story of "high society" and of levels somewhat lower. It is a story that strikes home and one that will pull your patrons back for more. The leading role is protrayed by

More Wise Men in the Triangle Garden

Last week we told you of Kemble, of Brooklyn. This week you'll be glad to know of Hexter, of Cleveland, who thinks something better than $100,000 of TRIANGLE PLAYS. Hexter is not the type of man who rushes in without investigation. He didn't make a success of his Liberty Theatre in that way.

Then there's Gordon, of Boston. Gordon backs his belief in TRIANGLE quality with his hard cash—about a quarter of a million for two years.

The Dusenburys, of Columbus, have brought the Southern Theatre up among the top-notchers by reason of good judgment and A-1 quality. They have never been satisfied with second best. They've bought the TRIANGLE output.

And the Archer Brothers, of Chicago. They didn't build their success on mistakes. They're paying bigger money than they ever paid anybody for TRIANGLE SERVICE in the President and Bandbox Theatres.

There must be a reason for the action of all these men that affects YOU. If you have MADE a success—you'll want to keep it. If you have not—you'll WANT to make it. These men instinctively couple success and TRIANGLE in their judgment.

Next week we'll tell you about some others.

OFFICE OF THE MANAGING DIRECTOR

New York October 13th, 1915.

Paramount Pictures Corporation,
120 West 41st Street,
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Sirs:-

With reference to the contract which we have just closed with your company for Paramount service in the Strand Theatre during the coming year, would say that we have made this contract simply because we are convinced -- after one year's trial -- that Paramount Pictures afford consistently the best program to be had in the market.

Our clientele of the best people has continually increased, with a consequent increase in box office receipts. Our experience has proved to us that Paramount Service means success.

We wish also to take this opportunity to express out appreciation for the work you have done for the industry in standardizing the motion picture entertainment and placing it on the plane of a high class, dignified form of amusement.

Wishing you continued success, we are

Yours very truly,

"Friend Wilson's Daughter"

A drama of Revolutionary days, splendidly lived by
ROBERT BROWER, BIGELOW COOPER,
GERTRUDE McCOY and HAROLD MELTZER

"Friend Wilson's Daughter," this 3-act Feature, is unusual for interest in the suspense maintained. Not until the very end—that most desired quality of plays—do we guess how the heroic captain is going to escape apparently inevitable death as "a traitor" to his beloved cause. Next, the characterization, especially of Robert Brower as the stern old Quaker father; Bigelow Cooper as the hypocritical religious friend, doing one of the best characters of his career, and Harold Meltzer, a new face and the hero, meeting his death like a soldier, are highly commendable. Gertrude McCoy, as the Quaker girl who would not be a Quaker in love, fits well. There is an atmosphere about this feature, which is quickened with fiery blood 'neath Quaker exteriors, which makes it much more than "a costume play." It's something different and should go well, indeed, with every type of audience. Book it! Direction Langdon West. 3000 feet. Friday, November 5th.

"Mrs. Fiske gives a most animated interpretation of 'Becky' . . . her performance is a finished piece of acting which surpasses the best of her stage presentations." —Pittsburgh Sun.

"Mrs. Fiske has brought her perky, independent 'Becky' to the screen . . . this is a treasure . . ." —Kitty Kelly, in Chicago Tribune.

". . . recalls vividly her characterization of the same role on the speaking stage . . . a big production done in a big way with a big star carrying it over . . ." —Clover Lord, in Chicago Evening Post.

"Mrs. Fiske is superb in her far-famed role of Becky Sharp . . . the story abounds with dramatic situations . . ."
—George W. Graves, in Motography.

"Staged by Mrs. Fiske, it was very popular, but seen in pictures it is a sensation. . ." —Savannah, Georgia, News.

A quaint tale far off the beaten path of feature stories—brilliant in execution—delightfully fanciful in theme—

Raphael, an artist, sells his soul to Satan; bargains with the Devil for a worthless woman's love and possession of that magic talisman, The Magic Skin.

Then follows a few years more of earthly joys—of wanton debauches, riches, sin and retribution—vividly told in five of the most weird and enchanting reels that ever flashed across your screen!

Give "THE MAGIC SKIN" a chance. Its refreshing originality will take your house by storm!

Old Mrs. Lee, a famous witch and fortune teller of the gypsy tribes, has a son, Anselo, a strapping, handsome fellow. Gertrude, daughter of wealthy Mrs. Carlton, visits the camp, meets Anselo, and is fascinated by him. A romance follows, which Mrs. Lee opposes, for Gertrude is a frail girl, and the old witch has read in her palm that she will die young. Mrs. Carlton makes strenuous efforts to cure her daughter of her fascination because of the fact that she wishes Gertrude to marry Van Buren, a young society man. But the supreme love on Anselo's part sustains them despite all obstacles. Anselo teaches the girl the wildly-beautiful Romany love songs; and when—as old Mrs. Lee had foretold—the girl falls from her horse and is seriously injured, he would come and sit at her feet with his guitar and sing them to her; the old witch and Mrs. Carlton finally succeed in separating the young couple, and Anselo loses all track of the girl. Heart-broken he follows his wandering tribe for many weary months. Finally, he locates Gertrude again, but she is very sick, and after a brief period of happiness, she dies in his arms, after their last kiss of farewell.

Facts and Comments

NOW comes a "professor of journalism" (whatever that may be) advocating licenses for reporters. The reactionary germ seems to be in the air. Next we will be licensing scenario-writers, directors, actors and perhaps even producers and exchangemen. The old-fashioned democratic idea of letting the government mind its own business seems to be dead in these atavistic days of censorship.

HAROLD C. MITCHELL, the Assemblyman, who introduced the censorship bill in the Assembly last year, is again a candidate for office. He says that he will re-introduce the censorship bill in the Assembly in 1916 and that he will make a strong fight for it. Give him credit for being honest and open in his plans. If after this fair warning the film men of New York do not use every effort to beat this candidate at the polls they are simply neglecting their own bread and butter.

A BRITISH contemporary sounds a note of alarm for the benefit of the British Government. It is all in reference to the import tax which has been imposed. Our contemporary fears lest "the centre of the world's film market will be transferred to some other city than London." The world's film center may, as a consequence of the British import tax, shift to this country or to some city on the European continent. It is predicted that the "dumping" practice will set in and legislation is recommended making it a penal offence to procure a negative from an imported positive print.

A FRIENDLY reader writing from Cleveland, Ohio, takes exception to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD awarding the medal for censorial idiocy to the Pennsylvania censors. He thinks that the leather medal for the time being at least ought to go to the Ohio censors. His claim is substantiated by the decision of the Ohio Board in the case of Lasky's "Carmen." After the Ohio censors got through with Carmen the hot-blooded gypsy girl had become a decorous, peaceable and even demure little maiden, opposed to cigarettes and cultivating the most friendly relations with the other factory girls. Done Jose is not allowed to do any bodily harm to Carmen. As for the embraces of Jose they are simply barred. We suppose that the censors will have no objection to a subtitle in which Carmen assures the young sergeant of her platonic regard. Yes, the title of the Breitinger crowd is getting shaky the longer we look at the censorial mayhem of the Ohio sages.

EVERY organized body within the industry has gone on record as endorsing the campaign of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD for the defeat of the proposed constitution which has failed to recognize the rights of the motion picture as a medium of expression. On the other hand THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is glad to have the support and encouragement of any agency which works for the common welfare. Every publication interested in motion pictures has stood against censorship. We have no doubt that the campaign against the new constitution with its negative endorsement of censorship will be helped by every journalistic friend of the motion picture.

COMPARED with conditions in the beginning of the industry the attendance of children at motion picture theaters has shown a falling off. The motion picture is no longer mainly a children's entertainment in spite of censorial vaporings to the contrary. Recently statistics on the subject were gathered in the city of Duluth, proving that only fifteen children went to the motion picture theaters there seven times a week. The figures show that 2,621 children go once a week, 1,065 twice a week, 188 three times a week, 61 four times a week, 16 five times a week, and 2 six times a week. There is every reason to suppose that these statistics will not vary very materially in other cities of similar size.

* * *

THE campaign against the new constitution is drawing to a close. New York exhibitors who want to help in defeating it because of its hostility to motion picture interests must get busy at once. Show the power of the slide, show your intelligence and your progressiveness by sending for slides or speaker or both, absolutely free of charge. THIS IS THE LAST CALL.

The Dreadful Word

By W. Stephen Bush.

OUR friend John H. Kunsky, one of the most progressive and useful citizens in the realm of films, is out with a neat little folder asking the momentous question: Why the word "Movie?"

He speaks out of the fullness of the heart and expresses the agonized thoughts that lie in the soul of many a friend of motion pictures. After stating the painful fact that the execrable word is in common use even among patrons of the motion picture, Mr. Kunsky goes on to relieve his feelings in these words:

> If those same good people—and, mind you, many of them are the staunchest supporters of the motion picture—only realized the heartache and distress it caused the larger and better class of motion picture exhibitors today, when they referred to the silent drama in this manner, I am certain that they would desist.
> Listen! No business has a cleaner record or has been brought to as high a plane of efficiency and excellency in so short a time as has the motion picture.
>
> I have seen this business grow from a penny arcade and peephole show into what it is today. I have seen the film play advance from a one-reel indifferently gotten up subject to its present state of perfection. I have seen the greatest artists of the speaking stage be drawn slowly but surely to the standard of the silent drama, and I have seen the quality of the film productions grow and improve until today they are exhibited in the largest and most beautiful theaters in this country and in Europe. Immense amounts of money and time have been spent in producing in filmized form the greatest dramatic artists—artists whose names will live forever as the greatest exponents of dramatic interpretation, in the most famous dramatic masterpieces. Capital has and is being spent to a prodigious amount in providing palace theaters in which to exhibit them. Hours of thought and labor are being expended by the brainiest men in the theatrical world on how to improve, even now.
> I have spent many thousands of dollars in my endeavor to assist in the uplifting of the motion picture industry, and I expect to spend many thousands more. Do you think that I would have invested and keep on investing in a business in which I thought no dignity could be attached? Invest my money in a business that was but a passing fancy, that had no future?
>
> When a business is worthy of such huge expenditure of money as has been invested in the motion picture, is it not worthy of more consideration, more dignity, than the word "movie"?
> It has never been my good fortune to discover the origin of the word "movies," but it is evident that the word was invented by someone who failed to realize that brain, energy and power of origination are paramount in the sale of the animated film to the public, as well as any other necessary commodity, be it amusement or otherwise.

Well spoken, Friend Kunsky. You have echoed the sentiments of many thousands.

The first time I ever heard the word was in the Kensington section of Philadelphia, when a group of boys was debating how they were going to spend the evening. One of them said "Let's go down and see the movoes." They did not say "movies," but "movoes." That is as near as written language can reproduce the sound. Never did I dream then in the fall of 1908 that the word would invade and soil the newspapers and become a recognized noun in polite conversation.

The word sounds more like the helpless loll of the idiot than the speech of normal people with a healthy tongue and clean, dry lips.

It is bootless, however, to inveigh against the wide use of a word without giving the public a substitute. Very few people, I think, use the awful word with any intention of slighting the motion picture entertainment. It is the word which implies the slight. The word implies that the user thereof does not take the motion picture seriously. The word is a weapon in the hands of our enemies. How often do we hear the expression: "Only a 'movie,' after all."

What substitute can we offer? I cannot think of a harder question. The genius of the English language favors short words. I do not know of a single case where a word of one syllable was ever replaced in public use by a word of more than one syllable. We have very little chance of getting the public to drop the odious word and accept in lieu thereof a word of Greek or Latin origin. Photoplay is all right, but it will never displace "movie." The three syllables in photoplay forbid its becoming popular. There is an urgent need for a plain, strong short word to describe an entertainment as universally popular as the motion picture. Think how often the word is mentioned every day and in every part of the country. I think, therefore, we must look for a word of Saxon origin, containing not more than one syllable. You see the process of elimination is not difficult. It is much easier to say what words will not do than to find a really serviceable substitute for the abominable "movie."

I hope that friend Kunsky's splendid plea against the use of the silly word will start a discussion, which will eventually result in the discovery of a new word for the most popular amusement of the century. To start this discussion and with becoming diffidence I suggest that the word "films" might be a lesser evil than "movies." It is not at all an ideal word and I am not a bit proud of it, but it may possibly be an improvement upon "movies." I would rather hear a man say "Well, the films were good today" than "Well, the 'movies' were good today." Films is English. "Movie" surely is not. Films by no means identifies and describes our great art as I would like to see it described, but it suggests something more respectable than "movies." I would sooner hear a man say: "Well, I see Miss Soandso, the famous actress, is now in the films," than hear him say "Miss Soandso has gone into the 'movies.'" We speak even now of the filming of a play and the filming of an actor. Thank Heaven we have not as yet coined a verb from this frightful word "movie." Even the yellow journals I think would recoil from saying that a drama has been "movied." We speak of a film literature, but even the worst perverters of our noble tongue would stop at "movie literature." The word film, too, has an international value. It has been copied and adopted into every known language.

I repeat that I offer the word "films" as a substitute for the unspeakable idiocy of "movies" with the utmost diffidence and merely to start the discussion. Some one within or without the industry will surely think of something far better and far more suitable, but we simply must get rid of "movies." That word I would like to see sent back to the gutter, whence it came.

Having found a likely substitute for "movies" how are we going to secure its general adoption by the public? I think that part of our work will be easier than the finding of the right substitute. A campaign in the press and above all things on the screen and in all the programs of the country will bring the desired result. I have no doubt that friend Kunsky will introduce the word into his large zone in short order. The question is: Find the word.

We want suggestions from our readers. If all exhibitors take the proper interest the word will be discovered.

Author and Producer*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

HAPPY day for author and producer will be that which brings them into closer relation. The future success of both is bound to depend more and more upon mutual confidence and respect. Nearly all large makers of motion-pictures have become established through hard work and business sagacity, a fact occasionally overlooked by scenario writers of decided native gifts and undecided ideas of how to formulate their creations—they invent without providing a practicable working device. Even those who are in earnest, who do not look to moving pictures for a little easy money on the side, often fail because whatever is worth while in their scripts is presented in bad shape.

Imagine a publisher of fiction being compelled to hire a squad of skilled craftsmen for the purpose of transforming, revising and punctuating carelessly written novels before sending them to the printer! The successful novelist exercises a vast amount of purely technical skill in writing and rewriting his story, realizing that it is not enough to be familiar with his subject matter—he must have an intimate acquaintance with his medium. Yet he will send in a scenario of weird structure to the producer of moving pictures and sit back with a self-satisfied smile when he sees his unmoulded clay splendidly visualized on the screen, densely unaware that it is essential in other artistic callings than that of literature to be an artisan. Having provided the raw material, he is stupid enough to accept credit for the finished product, almost entirely the work of those who gave it form at the studio. Even intelligent dramatists are slow to appreciate the genius required, not to reflect what they have done, but to refract it in glowing shape on the screen.

The old-fashioned novelist, who has sailed in one ship until he knows the vessel from keel to main-truck, from pole to spanker-boom, revolts at the idea of using machinery to propel his craft. He will never become entirely reconciled to moving pictures. He looks down upon them from the foreskysail-yard of his own lofty achievement with the contemptuous indifference of an ancient mariner who has weathered many a gale of literary composition and is not going to bother his head over steam power. The race is too swift for one of his easy-going temperament. He will pursue the same course his ancestors did before him, not improving on it to any observable extent, oblivious to the fact that the new force reaches out to a thousand ports where he touches at one. Let him sail on, at the mercy of trade winds, a relic of what was once glorious, an art that has fostered intelligence though it has helped to establish de-civilizing groups of men.

Modern writers may eventually grasp the fact that a new, beautiful and universal medium has come into existence, one well calculated to create better understanding among nations whose real boundaries are those of language. The German mind is almost exclusively cultivated by German literature, and so with other nations, to an extent that bigotry is instilled where world-wide knowledge should be. When it dawns upon bright creative genius of today that thought may reach out to the people of all nations, of all classes, literate and illiterate, through the new medium, its employment will appeal powerfully to men of ideas, men of special attainments and to all cultured human beings who feel that they have a message to convey. Two priceless possessions are knowledge and the ability to communicate it to others.

The tremendous popularity of moving pictures has created a demand for stories far beyond any present or immediately prospective supply, and sharp competition among groups of producers has not only raised the quality of that demand but the compensation for effort as well, until it is now well worth any live author's while to leave some of the legacies of his genius to millions who sit in the shadow and are illumined by the screen. The 999 rejections out of 1,000 scripts submitted prove mainly a lack on the part of writers of either native talent or of equipment for their work. The high-class producer is not only eager to secure original and interesting scenarios for visualization, but he is employing on high salaries men capable of transforming crude efforts of merit. These scenario editors, many of them possessing creative genius of their own, are engaged in bringing stuff written at random into an arrangement which compels and sustains attention and makes it easy for those in front to understand.

What a pitiful spectacle, that of a novelist, or a dramatist, of constructive imagination, asking some one to write his scenario for him! He feels that it is his own work that counts when he adapts from some other source. Shakespeare used the fables and fancies of all centuries, giving them new life and meaning, his the transformation, his the power, his the credit, and so with stage playwrights of today—why not those of the screen? The idea, the plot, the theme, is but the initial impulse. The course pursued is what counts thereafter, and that lies entirely with those engaged in the composite work of production. That composite work, throughout all departments, must be well-planned in advance to succeed, and that plan is the scenario.

Where does a novelist learn? From the critical essays of other authors, from their works, from observation, and from making a study of his vocation. He harvests from scattered world ideas and selects what he believes will provide inspiration, but he never truly finds himself until he has mastered the structure of his medium. The same is true of a dramatist. He becomes deeply concerned with the form and treatment of his subject matter. How can either expect to succeed in this new field with no practical knowledge of its peculiar methods? It has a kinship to the older arts, but it has an individuality all its own. Not to study it with care and intelligence is to be one of the 999 whose failure is a foregone certainty.

The day is coming when author and producer will draw nearer and nearer to each other in mutual understanding and finer appreciation of the importance of one to the other. The producer is now paying high prices to have crudely formulated stories given shape and spirit; he is paying high prices to have the initial plan developed with taste and sympathetic appreciation by directors, paying high prices for capable interpretation by the finest types, devoting brains and capital to scientific improvement, and when the negative is done, when the first positive is made, he spends long hours in correcting many little faults not visible in the process, in eliminating the superfluous, in clarifying the obscure, so that when the complete product pictures its message for millions all over the world, it is "nobody's child," the progeny of many minds.

Date of Publication to Change

WITH next week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD the date of publication will be changed to agree with the week in which the issue is printed. To make this statement plainer and to explain the cause for the change, it should be said that it has been decided to print THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD two days earlier than previously, that is, on Tuesday instead of Thursday. Thus, printing the paper so far ahead of the official day of publication—Saturday—impels the publishers to make the date of publication current with the week on which it is issued instead of one week ahead as heretofore. For example: the issue to be printed and mailed on Tuesday, November 2, will be dated Saturday, November 6.

As to the matter contained in each issue under the new arrangement there will be no appreciable difference. By arrangement with our advertisers copy for advertisements will be prepared two days in advance. The same schedule has been arranged with the manufacturers with regard to reviews. Our calendars and release date pages will also carry the same advance information as heretofore; the same applies to synopses of pictures and all other information useful to the exhibitor in making up his weekly program.

The purpose of the change is to make it possible for us to get THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to its readers at all points east of Denver during the week of publication or by Saturday at the latest and to the Pacific Coast not later than following Monday.

In making this change there will be a similarity in dates of this and the next issue, namely, October 30 and October 30a. We offer this explanation now so that readers will understand the meaning of the apparent similarity.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses—"The Yankee Girl" at the Strand.

BLANCHE RING, musical comedy star, is appearing at the Strand theater in a picturization of her former success, "The Yankee Girl," produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. The story is in brief as follows:

The race of the wealthy Gordon family in their crack yacht, "The Yankee Girl," to close an option on a valuable copper concession in Latin America, and the political intrigue of the desperate James Seavey of the rival Pacific Copper crowd to prevent their arriving on time culminates when the quick-witted Jessie Gordon braves old President Ambroce Castroba, whom Seavey has bought out, in his own palace. The breezy blarney of the pretty North American girl goes to Castroba's head, as does the champagne she fools him into thinking she is drinking with him, and he forgets his agreement with Seavey and accepts the $5,000 first payment on the copper property. But before the transaction can be binding a final payment of $60,000 must be made in twenty-four hours. How Jessie secures the money, rescues her father and wins a husband, makes up the rest of the story.

A newly arrived lot of European war pictures, with other news events, are shown in the Topical Review; also beautiful and interesting travel pictures in colors and several scientific studies. A new comedy concludes the film part of the entertainment.

Blanche Sweet at the Broadway.

At the Broadway theater this week, photodramatic audiences are given an opportunity of seeing the brilliant and beautiful Lasky star, Blanche Sweet, play two distinct characters in "The Secret Sin," a thrilling drama written especially for her by Margaret Turnbull. Pathe latest events, selected comedies, and new Paramount South American travel scenics and cartoons are also on the program.

"The Birth of a Nation" is still filling the Liberty theater at every performance, and "The Battle Cry of Peace" is making a like record at the Vitagraph.

"The Other Girl" First Raver Feature

New Company Will Produce a Thomas Play—Some Staff Appointments.

THE Raver Film Corporation is already in motion and within the next six or eight weeks will demonstrate to the trade, through the screen presentation of its first feature, "The Other Girl," from the pen of Augustus Thomas, exactly what increased tone and quality its policy succeeds in accomplishing by allowing every production its fully required footage, be it four, nine or twelve reels in length, completely toned or tinted with deftness. Distinctiveness, grandeur, exacting precision generally, and a decided stamp of the superior are the intentions of Harry R. Raver. Elaborate advertising material is being prepared. Mr. Raver put "Cabiria" over big. He understands how. His new corporation will benefit by his knowledge and high degree of showmanship.

Percy Winter, son of the noted William Winter, dramatic editor of the Tribune from 1865 to 1909, has been engaged as director of productions. Mr. Winter is too well known as a result of his long association with the legitimate stage as director for many producers and also for his more recent motion picture experience to need detailed introduction. William Jennings Coyle will assist Mr. Winter in his work. William Hartman is also a member of the corps and has completed his selection of outdoor locations for this company's first release.

Incidentally, Mr. Winter has been an extremely busy man in the past week, having already engaged more than half of the huge cast of four hundred and two necessary to portray "The Other Girl." This collection of talent is a vast one when it will be recalled that there is little occasion for mob gatherings and that never more than fifty people are used in any one scene.

Patrick J. McCaffray has been secured to head the camera force and has selected his own group of assistants. Albert K. Greenland has been placed in charge of the publicity department and will be surrounded with a capable corps of aids.

MARIE DORO IN "DIPLOMACY."

Marie Doro, who created a distinct screen sensation in her first appearance in motion pictures, in the Famous Players' Film Company's production of the "Morals of Marcus," and who has repeated this triumph in that company's latest release, "The White Pearl," will, upon her return from Los Angeles, where she will remain for a short time, appear in an elaborate photo production of the great dramatic success, "Diplomacy," by Sardou.

"Diplomacy" is the most valuable dramatic acquisition to the screen since "Zaza" and "Bella Donna," which were also secured by the Famous Players, and added interest attaches to the plan to present Miss Doro in its screen adaptation because of the fact that in the oral version of this famous play she attained one of her greatest stage triumphs. It was only a year ago that Miss Doro co-starred with William Gillette and Blanche Bates in the revival of the great Sardou play at the Empire theater, New York, under Frohman management.

"Diplomacy" will be the ninth Charles Frohman production to be transferred to the screen by the Famous Players, who have already presented feature adaptations of "The Conspiracy," "The Morals of Marcus," "David Harum," "Are You a Mason?" "The Pretty Sister of Jose," "The Dictator," "The Fatal Card" and "Zaza."

"Diplomacy" will be released on the next Paramount quarter.

ASSOCIATED SERVICE IN NEW YORK THROUGH E. AND G.

William Weisfeld, vice-president and general manager of the E. & G. Film Service, Inc., located at 110 West 40th street, room 603, has closed a very profitable contract with the Associated Film Sales Corporation, for its program for Greater New York, Northern New Jersey and Connecticut.

Mr. Weisfeld has been very successful in choosing Mr. Monroe Isen, who is well known to the moving picture trade, and recently in a similar capacity with the Universal, as his able assistant. Mr. Weisfeld has placed him in the entire charge of the new program.

The first release ready for exhibitors, will be on Monday, October the 25th. The two hustlers are working day and night with an additional force to get the program out on time.

Mr. Isen is ready with his glad hand to receive all his friends, and to give them a warm and hearty welcome.

Vitagraph Dynamites a Yacht

Destroys Eighty-five-Foot Craft in Making a Scene for "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel."

IN the making of a scene for the five-part comedy-drama, "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," the Vitagraph Company on Thursday, Oct. 13, dynamited the eighty-five-foot yacht Wayward. The destruction of the famous old-time craft was successfully accomplished under the direction of Theodore Marston, the producer of the subject in which the explosion will figure. The scene was staged in Princes Bay, which lies between the inside of Sandy Hook and Staten Island. Two boats conveyed the company forces to the scene. One left Sheepshead Bay at 8 o'clock and the second departed from the Battery at 8:45. The latter was held for the arrival of Charles Richman from the Boston boat. Mr. Richman had been playing in Newport for three days. He returned to that city on an evening train.

The ocean-going tug Pulver left Tompkinsville, S. I., at 9:45 with a big steam derrick in tow. At 10:45 the Wayward was picked up in Gravesend Bay. The little fleet reached the appointed place shortly after noon. Among the players on board besides Mr. Richman were Leo Delaney, Miss Arline Pretty and William Dunn. The Helene, which was awaiting the arrival of the Battery boat, had had a narrow escape from collision in the dense fog with an incoming ocean liner. The emergency was so apparent there was a rush for life preservers, the use of which, fortunately, was unnecessary.

The Helene, Pulver and derrick were stationed at the points of a triangle about 400 feet distant from the Wayward after the dynamite had been planted in the hold of the yacht. Three men in a motorboat ran a wire from the Wayward to a point near the derrick. Mr. Marston shouted that one pistol shot would be the signal to get ready, at the second the four cameras should be started, and at the third the current should be sent into the fifty pounds of explosive. The three shots were fired as every one waited for the smash. Nothing happened other than signs of activity in the dynamiters' craft.

The Blowing Up of the "Wayward."

Plainly something was wrong. The explosive chief began the rewinding of his cable. The trio returned to the craft and readjusted matters, while laymen looked on in fear something would precipitate the destruction before the men could get away. It was about 3 o'clock when for the second time the three shots came. There was no slip this time. A ripping roar was followed by the rising of a great volume of water and splinters. Then as the debris settled on the water there were splashes that followed each other with the rapidity of a quick-firer. A great cloud of smoke slowly lifted. Into the scene darted the players in a launch, picking up four men in the chill water. All that remained of the yacht above water were the tops of the masts.

J. M. Marshall, one of Uncle Sam's inspectors, under whose general supervision the explosion had been staged, gave instructions for the removal of the wreck. A lantern was hoisted on one of the masts, and arrangements were made for raising and towing the wreckage to shore on the day following. It was 7 o'clock in the evening before the Pulver reached the Battery. Walter Ackerman, who had arranged the plans for the day, was congratulated on his success.

Hazel Daly

WHEN so many beautiful girls are tempted by the enticing click of the camera and use every effort to gain an engagement of some sort, being even content with positions of "extras" in motion picture stock companies, it remained for a Chicago girl to win through the medium of her photograph the opportunity to become leading woman for dashing Tom Mix, the cowboy star of the Selig Polyscope Company's western company at Las Vegas, N. M.

Hazel Daly.

Miss Hazel Daly, not yet eighteen years of age, whose mother resides in Chicago, never gave a thought to pictures when she attended Chicago high school last winter. Today she seems certain to succeed in the most difficult of roles, that of a western cowgirl who must ride, shoot and throw the rope. Miss Daly never did any of these things. "I can learn; I will learn," she says. This attitude is characteristic of the girl.

Tom Mix was desirous of a leading woman who not only was pretty but could also act. The Selig Polyscope Company searched high and low. The applications came from some of the best-known screen actresses in the business. Miss Daly did not know of Tom Mix's needs. She just sent in her photo with a note asserting that she "was willing to do her best in motion picture work."

Then came a visit to the Selig executive offices, several tests at the Selig studio, and the outcome of it all was that Miss Daly has gone to Las Vegas ready and willing to play opposite Tom Mix, who has the reputation of being one of the most daring of screen stars when it comes to pulling thrilling stunts.

"SALVATION NELL" IN WORLD PROGRAM.

This very creditable adaptation of Edward Sheldon's play, in which Mrs. Fiske appeared some years ago, was reviewed in the Moving Picture World of August 28, page 1493. The California Motion Picture Company made the photoplay from a five-part scenario by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, presenting Beatriz Michelena in the role of Nell Saunders and William Pike as Jim Platt. It is a realistic picture of the depressing sordidness of slum life, sincerely acted and adequately staged. Miss Michelena, in particular, gives an impressive characterization. "Salvation Nell" is released on the World Film program.

A WARNING TO AMBITIOUS ACTRESSES.

An actress called at the Equitable studio and secured a part in "A Daughter of the Sea," just finished production by Charles Seay, starring Muriel Ostriche. She said she could swim, ride, etc., and was forthwith engaged for a part which required that she could swim and not fear the water. When the scene came around, it was discovered (after she was in the water) that she could not swim, and almost drowned herself and Miss Ostriche in her fright, the little star having a narrow escape.

Good Kalems Coming

"The Pitfall," "The Coquette," "The Woman of the Sea," and "Woman's Wiles" for Early Release.

AMONG the features which Kalem is to release during November is one which that company believes to be superior to any built along similar lines released by it. It is the four-act modern drama, "The Pitfall," and is to be issued on Monday, November 15.

Produced by James W. Horne from the scenario by Howard Irving Young, and with a cast consisting of such sterling performers as Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby, True Boardman, Thomas Lingham, Paul Hurst, Frank Jonasson and Edward Clisbee, it will be readily seen that all the elements for a feature of unusual quality were present. Mr. Horne is the producer responsible for "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," "The Barnstormers" and other notable Kalem successes. Among the dramas written by Mr. Young and issued by Kalem, are "The Net of Deceit," "The Apaches of Paris," etc.

Elaborate settings invariably mark Mr. Horne's productions and "The Pitfall" proves no exception in this respect. The biggest setting is that which shows the main salon in the gaming establishment, known as the "American Monte Carlo," operated by Deering, the villain of the story. In the scenes showing the plant while it is running in full blast upward of two hundred people are easily accommodated.

While "The Pitfall" stands out as the foremost Kalem feature for November, the other productions which are to be issued during that month are also of genuine merit. Among them are "The Coquette," a four-act drama scheduled for release Monday, November 1st; "The Woman of the Sea," a three-act production released Monday, November 8, and "A Woman's Wiles," a three-act drama to be issued on Monday, November 22.

"The Coquette" features Rea Martin, the little actress whom Alan Dale characterized as "the best child artist on the stage," following her performance at Wallack's theater, New York, in "Pomander Walk." It tells a powerful story of the misery and ruin caused by a heartless coquette and of the inevitable retribution which is heaped upon her head.

Jackie Saunders has probably never done anything better than the title role in "The Woman of the Sea." This is a story of diplomatic intrigue in which a woman, in the power of an unscrupulous man, exerts her every effort towards the frustration of his machinations. Miss Saunders' dramatic ability, together with her winsomeness and charm, make her portrayal altogether noteworthy.

"A Woman's Wiles" is a story of the Latin Quarter of Paris. A strong cast, headed by Philo McCollough and Alma Ruben, appears in this story of a woman's plot to wed the man whom she thinks has inherited a fortune.

TERWILLIGER PRODUCING "STREETS OF SILENCE."

"Streets of Silence" is the title of a new and original photoplay written by Anthony P. Kelly of the Lubin scenario force, which will have its production under Director George Terwilliger and which will be released through the V-L-S-E, Inc., offices, with Ormi Hawley as the star.

This will set at rest the constant rumor that Director Terwilliger is to leave the Lubin Company. The picture will be begun at once at the Lubin Philadelphia studios and then Director Terwilliger with his company will proceed to the Western Lubin branch at Coronado, Cal., where he will complete this picture and begin his next.

OTIS HARLAN SHOWS HOW.

When little Grace Darmond, leading lady of the Selig Motion Picture Stock Company of Chicago, sneaked away with Otis Harlan, the well-known comedian, and repaired to a cow shed, there to take instructions in the art of milking "Bossy," the two stars were unaware that the camera's eye had been turned upon them.

The photograph tells its own story. Otis Harlan was born on an Ohio farm and when Grace Darmond was informed that she must milk a cow in a scene, he volunteered to instruct her in the intricate details of this farm-like proceeding.

Otis Harlan Shows How.

Little Miss Darmond is city born and bred. She has seen few cows, much less milking them. She frankly stated that she was afraid of cows.

Then it was that Mr. Harlan came to the rescue, he rented a Jersey cow and tied it in the shed. Then he coaxed Miss Darmond to the scene of action. The whole proceeding was supposed to be a deep dark secret. The cameraman got hep, and this photograph is the result.

However, the milking lesson must have been beneficial, for Miss Darmond milked the cow in the most accomplished manner, and with the utmost nonchalance, when the motion picture director called for the scene and the camera clicked merrily.

DOROTHY GISH—TRIANGLE STAR.

Miss Dorothy Gish, who takes the role of Prince Karl's sweetheart in the "Old Heidelberg" film adaptation, released November 14, is one of the most charming and clever members of the D. W. Griffith-Triangle studio. She was born in Dayton, Ohio, March 11, 1898, and is thus a year and a half younger than her sister, Lillian Gish, the famous Elsie Stoneman of "The Birth of a Nation." Dorothy made her debut when only four years old, playing Little Willie in the classic, "East Lynn." Curiously enough, the girl's introduction to Director Griffith came through Mary Pickford. He was then in charge of the Biograph studio, and both Dorothy and Lillian went to work for him. The young actresses have been associated ever since with the Griffith school of film art. As soon as the Triangle program was organized, Mr. Griffith ordered that they should both be placed in stellar roles, as their talents well demanded.

Beside her current delightful work in "Old Heidelberg," Miss Dorothy Gish will be seen from time to time in other Griffith supervised plays for the Triangle.

Rothapfel Goes on Tour

Under the Auspices of Mutual Film Corporation Noted Manager Will Talk to Exhibitors in Twenty-seven Cities.

FROM the office of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, comes the announcement of a tour unique in film history. S. L. Rothapfel, whose management of theaters has aroused so much interest among exhibitors, will visit twenty-seven of the principal cities of the country. Mr. Rothapfel will carry to his fellow exhibitors a message of success. He will speak of his experiences and of the methods by which he has achieved high results in the management of the Lyric of Minneapolis, the Regent and the Strand of New York, and of what he hopes to do in the Rialto, now building at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, in the heart of the amusement district. He will tell how the lessons drawn from these experiences may be applied to the improvement of any theater and to the solucion of every exhibitor's problems.

Mr. Rothapfel's itinerary will be as follows: October 21, Philadelphia; 22, Washington; 25, New Orleans; 27, Dallas; 29, El Paso; 31, Los Angeles; November 3, San Francisco; 7, Portland, Ore.; 8, Seattle, Wash.; 10, Salt Lake City; 12, Denver; 14, Kansas City; 15, Omaha; 16, Minneapolis; 17, Milwaukee; 18, Chicago; 19, St. Louis; 20, Indianapolis; 21, Cincinnati; 22, Detroit; 23, Cleveland; 24, Pittsburgh; 25, Buffalo; 26, Albany; 27, Boston.

"The message which Mr. Rothapfel will carry," remarked President Freuler, "is in fact a message to the whole great body of exhibitors, regardless of their affiliations. No exhibitor who hears him can fail to gather information and inspiration which will be reflected by profit at his box office if he takes the lesson home with him. We are not sending out Mr. Rothapfel with an impression that the exhibitors need to be lectured to, but rather with the idea that every live exhibitor will enjoy the experience of hearing from the nation's most successful exhibitor and his methods.

"I feel that we are making an important step toward the establishment of scientific, effective business practice in the operation of motion picture theaters. It is the realization of the great value of this unusual service to the exhibitors which has led us to make the very large expenditure which will be necessary to carry out this tour.

"As an exhibitor of long and successful experience myself, I know just how thoroughly this effort of ours will be appreciated by the great body of earnest, hard-working exhibitors of the country.

"The exhibitors who are forging ahead and who will remain in the business as it continues in its wonderful progress are those who will most deeply appreciate this opportunity to get Mr. Rothapfel's message of success."

Mr. Rothapfel will be accompanied on this tour by Silas Bent, special representative of the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Bent, in addition to "covering" the Rothapfel tour, will give general publicity cooperation to Mutual branch managers in the cities visited. Mr. Bent brings to his work a long and varied experience among the nation's greatest newspapers and in publicity work for important financial interests.

LASKY COMPANY OFFERS SCHOLARSHIP TO COLUMBIA STUDENTS.

To further encourage the study of the art of photodramatics among the students of Columbia University, which announces that it has just opened a special course of lectureship on motion pictures and their making, the Lasky Feature Play Company, through its executive head, Samuel Goldfish, has offered a scholarship to the university. It has been accepted by Victor O. Freeburg, professor in charge of the new department, and the student who, in the opinion of William C. DeMille, chief of the Lasky scenario staff, writes the best original photoplay during the college term, will receive, all expenses paid, a trip from New York to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal., and return. If suitable for commercial production the play will be produced by Lasky with a star in the leading role and released through Paramount Pictures Corporation. Equitable compensation will be made to the author.

The decision of Columbia University to start a photodramatic department under the direction of Professor Freeburg is of great interest to the industry. Through the efforts of Professor George Pierce Baker of Harvard, many talented young dramatists, including Edward Sheldon, Percy Mackaye, Frederick Ballard and others, have been trained to write for the legitimate field. Mr. Goldfish in his letter says that the photoplay producers of the future will look to the colleges.

Mimi Yvonne

DAINTY, talented, lovable and beautiful little Mimi Yvonne, the seven-and-one-half-year-old little leading lady, has been added to the Lubin Stock Company.

For the past six years little Mimi has been endearing herself in the hearts of audiences of Europe and America with her appearances on the speaking stage and in moving pictures, for her first appearance behind the footlights was made on October 21, 1909, with the celebrated English actor, Martin Harvey.

Mimi Yvonne.

It was but one short year ago that Ellaine Terriss, one of England's foremost actresses, said of Mimi, "She is the most winsome and dainty little darling possible to imagine"; and with her coming to America the audiences of this country have hastened to endorse Miss Terriss' judgment.

Little Miss Yvonne made her first pronounced "hit" in motion pictures in the titular role of "The Littlest Rebel," for which performance the press of the country was unanimous in its proclamation of the youthful actress, for such she is—not merely a portrayer of the stage child, but a finished little actress, be it comedy role or the more serious.

Since her debut in motion pictures, she has earned the endorsement of such producers as Herbert Brenon, King Baggot, Daniel Frohman, William Fox and others.

Her first appearance with the Lubin Company will be in the coming production of a strong dramatic story by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, which is now being produced by Director Joseph Kaufman with Vinnie Burns in the leading role.

VITAGRAPH BALL TO BE A GALA OCCASION.

With the monster entertainment and ball of the Vitagraph Benevolent Association still two weeks off, arrangements are practically completed to provide an evening of enjoyment for the crowd of several thousand persons who have already purchased tickets and are waiting for the big event. The advance sale has been unusually large, for, in addition to the worthy charity involved, the opportunity of seeing the Vitagraph Players at close range has attracted movie fans from all over the district.

The ball will be held on the evening of Wednesday, October 27, at McLaughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, and the proceeds will be used in aid of the Hospital and Sick Fund.

The committee, headed by "Vic" Smith, studio manager, has been forced to refuse many offers by Vitagraph stars to participate in the vaudeville entertainment that will precede the dance. Out of the numerous offers, the committee has selected the best and even then that part of the evening's entertainment will occupy considerable length. There will still be time, however, for the dance contest of the players to determine once and for all the champion old-fashioned dancer of the Flatbush studio. There are many aspirants for the title and for the handsome prize which goes with it.

TRIANGLE FILM IN MOSS THEATERS.

Heretofore in the rivalry between the Loew and the Moss circuits for first run pictures the Loew people have usually won out through being enabled to offer sixty days for a picture, whereas the Moss people are limited to about twenty days. This gave Loew the advantage in the picture end of the two circuits' popular bills. B. S. Moss believes the annexation of the Triangle service to his vaudeville bills will counterbalance the condition in the future. It is reported the Moss people are paying a large price for the Triangle service on a long contract.

Triangle in New Brokaw Building

Five-Year Lease for Eleventh and Twelfth Floors Is Signed—Executive Headquarters Will Be Elaborately Equipped.

THE Triangle Film Corporation has leased for five years the eleventh and twelfth floors of the new Brokaw Building, being erected at Broadway and Forty-second street, New York, according to an announcement issued by W. M. Seligsberg, counsel for Triangle, who recently closed the deal with Brokaw Brothers. It is promised that the new quarters will be ready for occupancy about January first, when the Triangle offices will be moved from their present location in the Longacre Building.

Approximately 14,000 square feet of space will be occupied and the aggregate rental for the five-year term will reach a very large figure. The fact that the building is still under construction has enabled the builder to arrange for perfectly appointed executive headquarters. The several offices and departments will include the quarters of the executive offices, the film exchanges, several projection rooms, fireproof storage for films, an indoor motion picture studio for emergency work, a foreign department for export of films to Europe, Asia and South America, an international publicity department, ample space for a library of 25,000 pictures of players and 100,000 items of literary data, an extensive auditing and finance department and large reception rooms for the use of President Aitken and likewise of directors D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Macklyn Sennett whenever they are in town.

One of the conditions of the lease is that there shall be no other film concerns of any sort in the building. With the acquisition of these offices, the Triangle Film Corporation simultaneously becomes one of the most extensive occupiers of office theatrical space in the country. The corporation has rented large branch headquarters in seventeen of the principal cities outside of New York and controls three model theaters—the Knickerbocker in New York, the Studebaker in Chicago, and the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia. It is constructing new studio plants at Culver City and Edendale, Los Angeles, and it is believed quite likely that another new plant will soon be started on the outskirts of New York.

EVERETT BUTTERFIELD.

EVERETT BUTTERFIELD, who was especially engaged by the Edison Company to portray the artistic, temperamental Raphael de Valentine in "The Magic Skin," makes his picture debut in that production. He was obtained from the cast of "The Last Laugh" now playing at the 39th Street theater, in which he handles the leading juvenile role.

Everett Butterfield in "The Magic Skin."

Mr. Butterfield is a man of vast stage experience and lays claim to having interpreted more than seven hundred different roles. For six years he headed his own stock company in Washington, D. C., after nearly sixteen years of stock work in Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, Kansas City and Denver. During his career he has supported such stars as Amelia Bingham, Edward Morgan and Louis James.

He is remembered for his work in numerous traveling shows as well, among which are "The Man of the Hour," "Ready Money," "The Misleading Lady" and his present engagement with "The Last Laugh."

Mr. Butterfield is a man of slender physique and peculiar adaptability. His Raphael in "The Magic Skin" has given him an unusual opportunity for the display of those talents which make for tense, dramatic work.

S. B. Kramer

ONE of the "big boys" in the film industry, S. B. Kramer, who has been manager of the World Film office in Pittsburgh for some time, arrived in town last week to take charge of the Mecca branch of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. He fills the vacancy left by Manny Goldstein, who has been appointed assistant to General Manager of Exchanges M. H. Hoffman. Those who are familiar with Mr. Kramer's history agree that he is the right man in the right place. He is a real hustler.

S. B. Kramer.

Mr. Kramer started in the film business out west, about seven years ago, with the Nebraska Film Company, which later sold out to the Mutual. He was then made manager of the Omaha and Des Moines offices for the Mutual, afterward being transferred to the Kansas City office. He left the Mutual to join the United and was made manager of the Indianapolis office. The World Film Corporation tempted Mr. Kramer with a handsome offer to take charge of the Pittsburgh office. He has done excellent work in "Smoketown." When Mr. Hoffman made Mr. Goldstein his assistant, the first man that came to his mind was Mr. Kramer. He is bound to "make good" in his new position, and his many friends will be pleased to hear of his advancement.

POWELL BUYS LARGE ESTATE.

Frank Powell, director of photoplays for the Fox Film Corporation and known throughout the world as the producer of "A Fool There Was," and other noted film successes, has purchased for an unknown amount, the famous Teller Estate on Bradish avenue, Bayside Park, Bayside, Long Island. The estate includes a twelve room house and spacious grounds which are noted for their natural beauty and they will no doubt be utilized by Mr. Powell in many of the feature films he has in course of production. Mr. Powell is remodelling and furnishing the house and under his artistic direction should make his place one of the most noted in Bayside.

MOTION PICTURES IN THE SCHOOL.

The Hamilton Institute for Girls, one of the largest institutions of its kind in New York City, has installed a Power's motion picture projecting machine and once each week the lessons are impressed by visual instruction. The use of motion pictures is designed to present scenes of history, to interest the pupils so that they will ask questions with the desire to know, to stimulate intellectual curiosity and in short to make the teaching of science and history alive and of vital interest. This school also has the use of all slides prepared by the Department of Visual Instruction of the State Educational Department at Albany, N. Y.

INCE LIKES BILLIE BURKE'S PLAY.

Having completed her first photoplay at the Ince-Triangle studio in Los Angeles, Billie Burke has returned to New York to begin rehearsals of the new stage play in which she will be managed by her husband, F. Zeigfeld, Jr. Miss Burke's contribution to the Triangle plays is declared by Director Ince to be one of the best dramas he has ever produced. In a story of Scottish locale and atmosphere Miss Burke was supported by William H. Thompson and Jack Standing.

Gaumont Silences Baseless Rumors

Makes Official Announcement That All Rialto Star Features and Casino Star Comedies Are Made in America.

BASELESS rumors having gained currency that the motion pictures of the Gaumont Company released on the Mutual program are not made in America, a categorical denial has just been made by that company. Both the Rialto Star Features and the Casino Star Comedies are made by Gaumont either at Flushing, N. Y., or Jacksonville, Fla. They are distributed only by the Mutual Film Corporation. It is to be regretted that competition in the motion picture industry is on such a plane that it is necessary for the Gaumont Company to make denial of a statement so misleading that it can be made only through ignorance or malice.

"The slightest investigation would convince the most casual inquirer of the falsity of such a statement," was the remark of F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont Company, when the rumor was called to his attention. "Every Gaumont motion picture on the Mutual program is made here in America. The only reason I can conceive for such a statement having been made is that the source which has inspired it fears the competition of the Gaumont pictures. The attack is evidently concerted, since branch agents report having heard it in different parts of the country.

"Just to look at a list of Gaumont releases of Rialto Star Features and Casino Star Comedies is sufficient to convince one at a glance that the all-American program of this company is just what it purports to be. Before me I have a list of stars Gaumont has recently employed in pursuance of its policy of securing a new Broadway favorite as star in each release. The only star even with a foreign name is Fania Marinoff, who was born in Russia. As she made her debut in Denver as a child, it can be seen that all her stage experience has been in this country. She has played in 'The Man on the Box,' 'The Romance of the Underworld,' 'The House Next Door,' and was in the original New York cast of that great play, 'Within the Law.' Surely she is entitled to be called an American star. A look at the cast of her Gaumont production of 'The Unsuspected Isles' shows that she was supported by the members of the American stock company maintained by Gaumont at its Flushing, N. Y., studios.

"Who could be more American than William Roselle or W. C. Fields? Both are Gaumont stars. Fayette Perry comes from Nebraska. So does Alice Dovey. Grace Valentine was born in Ohio. Tempest and Sunshine are Kentucky girls. And yet unscrupulous persons try to convince exhibitors that these Gaumont stars are not in American productions! The cast of each Gaumont release is published in the trade papers.

"Take a few other Gaumont stars whom we are glad to feature: Francine Larrimore, who is in 'The Devil's Darling,' is now playing on Broadway. Her picture has a New York setting. Ivy Troutman secured her first theatrical experience in the west, and has appeared in support of William H. Crane and Marguerite Clark. Later she had the lead in 'A Pair of Sixes.' Cissy Fitzgerald, whom Gaumont stars in 'A Corner in Cats,' is living in her home in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn. She is a well-known Frohman star.

"Rialto Star Features are directed by Richard Garrick and William F. Haddock. Mr. Garrick was for twelve years a director of dramatic companies for Frohman, Liebler & Co., and Henry Miller. He has directed photoplays for Selig, Universal and Eclair. Mr. Haddock secured his early training as a member of the famous Castle Square theater stock company of Boston. After many engagements, he spent four years as assistant to Edward E. Rose. For the past three years he has been president of the Actors' Society of America.

"Casino Star Comedies are directed by Edwin Middleton. He spent twenty-one years in Philadelphia stock and has supported such stars as Mrs. Drew, J. B. Polk, Roland Reed and Adelaide Stanhope. He made the scenario of 'Rip Van Winkle' and directed Thomas Jefferson in the production.

"Having vouched for our directors, it would seem hardly necessary to vouch for the Americanism of such in the Gaumont companies as Henry W. Pemberton, Madge Orlamond, 'Budd' Ross, Flavia Arcaro, Charles W. Travis and Sydney Mason. Yet I am going into the matter so thoroughly, since I wish to disprove once and for all the senseless gossip that Gaumont films are not made in America.

"The trade papers are carrying the announcement of the autumn and winter program of the Gaumont Company. It certainly could not be more American. Three companies will be at work at Jacksonville, Fla., and the Flushing, N. Y., studios will house Gaumont comedy companies even while they are being rearranged and enlarged so that production for the Mutual program may be materially increased. The program is absolutely American in every detail."

Arthur Hoops Joins George Kleine

AFTER twenty-three years on the dramatic stage, during which time he was starred in many of Charles and Daniel Frohman's greatest successes, Arthur Hoops has joined the ranks of film players.

His initial appearance will be in the title role of "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way," founded on the Saturday Evening Post story by Rupert Hughes.

Arthur Hoops.

Mr. Hoops made his acquaintance with the footlights twenty-three years ago in Augustus Pitou's "Across the Potomac," one of the most sensational successes of its day. It ran for a long time at Proctor's Twenty-third Street theater and convinced Hoops that the stage was his destined sphere of action.

Arthur Hoops was the original Rupert of Hentzau, in "The Prisoner of Zenda," and his success in this led, naturally, to the leading role in its celebrated sequel, "Rupert of Hentzau." He was for eight years leading man with James K. Hackett, and for another eight years played leads for Charles and Daniel Frohman. This was followed by four years with Nat Goodwin and two years with Sol. Smith Russell. During this experience he played the original "heavy" in "The Crisis."

That famous role, Don Jose, in "Don Caesar de Bazan" was originally given to Arthur Hoops, who did more to make it a household word than any other man on the American stage.

He is remembered for his splendid work as Govain in Mr. Frohman's "Sampson" and in innumerable similar roles which came his way in his twenty-three years of active work in the American theater.

Mr. Hoops has taken up picture work with the same determination and enthusiasm that won him so much renown on the stage. He brings to it many accomplishments of an athletic nature, among which is the art of fencing. In the handling of the foils he has never met his master.

JACKIE SAUNDERS IN PATHE GOLD ROOSTER PLAY.

Jackie Saunders, who stars in the forthcoming Pathe Gold Rooster Play "The Shrine of Happiness," was an artist's model before getting into pictures. She appeared on many magazine covers done by such famous artists as Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy and Clarence Underwood. As these artists are famed for their pictures of beautiful women it may be readily seen that Miss Saunders possesses an uncommon amount of good looks. As a matter of fact it was due to a suggestion of Mr. Underwood that she first thought of her photographic possibilities. She referred the matter to the other two artists, and finding they were of the same mind with Mr. Underwood she determined to get a picture engagement.

She got one by going to a big motion picture concern and bluffing her way through, telling them she had had picture experience. Her first scene was in front of Grace Church, New York, with a mob of curious onlookers taking it all in. She nearly died from fright and went through her part in a maze but the picture came out perfect.

Miss Saunders has been with Balboa for over a year and her present contract has three years still to run—sure proof that the Balboa people like her work, and that there is a demand for pictures in which she is featured. "The Shrine of Happiness" has been paid the compliment of being sent to France to be colored, being the first five reel American production to be so treated. Truly the magazine cover girl has made good in pictures.

Morosco Makes Another Big Catch

Progressive West Coast Producer Secures Constance Collier For Screen—To Appear in Specially Written Subject.

OLIVER MOROSCO, who was responsible for the appearance in motion pictures of such stage stars as Fritzi Scheff, Blanche Ring, Cyril Maude, Lenore Ulrich, Charlotte Greenwood, Sydney Grant and others of equal fame, announces as his latest capture for the screen Constance Collier, internationally known as a dramatic artist of rare talent.

Constance Collier.

Constance Collier is one of the most important acquisitions for the films that Oliver Morosco has yet made, and that the progressive manager has been fortunate in securing this star for the screen will readily be appreciated by any one who has seen her behind the footlights. A dashing beauty of the dark type with jet black hair and eyelashes and with eyes of dark brown, Miss Collier presents a splendid screen type, and her wonderful power of emotional expression which has made her famous on both sides of the globe makes her a fine subject for the camera in the way of effective register.

Despite the fact that she is still young in years, Miss Collier has had an extensive stage career. Of English birth, she made her first public appearance in "The Silver King," with Wilson Barrett's company, at the Theater Royal, Hull. After appearing in a number of other successful productions she later rejoined Wilson Barrett, appearing with him in "The Sign of the Cross" as Ancaria. A series of notable engagements followed, after which Miss Collier was engaged to make her American debut at the Garrick theater, New York, where she appeared as Anne-Marie in "Samson" with William Gillette. Her success in this country was instantaneous.

The vehicle with which Miss Collier will make her motion picture debut is "Tongues of Men," a stage play specially written for her by Edward Childs Carpenter, author of many prominent stage and screen successes, including "Captain Courtesy."

WANTED, SCRIPTS AND AN EDITOR.

"While we have secured a number of remarkable scenarios," said Maurice Tourneur, vice-president and general manager of the new Paragon Film, Inc., "we are very much in the market for more. We do not want any more adaptations of books or plays. We want original stories of striking individuality for five-reel photodramas, written especially for the screen, and we are willing to pay good prices for them. I could use three big, original stories at once. Then I need a very capable scenario editor to whip them into practical production shape. Of course, I can do this work myself, as I have done in the past, but my duties will be so many with the new company that I will have no time for this. It is enough to keep one man very busy."

CHANGES AT EDISON STUDIO.

Along with the changes in personnel, the Edison studio itself is being considerably altered to make room for the new organization, which is now headed by L. W. McChesney, formerly stationed at Orange, N. J. New offices are being built in where formerly stood dressing rooms, the idea being to centralize each department's work for greater efficiency. Mr. McChesney has transferred several of his office staff at Orange to the studio. R. H. Webber, who was formerly an aid to Mr. McChesney at the Orange headquarters, now occupies the position formerly held by Miss Bannon. John Gill is also now stationed in the Bedford Park studio, which promises to become the headquarters for the Edison motion picture division.

Newspictures for Paramount

Will be a Weekly Symposium of Pictured Happenings of Note.

"PARAMOUNT Newspictures" is the name of the celluloid newspaper which will "make its initial appearance on the Paramount program November 8. Sponsored by the Paramount Pictures Corporation and carrying with them the prestige which that statement implies, they will be booked through Paramount Exchanges in the best theatres throughout the country which realize the value of the slogan "See What You Read."

Every week one thousand feet of film taken by experts with a new idea in mind will tell a vast public what is going on in the world in a way best calculated to arrest their attention and hold it.

This Paramount Weekly, according to the plans and specifications of the Paramount Corporation and Walter E. Greene, who is in immediate charge of the venture, will contain many unique features.

Some of the features about which more detailed information will be made public later have never before been seen on the screen. The subjects will be culled from the best the world affords.

GOLDBURG FORMS NEW COMPANY.

Representing a group of capitalists, John L. Dudley, actively associated with various large corporations in New York, together with Jesse J. Goldburg, formerly secretary and general manager of the Life Photo Film Corporation, have organized for the purpose of producing feature photo plays.

The first release of the combination is in active preparation and will be completed within the course of the next four weeks. The organization, when completed, will release one picture a week. Directors and a general staff will engage in active production work immediately upon the completion of the first picture.

George DeCarlton, who has directed some of the most successful photo plays released, and up to a month past was associated with one of the largest picture concerns in the country, has been engaged as assistant to the general manager and supervisor of production. Joseph Smiley, for the past three years leading director with Lubin, has been engaged as director for the initial production. The cast, which was selected after a weeding out process of three weeks, among others, includes Percy Standing, Miss Lucy Cotton and Jack Hopkins.

The temporary quarters of the organization, pending incorporation, are at 126 West 46th street, New York City. The entire cast has left for Jacksonville, Fla., for the exterior scenes of its initial production.

CISSIE FITZGERALD IN KLEINE COMEDY COMPANY.

Cissie Fitzgerald, easily one of the best known comediennes the American theater has known, is the latest recruit of a small army of fun-makers now engaged in the laugh-making business at the Kleine studios.

The film industry has seen no more ambitious undertaking than this; the aggregation of a list of stage comedians whose names are almost household words in this country. The company is headed by Bickel and Watson, the invariable laughing hit of all vaudeville programs of which they have been a part, and the two artists who did so much to add to the gayety of nations in the early Ziegfeld "Follies" Shows. In addition to Cissie Fitzgerald they are supported by Crimmons and Gore, long known to the American public; Snitz Edwards, one hundred-pound star of the "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" and "The Silver Slipper," Maxfield Moree and Florence Morrison, whose amplitude (three hundred pounds) acts as an excellent foil for the diminutive Edwards.

Cissie Fitzgerald needs no introduction. Her name is synonymous with the phrase "the girl with the naughty wink" which she popularized.

LIKES WORLD EDITORIALS.

O. A. Brady, a traveler for the Pathe Exchange, is trying to impress the exhibitors with the value of the editorial department of The Moving Picture World. He says that these departments, especially the two or three pages in the front of the magazine, create material which is vitally important to the exhibitor, and should be read and studied. He has been carrying here and there the clipping of the pages bearing the editorial "Cause and Effect," and urging the moving picture men to read it. He backs up the ideas expressed there with further statements all his own.

Anita King Reaches New York

Paramount Girl, After Covering 5,321 Miles in Lonely Automobile Ride from San Francisco, Gets Hearty Greeting.

AFTER a trip of 5,321 miles, which contained many hardships, Anita King, "the Paramount Girl," reached New York on the morning of October 18. She had left the big Imperial theater, on Market street, in San Francisco, with a send-off to be remembered, at 10.30 o'clock in the evening of September 1. She arrived at the One Hundred and Thirtieth street ferry at 10 o'clock and was greeted with the salute of the horns of 150 machines. Her tour through the city streets, escorted by a four-horse tallyho and ten machines, was a continual ovation. Every policeman on Fifth avenue recognized the plucky young woman and saluted her. While the clock on Miss King's tag-covered automobile registered 5,321 miles as her car pulled in in front of the City Hall this took no account of the 500 miles she had covered between Los Angeles and San Francisco just prior to her start.

Anita King.

Miss King was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Knickerbocker Hotel in the afternoon. Present were the heads of the Paramount and Lasky companies, as well as many automobile men. The comely Lasky player showed no physical evidence of the strain under which she had lived for nearly two months. At the close of the luncheon Miss King was called on for a talk. With a trace of a tremor in her voice, the natural result of the reaction of the successful completion of her wonderful drive, the player told incidents of her journey. It was a simple tale, and dramatic by reason of its simplicity and its modesty. The speaker seemed under the impression she had had smooth sailing, but to the men listening to her story of battles with bad roads, with mud and rain and cold, with deserts and mountains, and even with the Lincoln Highway there was no question as to her achievement.

In beginning Miss King said she was very happy to be in New York—and she looked it. She said she had in the course of her trip met some hard-looking characters, but that she had been the recipient of nothing but courtesy at the hand of every one. She told an incident of a ride down the mountain into Reno. She spoke of the glories of the view in the hills of a late afternoon and of her meeting with a man of ominous aspect. He had asked her where she was going and she replied down the mountain.

"Wherever you go take me with you," suggested the stranger.

"That I can't do," was the answer. "I have got to go alone or I'll lose my job."

When the stranger learned she was traveling to Reno he told her there were eighteen miles yet to go and that in the intervening forty-two snowsheds she would encounter many tramps. "Have you no friend?" he inquired.

"I showed him my gun," said Miss King. "'That is the only friend I have,' I told him.

"'Say, girlie, you have lots of friends, but you don't know it. Gee, but it must be hard for a girl to be hungry,' he replied.

"I gave him a flag and a drink of whiskey from a bottle that had been given me on the start for use in an emergency and suggested that he take the freight down to Reno and call at the theater that night where I was to appear. That same evening just as I was entering Dale Hurst's Grand theater the same man handed me a bouquet. You know, what was most pathetic of all it was just such a combination as a schoolboy would give to a girl. There were flowers of the mountains, one of each kind and one of each color. It was one of the happiest incidents of the trip."

Miss King told of her anxiety in getting across one of the deserts without being lost and naturally doing just that thing. "In one direction there were as far as the eye could see little piles of sagebrush. To the side there were rows of great big rocks. The car got stalled and from 9.30 in the morning to 7 at night, I worked to get free. I took my shovel and dug; I got down into the mire and worked with my hands to clear the wheels. I piled in sagebrush and finally got started. I had not gone fifty feet before I was in another mud hole. It looked like my first night on the desert alone. The heat of the sun had been fierce; my hands were torn and my arms ached. I guess I may have been hysterical. I took a piece of paper and wrote a note to the effect that the Paramount Girl was having trouble and with my gun walked back two and a half miles to a cross path and put the note conspicuously on a rock.

"When I got back to the machine there stood a great coyote with a wonderful bushy tail. He just stood there looking at me. I spoke to him as I often speak to animals—I guess I had been talking to myself all day, 'Well, don't you see I am having trouble enough; now what do you want?' There was only one thing to do and I shot and killed him. Then I either fainted or went to sleep. The report of the gun had been heard. Some men investigated and found me. They built a sagebrush fire and helped me out. For three days and nights I drove without stopping. I did not have my clothes off for four days and three nights.

"I encountered one stretch of rain that continued for twenty-seven days. In Evanston, Wyoming, I was halted. I was told if necessary I would be restrained by force—that the roads were impassable. I got away, however, the next morning—and in ten and a half hours made twenty-one miles. It was mud, mud, mud. While some of you gentlemen may be sorry to hear it I must tell you the Lincoln Highway is in terrible condition.

"My receptions all along the line have been wonderful. Every one has been very kind to me. I want to tell you I am very proud to be the Paramount Girl and I have been very anxious to show what she could do."

Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky company, was the next speaker. "Miss King is a member of the Lasky stock company at Los Angeles," he said. "We have received over thirty-five hundred telegrams from exhibitors and others saying they wanted to see Miss King starred in a picture. Now just as soon as Miss King returns to the studio she will be starred in a production which will be called 'The Paramount Girl.' Some of her receptions in the cities she has visited en route from San Francisco to New York will serve as backgrounds. We are proud of Miss King."

Some of the automobile men asked questions of the player as to tire troubles. Miss King said that in one tire there was nothing but Los Angeles air and that in another tire the air from the picture city had lasted until within seven miles of New York. She said she had been very fortunate with her tires, although she had been prepared for trouble. There had been no blowouts and only two punctures.

In the course of her trip Miss King has visited nearly 100 Paramount theaters. President Hodkinson of the Paramount company said the traveler would visit the Paramount theaters in the metropolitan district before returning to the Pacific Coast. She appeared at the Broadway theater on Tuesday night. In her talks in the theaters she had spread the gospel of clean pictures and had made it a point to insist that it was for these that the Paramount stood.

EDISON COMPANY IN DETROIT.

Fred Abbott, director of commercial films, Edison, is in Detroit, with a party of Edison players working on a sociological film for the Ford Motor Company. The picture is to be educational in that it will show how the Ford organization takes the raw ignorant foreigner and, through their settlement and allied institutions, makes him over into a highly desirable citizen. The film, written by Director Abbott, will be in two reels. The players are Gladys Leslie, William Fables, Charles McGee, William Casey, Jean Dumar, Arnold Friscoe, and John Beauman, cameraman. The Edison company also makes weekly a short length of film on current events which the Ford Company distributes free to the exhibitor through the organizations branch offices.

R. A. BABBITT, WASHINGTON, D. C., MANAGER.

R. A. Babbitt, manager of the Washington theater and Park, Washington, D. C., was a caller at the Moving Picture World office last week. He reports good business among exhibitors at the nation's capital and expressed the belief that the feature picture was the great saver of the motion picture exhibitor at this time.

Modern Theater Construction*

Heating and Ventilating.

By Edward Barnard Kinsila.

THESE two subjects are so intimately related and so interdependent, one upon the other, that it is difficult to separate them. We shall treat them separately.

Heat is not a substance. It is a condition. All matter is wholly composed of molecules. These molecules are restless beings and are constantly on the move. Heat is the motion set up among these molecules. If the motion be slow the resultant condition is cold, and as the vibration increases rapid warmth ensues.

The demand for artificial heat depends largely upon climatic conditions and the customs of the people. In Europe 59° Fahrenheit is considered comfortable, in America the practice is to maintain about 70°.

The natural tendency of heat is to pass away from the heated body with equal energy in all directions. Heat may be transmitted by radiation, conduction or convection. Radiation is the free passage of heat from a heated body. When the transmission of heat through any certain substance requires a measurable length of time it is called "conduction." If there be any difference in the condition of the various layers of a body in weight, electric tension or chemical condition, heat will move about until all the particles have acquired the same condition. The minute motion of each particle is known as "convection," and the mass movement is termed "circulation." Therefore the primary difference between the three methods is the degree of rapidity. Radiated heat is instantaneous, but its effect is to intensely heat a person on the side towards the source of heat, while convected heat warms the air uniformly.

All known materials more or less retard the transmission of heat. The intensity of the heat transmitted is inversely proportional to the square of the distance from its source. Thus the heat that is received upon a surface one foot square at a distance of five feet if distributed to cover a space of twice that width and height, having four times the area at a distance of ten feet, and heat spread over four times as much surface can have only one-fourth the intensity. Heat may be reflected, dispersed or concentrated by means of mirrors or lenses in the same manner as light. The best reflector of heat is silver leaf.

Nearly all bodies expand when heated; only a few contract. Air, gas and water expand to a considerable degree. The reason of this expansion is that the tiny molecules of a body when heated begin to move more rapidly and in longer paths, and therefore require more room. The more the body is heated the farther apart the molecules are driven, thus increasing their volume.

Methods of Heating.

The methods of heating now in vogue may be divided into two classes, direct radiation and indirect radiation.

The general requirements of a heating and ventilating plant for a theater are:

(1) Uniform distribution of heat.

(2) A thorough diffusion of fresh air throughout the zone in which persons breathe.

(3) A prompt removal of all foul air.

(4) Preventing waste of heat by premature escape.

(5) A means of avoiding perceptible currents or drafts of either warm or cold air.

Heating Apparatus.

There are several means of producing heat: by hot air, steam or hot water. Heating by hot air requires a special furnace, is difficult to regulate, and not sufficiently reliable for theaters. Heating by hot water, while it costs more to install because of the increased amount of fittings, is a trifle cheaper to operate, but hot water heating is also not suitable for theaters, aside from its liability to freeze in cold weather.

The following table of the relative cost of each system may aid us in our process of elimination.

| | Hot Air | Steam | Hot Water |
|---|---|---|---|
| Relative cost of apparatus | 9 | 13 | 15 |
| Relative cost of operation for 5 yrs. | 29¾ | 29 | 27 |

It would thus seem that steam is the best system to meet the requirements enumerated above. Its principal advantage is its ability to heat uniformly regardless of wind action. It is also comparatively immune from freezing.

Of steam heating there are two methods, gravity or low pressure, and non-gravity or high pressure.

The gravity method is subdivided into four forms, direct radiation, indirect radiation, direct-indirect radiation and the Paul system.

The non-gravity method is subdivided into three forms, gravity circulation with return trap or pump, the Webster system, and the hot blast system.

For simple heating direct radiation is instantaneous and cheapest. It also lends itself to combination with other systems by means which we shall consider later.

Amount of Heat Required.

Our first duty will be to ascertain the amount of heat required to heat the building.

To find the square feet of direct radiation required divide the cubic contents of the room by the following factors:

| | Divide by |
|---|---|
| Dressing rooms, one side exposed | 40 to 50 |
| Dressing rooms, two sides exposed | 30 to 40 |
| Auditorium | 60 to 100 |

If there be windows, openings or other exposures employ the lower divisor.

The heat should be considerably lessened or turned off in all auditoriums after the audience is seated, except where mechanical provision be made for exhausting heated foul air.

Production of Heat.

Steam heating plants are divided into three distinct parts; the boiler or steam generator, the radiators and the supply and return pipes connecting the two.

There are many varieties of three distinct types of boilers, the horizontal tubular boiler, the fire box boiler and the cast iron sectional boiler.

Horizontal tubular boilers are largely used for factories and power plants. The best for a large or medium-sized theater is the firebox boiler. It is the cheapest and requires no brick setting. For small houses the cheaper cast-iron sectional boiler answers best.

For setting the boiler see the diagram showing the ventilation of the theater. The following table made by the Atlas Engineering Works, Indianapolis, Ind., may aid in the selection of the size boiler required:

Proportions of Horizontal Tubular Boilers.

| SHELL | | | THICKNESS | | TUBES | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Nom. Rated H.P. | Diam. Inc. | Length Feet | Shell Inc. | Heads Inc. | No. | Diam. Inc. | Length Feet | Heat. Surf. Sq. Ft. | Grate Surf. Sq. Ft. |
| 15 | 36 | 8 | ¼ | ⅜ | 26 | 3 | 8 | 214 | 5.8 |
| 20 | 36 | 10 | ¼ | ⅜ | 26 | 3 | 10 | 266 | 8.3 |
| 25 | 36 | 12 | ¼ | ⅜ | 26 | 3 | 12 | 318 | 9.5 |
| 30 | 40 | 12 | ¼ | ⅜ | 34 | 3 | 12 | 404 | .12 |

| 70 | 54 | 16 | 5-16 | ½ | 40 | 4 | 16 | 817 | 20.8 |
| 75 | 60 | 14 | 11-32 | ½ | 62 | 3½ | 14 | 940 | 21.5 |
| 85 | 60 | 16 | 11-32 | ½ | 52 | 4 | 16 | 1045 | 22.2 |
| 100 | 66 | 16 | ⅜ | ½ | 64 | 4 | 16 | 1265 | 25. |
| 125 | 72 | 16 | 7-16 | ½ | 82 | 4 | 16 | 1578 | 29.5 |
| 150 | 72 | 18 | 7-16 | ½ | 82 | 4 | 18 | 1775 | 36.5 |

Size and location of boiler pit and other minor details may be left to the discretion of the heating contractor.

The Chimney.

A necessary adjunct to the boiler will be the chimney, required for two purposes; to produce the draught necessary for the proper combustion of fuel, and to furnish a means of discharging the noxious products of combustion sufficiently high in the air.

To produce an effective draught requires size and height of chimney. A round chimney is better than square, and a straight flue better than tapering.

Most chimneys are built of brick and lined with special chimney flues. In constructing a chimney of four feet in diameter or more it is cheaper and better to build circular with a straight batter on the outside. Chimneys of any height are not built up of uniform height from top to bottom, nor with a uniformly varying thickness of wall. Instead, the wall, heaviest at the base, is reduced by a series of steps.

---

*Copyright, 1915, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

Large chimneys are built with an outer stack and an inner stack or core, independent of the outer stack. Many engineers only extend the inside core to a height of forty or fifty feet.

The flue should be ample in size and carried from a point three or four feet below the boiler smoke pipe entrance, and be provided with a clean-out door at the base for the removal of dust and soot.

The size of flue required may be calculated from the following table:

| Total contents of building in cu. ft. | Aver. of Direct radiation in sq. ft. | Size of flues in sq. ft. | Diam. of round flues | Brick flues (inside) |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 10,000 to 20,000 | 200 to 400 | 8½ x 8½ | 8 | 8 x 8 |
| 25,000 to 50,000 | 450 to 900 | 8½ x 13 | 10 | 8 x 12 |
| 60,000 to 100,000 | 1,000 to 1,600 | 13 x 13 | 12 | 12 x 12 |
| 100,000 to 150,000 | 1,600 to 3,000 | 18 x 18 | 16 | 16 x 16 |

Fuel.

The value of fuel is the number of heat units that its combustion generates. Hydrogen and petroleum, with blast, produce 19.90 heat units with a theoretical supply of air at 60° and gas at 320°.

Anthracite coal, when not freely mixed ash produces 14.70; semi-bituminous coal, 13.70; and soft coal, 12 to 13. Slack, the screenings from coal, when properly mixed with anthracite or bituminous coal, and burned by means of a grate blower adapted to it, is nearly equal in value of combustion, to regular coal, but its percentage of refuse is greater.

It may be safely assumed that the temperature of the fire is nearly the same for all kinds of combustibles under like conditions.

Direct Steam Heating.

We shall first deal with steam by direct radiation with a two pipe gravity system. In this system steam flows from the boiler through risers, and is conveyed to the radiators through suitable branches. These branches are to convey steam from the boiler to the radiator, and are nearly horizontal, except where the radiator is a considerable distance from the riser, when it is so inclined that the condensation water within it will flow toward the radiator, at which point it is connected by a small relief pipe to the return pipe to prevent the water from entering the radiator. The smaller branch is the return pipe, through which all condensation water is returned to the boiler, and is so inclined that all water will flow by gravity to the boiler to be again converted into steam.

A single pipe system utilizing one pipe for steam and return may be cheaper to install, but it has the disadvantage of liability to sudden stoppage because of steam and water flowing through the same pipe in opposite directions.

Widely advertised exhaust and vacuum systems embody the utilization of waste steam, and are rather expensive as they entail the necessity of installing patented apparatus for their purpose.

The gravity system described above will require pipe-coils, radiators with piping and connections for the steam mains and returns. Where piping is employed genuine wrought iron pipe is the best, Byers or Reading wrought iron pipe being the standard. There are scores of good connections, still valveless connections are to be recommended.

Most radiators are made of cast-iron. The double column radiators offer the most exposed heating surface. A light pressed steel radiator at about the same cost as cast-iron radiators, with a smooth surface and more heating space between the columns, offering greater heating surface between the coils and permitting them to be more easily cleaned, has recently met with sudden success on the market. Because of their light weight the pressed steel radiators may be readily fastened to the walls and decorated in a sightly manner.

Natural Ventilation.

Perfect ventilation consists in supplying an adequate amount of fresh air warmed or cooled to a comfortable temperature in such a manner that the circulation shall be constant and thorough in all parts of the room without the creation of draughts. The primary object is the removal of vitiated air. This may be done by natural or mechanical means.

Even in the case of heating by direct radiation described above, where no air is purposely supplied for ventilation, there will be a change of air in the room practically equal to one to three changes in the cubic contents per hour. The amount required for a theater is from 1,500 to 2,000 cu. ft. per person per hour.

Theater buildings containing one large audience room may be fairly well ventilated by using a heavy galvanized iron smoke flue set in the center of a large brick chimney, as indicated on the large diagram, utilizing the space around the flue for ventilation. The heat that escapes from the flue will cause a good draught, and without additional cost.

Plenum System.

The establishment of a separate plenum chamber whenever convenient, either at the top of the auditoriums or in the basement underneath as shown on the special diagram, where air may be properly heated, cooled or conditioned, before it is introduced into the auditorium, is decidedly the best arrangement for theaters. It is doubtful if there is a theater in this country employing this highly essential modern system. This entails a modification of the direct radiation system, and a combination with other systems, all of which provide heating and ventilation simultaneously. It also permits the air in summer time to be washed free of dust, dried or moistened, before being cooled and blown into the auditorium by cheaply contrived devices designed for that purpose.

In such a system the air for warming or cooling is drawn from the outer air through a fresh air inlet, composed of a heavy wire netting with louvres or shutters that may be closed with a damper, proportional in size to that of the fan and the capacity of the theater, through a dry screen air filter, and over specially designed radiators, or heating coils, or an ordinary icebox, to a large blower, where it is forced by a paddle wheel fan into galvanized iron ducts that lead to the auditorium.

Air Filter.

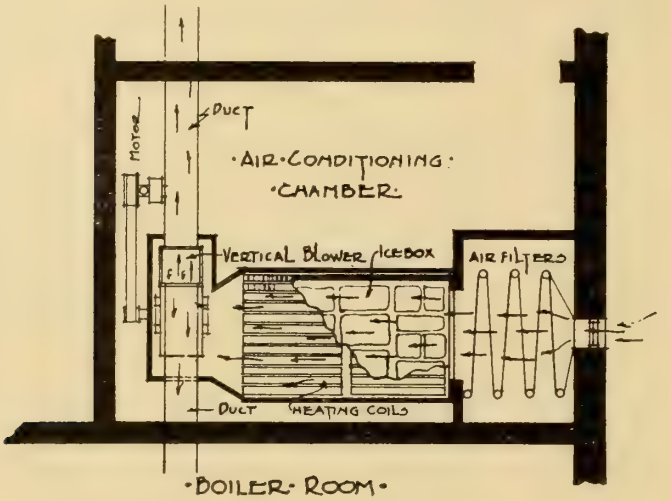
The air filter to arrest smoke and dust is made by placing two lines of circular wood uprights, spaced one foot apart, and the lines three feet apart as indicated on the diagram. Secure these uprights to the floor and ceiling, and fasten to them continuous stretched chicken wire netting having a two-inch mesh, its purpose being to support other screens made of cheese cloth, so as to filter all matter escaping through the outer screen of the inlet.



Filter Diagram.

Make the cloth filters in the form of continuous wide cheese cloth strips, and tack them to the round posts over the permanent wire netting, so that they will lay tightly against the wire netting. The total area of filtering space thus exposed should be eight or ten times the sectional area of the inlet. The cloth filter sheets must be removed at intervals for cleansing and be thoroughly dried before being replaced.

When the air is filtered, it is passed over a home-made zinc-lined icebox filled with cakes of ice, or in the winter by a damper arrangement over the radiators or heating coils. A heater coil is usually made up of sections so that steam may be admitted to, or shut off from, any section independently of the others, the temperature being regulated in this manner. Sometimes a pass-by damper is attached, so that part of the air will pass through the heater and part around or over it, in order to regulate the proportions of cold and heated air, and thus give the desired temperature.

If the air is to be humidified, have the heating contractor attach a long shallow open cast-iron dish or receptacle on top of a heater pipe, filled with water, which will moisten the air by evaporation.

After the air is properly conditioned, it is blown by the paddlewheel fan through galvanized iron ducts into the auditorium. The air enters the auditorium through tiny outlets, as shown on the diagram and circulates toward the stage, where it encounters the cooler air supplied for the stage by direct radiation, then curves upwards, as indicated by the small arrows, and escapes through the outlets. The air pockets formed underneath the balconies are relieved by small outlets placed there for that purpose.

Care should be taken with this system to keep the temperature of the air upon the stage below that of the heated air introduced into the auditorium, so as to form a cooler air blanket upon the stage to prevent the mixture of heated air on the stage and in the auditorium. To secure perfect ventilation, the air of the auditorium must curve back from the stage and escape by its own outlets, as indicated on the diagram. A liberal distribution of mushroom floor vents will prevent appreciable drafts on the main floor, while vents in the balcony risers will effect the same purpose in that section.

PALLAS PICTURES SECURE WILLIAM D. TAYLOR.

William D. Taylor, whose "Captain Alvarez" was one of the biggest film hits ever scored on Broadway, and who before that filled important engagements with Charles Hawtrey, Fanny Davenport, Sol Smith Russell, Katherine Kidder and other important producers and productions, has been engaged as a director by Pallas Pictures.

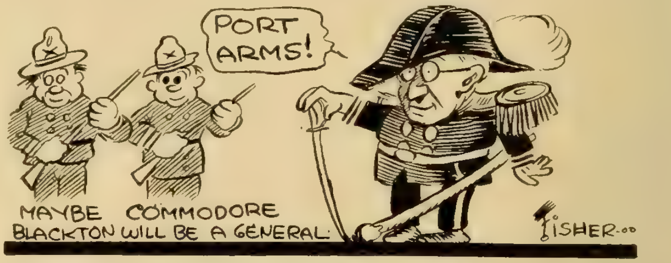
IF HENRY FORD who has given ten million little iron men for peace at any price should take a day off and see Commodore Blackton's "The Battle Cry of Peace" he might come away impressed if not convinced that the Commodore has put up a dramatically strong argument for preparedness. We predict that "The Battle Cry of Peace" will have more influence than H. F.'s millions.



MAYBE COMMODORE BLACKTON WILL BE A GENERAL.

Commodore Blackton is also interested in the movement for a citizen's military camp at Ft. Hamilton where civilians will receive military instruction. He intends to boost the movement through the medium of the screen by inviting young men to become recruits. Maybe the Commodore will relinquish the navy and become a colonel or general or something.

Julian Solomon of Bosworth, Inc., certainly is a man of fashion independence. Julian is going to wear his straw hat and sport shirt through the winter, he says. It will be difficult for him to prove to the big officer at Forty-second and Broadway that it's something besides independence.

Albert Payson Terhune, one of the most prolific of present day fiction writers, has become affected with writer's cramp signing releases of the dramatic rights of his stories—for money. "Terry" gets up in the morning and as an appetizer writes a story before breakfast and two or three four-thousand word stories after dinner. Before retiring he reads several good books and a couple of magazines, fiddles around a while and then goes to sleep. "Terry" will soon have as fine a library of bank books as any collector in the country.

NEW STRAND THEATRE OPENS IN CHICAGO.

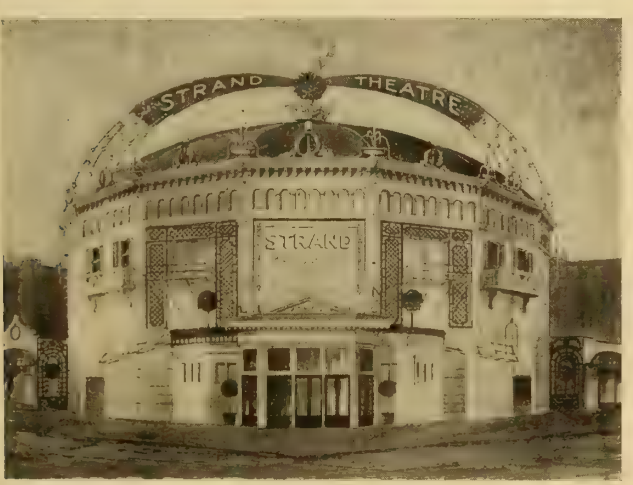
Quaint Old Globe Theater Transformed Into a Most Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

FRIDAY night, Oct. 15th, witnessed the dedication of the New Strand theater, at Wabash Ave. and Seventh St., with a fine exhibition of Lasky's "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar. It proved to be one of the most auspicious and significant "openings" Chicago has yet seen. It means that Chicago's "down-town" has at last a playhouse permanently devoted to moving pictures, which is in every way worthy of being classed in the first rank of theaters in quality of entertainment and general policy of management.

The history of the Strand Theater Co. dates back about six months. It was organized in April, the officers being E. C. Divine, president; Joseph S. Inderreiden, vice-president; A. J. Pardridge, treasurer, and E. Q. Cordner, secretary. Orchestra Hall, on Michigan Ave., was leased by this combine for a short time, where they gave their first showing of their own conception of the proper presentation of moving pictures, early last May.

From the beginning their aim was to furnish the public with the best pictures, provide the best music obtainable, and offer a diversified program which would have a general appeal. And from the beginning they have been successful. Faithfully adhering to their motto—"Built up to a standard, not down to a price"—they have created a large following of Chicago's picture-theatre-goers, who will, no doubt, find their way to the new home of the Strand, although it is somewhat out of the beaten path.

Many will remember the quaint old Globe theater that has stood since the early 90's at Wabash avenue and Seventh street (then Hubbard court). After an interesting career of everything imaginable in the amusement world, it is now the new home of the Strand theater; but those who remember it from the early days, would find it difficult to recognize it now. Aside from the wells and foundation, it has been completely transformed. Practically an entire new playhouse may be seen.



Strand Theater, Chicago.

Every square foot of flooring is new, every row of seats bears the Strand monogram in its iron structure, a new steel curtain, a new stage and a new stage setting which alone cost several thousand dollars, a new system of indirect lighting, a new ventilating plant. All these things have been installed. Even the exterior of the building has been freshened by the painters' brush, and at night spectacular illuminations play above the entrance. Over the roof sweeps a cornet of lights; interwoven is the name, "Strand Theater," in huge letters. The accompanying photograph gives an idea of the outside appearance.

The interior decorating of the house is the accomplishment of artists of New York and Chicago, and represents an expenditure of about $75,000. The stage setting—a "Roman Garden"—is by the Lee Lash studios, of New York.

The opening program, in addition to "Carmen," consisted of solos by Burton Thatcher and Naomi Nazor, a Pathe scenic, the regular Strand Topics of the Day, and a single reel comedy, with the accompaniment of the famous Strand Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Dunham. Although the initial New Strand performance was not an invitation affair, society responded liberally to the ad announcements. Many prominent Chicagoans were present and were to be seen later at their respective supper parties at the Blackstone Hotel.

The members of the Strand Theater Co. are, indeed, to be congratulated on this, their latest endeavor in photoplay presentation. Chicago is proud of it.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" Comes to Chicago.

Vitagraph's patriotic spectacle, "The Battle Cry of Peace," headed by J. Stuart Blackton, came to Chicago in all its splendor, Sunday evening, Oct. 17, and was royally welcomed by the "first nighters," who packed the Olympic theater.

Captain Jack Crawford, a veteran of the Civil War, appeared during the intermission and spoke in behalf of Mr. Blackton's mission. After a few brief remarks, he gave the floor to Commodore Blackton, who was introduced by Health Commissioner Robertson. Mr. Blackton drew the heartiest applause of the evening, when in a stirring speech he said, among other things:

"Any foreign-born American who is offended by this picture has no right in this country at any time." "The purpose of this picture," he asserted, "is to make people think—to realize that preparedness cannot be half-hearted. Either preparation should be adequate, or disarmament should be complete. To prepare half-hearted is like saying, 'God Bless You.'" "The only way to spell peace," he said, "is the new phonetic way, P-O-W-E-R."

The picture then proceeded on the screen, and the spectators made known their apparent appreciation by bursting forth with applause at different intervals. A splendid orchestra with the necessary "effects" aided materially in making the affair delightful.

The subject has a promising outlook for a successful run at the Olympic for some time to come.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Last week seemed to have been picked for "grand openings" in this city. Following close on the heels of the opening of the Strand, Alfred Hamburger opened the doors of his new Albany Park house to the public. The Albany Park is located at Lawrence and Kedzie avenues, and has a seating capacity of 1,000.

The new Band Box theater, the latest "Loop" acquisition, located on Madison street, near La Salle, was officially opened and ready for business on Sunday, Oct. 17. Essanay's "In the Palace of the King" was featured by the management on that day, at 25 and 50 cents admission. The Band Box is making a strong appeal for the better class of patronage and is sparing no expense in supplying for the comfort of its patrons and in furnishing a first class program.

John A. Barry, closely associated with D. W. Griffith, and recently engaged in the distribution of "The Birth of a Nation" throughout the country, arrived in this city from the East a few days ago, accompanied by J. W. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Corporation. Mr. Barry has been recalled to assist in the production of "Mother and the Law," now being produced in California under the supervision of Mr. Griffith. While in the East, Mr. Barry engaged ten touring companies to present "The Birth of a Nation" on the road.

Burton Holmes began his lecture season of 1915-16 in this city, at Orchestra Hall, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 13. Mr. Holmes' subject this season is the United States. The beginning lecture was "Florida." The others in the course are "Down in Dixie," "The Grand Canyon," "The Pacific Exposition" and "California" with an extra lecture on "From the Potomac to the Yellowstone." Orchestra Hall was crowded to its capacity on the opening night, and Mr. Holmes was received with genuine enthusiasm when he stepped out on the stage to greet his many followers.

The California theater, at 26th street and Trumbull avenue, this city, has recently been renovated and re-decorated throughout. Two motor driven Simplex machines, a Northwestern rotary convertor, and a new Mirroroide screen were installed. F. H. Franke, the owner, called at the World office one day last week and reported an increase in business. The California uses General Film service and special features, and has a seating capacity of 800. The admission price is 5 and 10 cents.

Five officials of moving picture operators' schools which prepare applicants to pass the city examination for moving picture operators, have been summoned to answer charges of perjury from evidence gathered by City Prosecutor Harry B. Miller. "The law provides," said Mr. Miller, "that an applicant for a moving picture operator's license must have been an apprentice in this city for one year, or must have been an actual operator in some other city for six months. I find that certain schools have accepted students with a promise that, after graduation, they will be furnished with a letter from some distant town stating that they have operated machines there for six months. We have investigated several letters, and find that in one case there was no moving picture house in the town by the name mentioned in the letter."
